Mr. McKelvey: You may have misheard my opening remarks, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I said that an incoming Labour Government will redress the failure of the previous Labour Government—a failure of socialism which we admit. I shall go on to explain what redress there will be and how it will affect Scotland.

Mr. Jacques Arnold: While the hon. Gentleman is on the subject of socialism and a Scottish assembly, will he tell the House what the impact on the people of Scotland would be in terms of extra taxation? What extra rate of tax will the Scottish people have to pay for that luxury?

Mr. McKelvey: I know that the hon. Gentleman takes a keen interest in Scottish affairs and is anxious to hear what I have to say. I have spoken for only two minutes on how the Scottish people will feel on the subject. If the hon. Gentleman has the patience and I have the time, I shall try to explain to him what he wants to know.

As I said, Scotland is a nation full of contradictions. We are the world's fifth largest producer of oil—one of the most precious natural resources—and we are a world leader in offshore technology. Scotland has huge coal reserves and a long history of engineering, which has now been adapted to the frontiers of high technology. It has a tradition of education and training with the potential to match the best in the world. We produce high-quality knitwear, textiles, lace, whisky and much else. In a world in which leisure time is growing, Scotland is one of Europe's leading attractions for tourism, recreation and cultural pursuits.

Hearing all that—it has to be acknowledged as fact—one would think that we were a most fortunate and well-endowed nation. But the majority of Scots have no share in all that wealth and potential wealth.

The hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield made no mention of the difficulties facing the Scottish people. He said that the Prime Minister had refused to sign the social charter because it would create more unemployment. That baffles me. I have some charts here which show average male earnings from 1980 to 1991. Taking the United Kingdom average as 100 per cent., in 1980 people in Scotland earned 99 per cent. of the average wage paid throughout the whole country. The Scots now earn 90 per cent. of the average United Kingdom wage, yet unemployment is higher in Scotland than it is south of the border. How is it that, although we work for under the rate paid elsewhere, our unemployment continues to rise and is higher than that in the rest of the country? On a parallel graph, if we reduced our wages further, it would mean still higher unemployment. Perhaps the Minister will explain to me why, although we work for lower wages, we have more unemployment. Our economy fails to provide employment for half a million people. So much for the Valhalla that the hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield portrayed.

One million Scots are now on or below the poverty line and nearly another million are on the margins of poverty. Yet the Scottish people have the rights that the hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield outlined. It seems that we have the right of equality only to be unequal.

For the past three decades, Scotland has persistently voted socialist, and there are now only nine Scottish Conservative Members. Not one of them is here today —nor is any Scottish Minister present, although one should perhaps have been here to answer the debate that might have followed this one had there been time. Of a total of 72 Scottish Members, only nine are Conservatives. No one could even begin to misunderstand, therefore, how Scotland feels. Conservative Members wax eloquent about responsibilities and say that they do not want to impose their wishes on others—which they say is what the socialist creed entails. The situation does not augur well for those hon. Members representing constituencies south of the border who marched through the Lobbies to impose that unwanted, obnoxious, unworkable tax—the poll tax—on the people of Scotland a year before it was introduced here. As a matter of fact, it could have been argued in the courts that that process was unconstitutional.

Mr. Norris: As we are talking about one national group imposing its will on another, does the hon. Gentleman agree that it was Scottish Labour voters who imposed the last Labour Government on the people of England and Wales—with disastrous consequences? The hon. Gentleman will confirm that; it is undoubtedly a fact.

Will he also tell the House how many Members he would propose to send to Westminster when his proposed new Scottish assembly is set up?

Mr. McKelvey: I can tell the hon. Gentleman that if the people of Scotland or their representatives could impose their will on the whole United Kingdom, the country would be in a much better state. There would be much less poverty, and wealth would be shared far more fairly. The wealthy have grown wealthy on the backs of the poor and the poor are a much bigger group than they were 13 years ago.

On the hon. Gentleman's second point, let us first set up our Scottish Parliament. The argument as to how many representatives we send to Westminster will then be a Westminster problem, not a West Lothian problem.

One in four of our young people leaves school at 16 with no qualifications and scant hope for the future, and hundreds of thousands are homeless. Conservative Members refer to the great repair job that has been done on our great cities and to the advancement and enhancement of London. One has only to walk along the road from here to Victoria station of an evening to see the results of 13 years of Conservatism. In shop doorways from here to Victoria there are cardboard boxes containing human beings. That is not the kind of enhancement of a city centre for which my people, my family or I would argue.

Millions of Scots find it rather difficult to grasp the fact that we inhabit one of the world's wealthiest countries yet we are some of the poorest people in the United Kingdom. It is only fair that we should redress the balance.

Many people in Scotland have come to realise that it is not enough just to change the Government. It would not be enough simply to vote in Labour, although it is a fact that, since 1959, the overwhelming majority of Scots have not voted Tory but have put their faith in and cast their vote for the Labour party. The continual overruling of Scottish laws and customs by the Tory Government at Westminster as if Scotland were some forgotten distant colony has led many people to realise that we must change the system.

I have been here throughout the 13 years of Tory Government and have consistently argued against the role played in Scottish matters by the Secretary of State for Scotland. He has withdrawn from local government its right to manage and withdrawn the funds to enable it to manage properly. He is still determined to stick to the dogma of the unwanted poll tax. He still argues that we should pursue those who were due to pay the 20 per cent., even if they cannot afford to pay it.

At present, I am pursuing two cases in my constituency. The first concerns an old lady in a nursing home, who is being pursued for the 20 per cent. that she should have paid last year. She has no funds at all. Even her pocket money is captured by the nursing home, which administers her personal needs.

The other case concerns a person who is in receipt of income support from the Department of Social Security, which has said that, because of the other deductions that it is making from the person's income, it simply cannot make further deductions to pay the 20 per cent. charge levied on the poorest of our people.

Why is it, now that we know that the poll tax has been a disaster—after all, it caused the demise of the previous Prime Minister—that we must pursue relentlessly a dogma that militates against the poorest of our people? Why could we not have scrapped the 20 per cent? Why not forget the dogma which says that everyone must pay and everyone must be made accountable, and give some relief to the poorest people in our society? The truth is that, after 13 years of Conservatism, the poorest have become poorer and the rich have become better heeled.

Mr. Bermingham: Does my hon. Friend agree that a society that will send a 71-year-old to prison because she cannot pay the poll tax—in a Conservative borough, I hasten to add—and that will do the same to other elderly people who do not have the means to pay is a society that needs to be condemned, not praised?

Mr. McKelvey: I could not agree more. My hon. Friend adds emphasis to my point that dogma rules. Conservative Members say that they do not wish to pursue people or insist that their will should be enforced. It makes one wonder about that when one hears of someone of such frailty being pursued and put in prison for failing to pay a tax that everyone recognises was nonsensical from the moment that it was introduced.

Mr. Gerald Bowden: Does the hon. Gentleman condone the borough of Southwark, which has £35 million-worth of rent arrears, for its failure to collect? Does he feel that that is a proper approach of socialism to outstanding debt?

Mr. McKelvey: Many things can cause a failure to collect and one of them is the inability of the poor to pay. We must consider these matters and make——

Mr. Gerald Bowden: What about benefits?

Mr. McKelvey: If people are paid benefits, the benefit officers make the appropriate deductions, but that is not the answer in the case of people who are so poor that the benefit officers say that nothing more can be deducted. The only response is to clap them in irons, but that will not persuade anyone to listen to reason or to feel that he should be accountable. The truth is, as Conservative Members know, that the poll tax was unwanted. It was an abomination and the Government were advised by the counterparts of those who now sit in the officials' Box not to introduce it.

The hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield talked about how the Government were able to save money. He told us about the chaos that was caused by socialist policies and referred especially to public works departmens. He said that the number of those employed in such departments was cut drastically. It is interesting that there are three advisers in the Box to advise the Minister during a debate on a Back-Bench Member's motion.

Mr. Robert Hughes (Aberdeen, North): It is astonishing that the hon. Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden)—does the hon. Member represent Dulwich? I forget. I should know because I live in his constituency. I do not vote for him, of course. It is astonishing that he should have made a riposte about housing benefit being available to the poor for housing costs and to have given the impression that he was in favour of housing benefit. If the strictures of the Conservative party against the implications of socialism were implemented, there would be no housing benefit. Help from the state to assist the poor is a socialist idea yet it seems to be enthusiastically welcomed by some Conservative Members.

Mr. McKelvey: As always, my hon. Friend has given me great assistance. I agree, of course, with everything that he says.

I was saying that the Government treat Scotland as if it were a forgotten colony. That being so, the Scots must take responsibility for their own government. The Labour party is 100 per cent. committed to a Scottish parliament in Scotland that will take over the government of Scotland. The first-past-the-post system will not be used. It will be interesting to observe what takes place.

One of the responsibilities of a Scottish parliament will be health care. If we had a socialist Government and socialist health policies, it can be said with certainty that we would not have had the undemocratic farce that took place recently in south Ayrshire, where a brand-new hospital has recently been completed at a cost of £31 million. It is extremely well equipped. The management, through the health board, applied for opting-out status. The Secretary of State for Scotland said that there would be a consultative programme. When the right hon. Gentleman made that announcement I asked him and his junior Ministers if they would interpret the results of that process fairly and squarely. I wanted to know whether the application would be refused if the results showed that the overwhelming desire of the people in Ayrshire was that the hospital should remain as it was, under the auspices of the Ayrshire and Arran health board.

The Secretary of State would not give me a straightforward answer. One of his junior Ministers did, however. I was told that it would be an honest consultative process. He said that submissions would be examined but added that even if there were a massive majority vote against the application, that would not necessarily lead to the opting-out application being refused.

Under the consultative process, there were more than 700 submissions to the Ayrshire and Arran health board. About 500 were made by way of a written postcard. The Secretary of State decided that he should push those submissions aside. Whether that decision was democratic is a matter of judgment, but responsibility must rest with the Secretary of State. Under a socialist Administration, the consultative process would not have been handled in that way. It would not have allowed the matter to be handled undemocratically. There certainly was a failure to uphold democracy by a Conservative-controlled authority.

Of the 256 written applications, only nine were in favour of the application to opt out. All the others were against it. They came from churches, consultants, general practitioners and every political party with the exception of the Scottish National party.

The Secretary of State examined the submissions not on the basis of whether they were for or against, as a socialist Administration would have done, but in terms of "quality". He decided that the submissions made by Labour Members, Labour authorities, churches, consultants, general practitioners, nurses, other employees in the service and other individuals were of a lower quality than those from the 11 apparatchiks who had been placed to argue that opted-out status should be given to the hospital.

Opting-out has been pursued in Scotland, but in England there have been second thoughts about the process. With some democracy, Ministers have slowed the process and put a stop to such applications in the meantime. Some of the hospitals that have opted out in the south have found themselves in extremely serious difficulties.

Had there been a socialist Administration dealing with social welfare, it is certain that pensioners would have been about £23 a week better off. That would have been the result of keeping them within the formula that was being used in 1979, when there was a socialist Administration.

Mr. Robert Hughes: It is argued by Conservative Members that socialism is undemocratic and that the Conservative approach is more democratic, but this is an undemocratic, centralising Government. They preside over the United Kingdom, and in Scotland the so-called local control of national health service trusts was removed. The trusts did not have the right to choose their putative chairmen. The chairmen were approached by the Scottish Office. There was no local democracy.

Mr. McKelvey: I am indebted to my hon. Friend. I know that he has a wealth of information to offer the House on these matters. I am sure that before I have completed my speech he will have helped me even more.

There is a catalogue of issues to be dealt with and I have not yet reached the real meat, which is how the Scottish people feel about the Government's policies and actions. I shall take my time and try to remain as calm as possible. If Conservative Members find it difficult to understand what I have to say and wish to put questions to me, I shall respond by trying to amplify my arguments. However, I do not want to take up too much time because I know that there are many hon. Members who wish to speak in this debate. I do not know, but we might get on to the next debate.

Mr. Soames: Will the hon. Gentleman confirm that, in the event of a Scottish Office Minister arriving, he has another speech for the next debate?

Mr. McKelvey: I cannot confirm that. Without embarrassment, I would make the same speech again. There would be nothing wrong with making it again.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I trust that the hon. Member is responding to my appeal and is directing his remarks to the first motion.

Mr. McKelvey: I am, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but what I would be saying in speaking to the second motion would be not dissimilar to what I am saying now, because similar matters would be involved.

I could speak for at least half an hour on the deficiencies of the Government's social welfare policy. If we have reached a stage when people who are on benefit but who are subject to deductions are so poor that they cannot afford to pay the previous year's 20 per cent. poll tax, it is clear that there is real, harsh poverty. That has not been mentioned so far by Conservative Members.

In an intervention the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris) alleged that local Labour parties had tried by all manner of means to stop people owning their own houses. There might have been a measure of truth in that in the early days, but that resistance has long gone.

Councils are concerned—as the Government should be—about the fact that the money that came into the coffers from the sale of council houses was moribund—trapped—and had not been used for the correct purpose, which was to build new houses for people who needed them. Homelessness in Scotland has risen and there are now many thousands of people on the waiting list who cannot be adequately housed, not to mention the hapless wretches whom we see on the streets of London. Many of them—26 per cent. at the last count—were Scots who had travelled south in search of the promised land about which we hear so much. However, they end up homeless, unwanted and uncared for. The Government are responsible for the state of those people.

Mr. Norris: Courtesy of the Labour Whip, we now know the truth about Labour's defence policy—the Leader of the Opposition merely allowed his CND card to lapse. Is not that what the hon. Gentleman is suggesting about Labour's opposition to the right to buy—Labour has merely allowed it to lapse? The hon. Gentleman said as much. The truth is that, despite the hon. Gentleman's posturing, Labour is trying to have it both ways—it knows the rightness of Tory politics, but cannot get away from its own rhetoric.

Mr. McKelvey: With regard to the right to buy, there has been an unprecedented number of recoveries. People cannot pay their mortgages and that is another problem not only in Scotland but in the south. I heard on the news only this morning that the Government, in their panic, are trying to push through a measure to protect those with mortgages because a record number of small business men are now unemployed as a result of the Government's policies. We would not be in that state if we had a socialist Government at Westminster and, of course, in Scotland.

How can the hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield argue that there has been an improvement in the transport system? British Rail is in an absolute shambles because the Government have restricted and squeezed its funds. The rolling stock to the south is virtually falling off the bogeys. Socialist Administrations—unlike our Government—put money into transport infrastructure and have a much better system than ours. No one can claim that under its present strictures British Rail's management could run a proper integrated system. It is squeezed for cash. British Rail is instructed to make a profit on what should be a service to take people to and from work.

I deal now with agriculture in Scotland. If the MacSharry proposals were accepted, between a fifth and a quarter of Scottish farmers could go out of business. All hon. Members will agree that not only in Scotland but in England and Wales there has been a reduction in farmers' income totalling about 26 or 27 per cent. They cannot afford to continue in that way.

As a socialist, I want the land to be used properly for agriculture. I want the farmers to stay on the land because I am an environmentalist and I believe that if farmers are taken off the land—especially in Scotland—much of it would be laid to waste.

Mr. Robert Hughes: I should like to emphasise the plight of the farmers and the destitution facing the farming communities, especially in the north of Scotland where in the past 12 to 24 months there has been a rise in the number of suicides. The National Farmers Union for Scotland is very concerned that the farming community is returning to what it was between the wars when the only way that farmers could escape their debts and escape absolute penury for their families was to take their own life. That is a serious matter which should be considered by those who believe that the free market is all that counts in life.

Mr. McKelvey: Such cases are especially sad. Another sad aspect is that farmers realise that their sons are not prepared to take on the onerous task of running farms, especially the hill farms in Scotland which require hard graft and apparently offer no possibility of making a profit for some years.

Let me state how a socialist Administration would deal with forestry. We would redress the imbalance that has been created by the selling of forestry land. We would reverse the process and return to the situation that existed in Scotland in 1979—80 per cent. of the land will be Forestry Commission land and 20 per cent. will be under scrutiny to ensure that it is properly managed.

Mr. Bermingham: Does my hon. Friend agree that growing fir trees is not necessarily the best way to afforestate land and that the sooner we return to a proper environmental approach to forestry—for example, the growing of oak, beech and ash—the better for the whole of our country?

Mr. McKelvey: I was just about to say that we must put an end to the massive tax dodge in which even television personalities have been indulging: planting firs in Scotland entitled them to a tax back-hander. That process will be abolished, if that has not already been done.

Mr. Patnick: Cannot the hon. Gentleman read his speech?

Mr. McKelvey: Yes, I can, but I am considering which matters I could perhaps best leave to other hon. Members who wish to participate and which matters I shall use in the next debate.

I have merely touched on the attitudes of the people of Scotland. Hon. Members wonder how I am able to argue so vociferously and with such sure footedness about what people in Scotland think about the Government and what they would like to see under a socialist Government.

On 30 November this year the Glasgow Herald carried out a series of polls in Scotland to discover what type of government or self-government the Scots wanted. More than three out of every four Scots questioned wanted some form of self-government. Support in Scotland for the current parliamentary system under Conservative control was less than 20 per cent. The Scottish National party and the Labour party both claim considerable comfort from the figures and graphs shown in the newspaper, but the figures in the System 3 poll put support for a devolved Scottish Parliament at 43 per cent.—that is for a Parliament in Scotland with maximalist powers. Support for complete independence was 35 per cent. and only 18 per cent. were in favour of no change to the present system. That means that 78 per cent. of the people of Scotland want a different kind of government. They do not want the Westminster parliamentary system and they certainly do not want that system run by Conservatives. The polls have remained fairly static in the past 10 years. The only alteration is an increase in the majority of the people seeking a change. Therefore, the wishes of the people of Scotland should not be treated lightly or disregarded by Conservative Members.

Some Conservative Members think that we are a bunch of whingers in Scotland and that we ought to shut up or put up. They are arguing that a referendum should be held and that the Scottish people should be given the stark option, "Either stay as you are or go fully independent." That is a dangerous road to travel. If that were the only option given to them today, the Scots would opt for independence. Those polls clearly show that they are prepared to stay as part of the union, but only as an equal partner, not as some far-flung, forgotten colony which is mentioned here once a month during Scottish Question Time, or when the Scottish Grand Committee meets in a Committee Room here. The Government are putting the brakes on those matters ever being discussed by a Scottish Grand Committee in Scotland.

The Government must begin to realise the difficulties which exist in Scotland—the problems that we are trying to tackle, which Scottish people feel strongly about. They have been voting consistently for socialist policies rather than for Conservative policies and they feel that their demise is due to the Conservative, non-socialist policies that are being applied.

I believe, as do all the men and women I talk to, that we should be working towards a Scottish Parliament. The lives of all Scots will be enriched if we take democratic responsibility for our government. I have watched with sadness the demise in the powers of local authorities. The Government have throttled them because they are holding the purse strings.

Under a socialist Government we shall achieve a directly elected assembly—or Parliament, as I prefer to call it—in Scotland, but that will be of no value if we leave Westminster the power to throttle it by holding back the necessary cash to run it. It would be a big mistake if Westminster thought that it could hold on to those powers.

The most useful explanation of the application of democracy for Scotland and for European structures that I have read recently was written by a man in Scotland for whom I have a high regard, the chairman of the executive of the Scottish Constitutional Convention, Canon Kenyon Wright. He said:

"There is a realisation that the Scottish issue and the current European issue are very close to one another. They are both about sovereignty. Both Scotland and the vision of a more integrated Europe, fundamentally question the strange view of sovereignty held in the English parliamentary tradition—namely that power is concentrated in one place and that any proposal to share that power with other levels is somehow a threat"— to democracy—

"The opposition to real power for Scotland and the totally irrational fears of a European super state are based on the same fundamental misunderstanding of what sovereignty is all about."

To enlighten Conservative Members, the crux of the matter is that

"we live in a time when democracy itself, as well as the demands of the age in which we live, means that power must be shared at different levels for different purposes. So long as each level is fully democratic and therefore preserves the true sovereignty of the people"— that is what is important—not the sovereignty of Parliament but the sovereignty of the people—

"this is the only way towards a just participatory and sustainable society."

I support those sentiments 100 per cent.

If I get the opportunity I shall return to expand those powerful concepts, but I do not want to take up time on that matter during this debate.

The assembly will take over key responsibilities for the government of Scotland. Much of the power over Scottish matters would be wrested from Westminister. That has to happen. It will be vital that local government powers and responsibilities are restored and extended to take the workload and to strengthen local democracy. We have to reverse at a stroke the present Government's 13 years of corrosive, dogmatic obsession with stripping the people of Scotland, England and Wales of their democratic rights, through the ballot box, to elect district and regional councils of their choice, without the threat of the withdrawal of cash by Westminister. With the Conservatives in power, consideration would never be given to electing a representative body by any other system than that of first past the post.

Parliament in Scotland will be elected by a form of proportional representation. The work of the Scottish Constitutional Convention, for about two years, especially in those areas which the executive members have been considering, has involved a great deal of work and heart searching. It is a credit to the Labour party that it has been able to sit down with other political parties and has been able to accept some form of proportional representation as a method for electing that Parliament.

The test of time will determine whether that socialist initiative will be acceptable, whether it will be a success or a failure. In the pursuit of some form of proportional representation it is interesting that women, who make up more than half of our community, will have fair and equal representation in a Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Jacques Arnold: The direct consequences of proportional representation will be fewer Members of Parliament from Scotland in this place and, proportionately, fewer Labour Members in any Scottish convention.

Mr. McKelvey: That is another matter. I am arguing about a democratic situation and I am not insisting that my party must have the majority of seats, irrespective of whether there is a democratic form of election. If the hon. Member for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold) is saying that I should discard any form of democracy, because it will move against the party that I represent, let me tell him that I am a democrat. If that is a consequence of some form of proportional representation, I am prepared to bear it.

Mr. Jacques Arnold: I think that we are all democrats. The difficulty is, what is one's priority? Is it representative democracy, in which one Member of Parliament is solely responsible for his constituency—the smallest electoral area possible—or is it an alternative, arithmetic representation of political parties? One cannot have both. I know which I would go for—representing the people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I hope that we shall not lose sight of the motion before the House.

Mr. McKelvey: We are discussing socialist alternatives and Conservative dogma. We have not tried proportional representation. We are not slow to try experiments in Scotland. After all the Government stuck the poll tax in Scotland a year before it came here, despite the fact that we are supposed to be a union. I think that that was unconstitutional, but apparently the courts were not able to decide. In Scotland we were forced to accept a different taxation system from that in England and Wales and that should not have been allowed. Conservative Members representing English and Welsh seats showed no democracy when they marched through the Lobby triumphantly to impose a series of taxation measures in Scotland, measures which they know nothing of, and could not care less about. There was nothing democratic about that. If proportional representation results in fairer representation in any form of Parliament, it is a step forward for democracy, but time will tell.

Mr. Gerald Bowden: Did the hon. Gentleman and his colleagues from Scotland go into the Lobby for the Division on the abolition or retention of the Inner London education authority or the Greater London council?

Mr. McKelvey: I honestly do not recall. Hon. Members know our system in Parliament. Very often I do what the Whip tells me to do—[HON. MEMBERS: "Often?"]—I always do what the Whip tells me. We all know the position. It is one of the weaknesses of this place that one is not free to argue as an individual. I stood as a member of the Labour party. I am duty bound, therefore, broadly to follow its manifesto.

Mr. Bermingham: Does my hon. Friend agree that the hon. Members for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) and for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold) are shedding crocodile tears about electoral size? The Boundary Commission's redistribution in England in 1983 meant that seats in, for example, London ranged in size from 48,000 to 103,000. Are the 103,000 people less worthy than the 48,000? Both constituencies have only one Member. Surely the electoral system, as gerrymandered by the Boundary Commission, is a disgrace?

Mr. McKelvey: Of course it is. One of the difficulties with having more than one Member of Parliament for each constituency is the division of their tasks, but that could easily be overcome. I would rather have two Members of Parliament who applied themselves to a constituency than one Member of Parliament who had several outside jobs that prevented him from giving 100 per cent. attention and accountability to it. All hon. Members sometimes shed crocodile tears on that issue.

Four-year fixed terms for the Scottish assembly would free Scottish people from doubts about elections. Economic forecasts would not be a major factor in calling elections to the Scottish Parliament. An executive would be drawn from its elected Members.

Unlike Conservative ideas, the prominence of socialist membership——

Mr. Soames: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It is quite plain that the hon. Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun (Mr. McKelvey) is speaking to the second debate, calling "attention to the future Government of Scotland; and to move, That this House acknowledges the sovereign rights of the Scottish people to determine the form of Government best suited to their needs."

His speech has nothing to do with the implications of socialism.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am not sure whether the hon. Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) was in the Chamber when I made that point to the hon. Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun (Mr. McKelvey), who is linking his remarks to a wide motion. I am sure that he will continue to do so and will not go into detail more appropriate to the second motion.

Mr. McKelvey: I do not wish to incur your wrath, Mr. Deputy Speaker; nor do I wish to impinge on my speech for the next debate, if I get the opportunity to make it. But these matters are dear to us in Scotland.

The hon. Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) misses the point: the nation is divided, not only between rich and poor and north and south, but, in effect, a socialist Scotland and a Conservative England. Therefore, the frailties of socialism, if there are any, should have been highlighted by the hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield. I am seeking to argue against the motion and to promote what is good in Scotland and what will be better under a Socialist Administration.

I am prepared to argue for proportional representation. It is not my fault that the Conservative party in Scotland refuses to participate in the constitutional convention. It is not my fault that the Secretary of State for Scotland denies the right of a Scottish convention to exist and refuses to discuss the matter with it. Only recently, the Secretary of State has done a U-turn and is now prepared to hold a debate in the House on the future government of Scotland. At least we shall then hear the Conservative view and Labour Members will be able to express their views on the frailties, or otherwise, of a socialist-led Scotland.

Nobody can deny that Scotland is socialist. Of the 72 Scottish seats 48 are Labour. The Scottish National party claims to be socialist. It has five Members, including one of ours who went over to it. In total, we carry the wishes of two thirds of the Scottish people. The socialist Administration in Scotland, particularly on the regional and district councils, are being prevented from carrying out socialist policies by Government dogma.

Mr. Jacques Arnold: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The word "Scotland" does not appear in the motion. The speech of the hon. Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun (Mr. McKelvey) is highly irrelevant and has taken up nearly an hour of the House's time. Many hon. Members wish to speak about socialism.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman should leave this to the Chair.

Mr. McKelvey: The fact that the word "Scotland" does not appear in the motion condemns the hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield, not me. If I had not had so many interruptions, I would have finished, because I wish to make only a couple of further points.

The polls show that Scotland does not accept the Conservative style of administration. It would be a sad day indeed, if, because of their dogmatic opposition to a socialist Administration, Conservative Members were prepared to leave us almost as a colony.

I have dealt with some of the difficulties that we have in socialist Scotland, which we shall try to overcome. I hope that the election is held as soon as possible so that the people of this country—particularly the poor, the down-trodden and the business men who have suffered from a record number of business failures—can decide whether they have had enough of this Government. The sooner the election is held, the sooner we shall be able to discuss the question of socialism.

Mr. Chris Smith: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I have just received the inflation figures, which were published 20 minutes ago by the Central Statistical Office. They show that the headline rate of inflation has risen from 3·7 per cent. last month to 4·3 per cent. this month. Does not that give the lie to the motion, which refers to "reducing inflation"? It would appear that the Government are presiding over rising inflation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman can legitimately make that point, if he so wishes, when he catches my eye. I call Mr. Gerald Bowden.

Mr. Maclennan: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I must express my surprise that you have thought fit to call three Conservative Members and one Opposition Member in a debate that has lasted for two hours and twenty minutes when other hon. Members on the Opposition Benches have sought to catch your eye. If there is some reason for that, it would be extremely interesting to hear it as it is a departure from convention.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is a matter for the Chair, but I did note that the hon. Gentleman did not rise earlier in the debate.

Mr. Maclennan: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I hesitate to contradict you flatly, but I regret that you did not see me rise earlier in the debate. I have been here seeking to catch your eye from the beginning of the debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I can assure the hon. Gentleman that what I said was correct.

Mrs. Alice Mahon (Halifax): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Further to the point of order raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith)——

Mr. Jacques Arnold: Is this a point of order?

Mrs. Mahon: Yes. The Prime Minister promised the country that he had licked inflation. Has he contacted you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to make it known that he will come to the House to explain why, yet again, something he said has not proved to be true?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There has been no request for a statement of which I am aware.

11.50 am

Mr. Gerald Bowden (Dulwich): I am sure that it will be a disappointment to those on the thronged Opposition Benches that I intend to return to a discussion of the motion on the Order Paper. After the agreeable digression about the highlands and islands and the bogus points of order, I can understand why the Opposition do not want to discuss the issue of socialism.

I had great sympathy with what my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris) said. He made no attribution of bad faith to the Opposition. I agree with my hon. Friend that we, from whatever party we are elected, come to the House by and large with the belief that we are here to try to improve the lot of those whom we represent. I do not believe that the way in which we discuss issues in the House reveals any bad faith or deliberate corruptness.

At this moment we are witnessing the collapse of socialism throughout eastern Europe. That collapse is also manifest in this country. Those of us who have taken an interest in the way in which the flagship of socialism, the Daily Mirror, has represented its cause are concerned about the way in which voices are heard in the House.

Mr. Ian Taylor (Esher): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I wonder whether you are all right. Do you need the protection of the House?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Bowden.

Mr. Bowden: The two current political theories on government suggest that it results either from a cock-up or a conspiracy. It is clear that socialism has collapsed because of both those factors.

Those of us who have lived under a socialist regime in local government recognise that, although the highest ideals may have prompted people to accept socialism as the modus operandi for the provision of local government services, it is subject to corruption and inefficiency. That means that the way in which those services are provided serves as a disadvantage rather than as a benefit to those who receive them.

At my advice surgery tonight, as on every other Friday night, there will be about 30 people who have come with a grievance or complaint. The vast majority of those complaints will be about Southwark's services, particularly relating to housing performance. The failure of that socialist-run local authority to provide services to meet the needs of the people is one demonstrable example of the failure of socialism at a practical level.

I recall the words in scripture which suggest that "By their lights you shall know them". One knows that the lights of socialism burn dimly in those authorities where socialism is put into practice. If one wants a practical judgment of socialism, one need only study the London boroughs, especially the London borough of Southwark which I know best, to see the failure of that theory when put into practice.

Reference has been made to the failure of some authorities to collect rents. It is scandalous that about £35 million of outstanding rent is due from Southwark tenants. Those arrears do not result simply because of a failure to pay or an inability to pay through poverty. Properly organised provisions exist to ensure that those who do not have the necessary financial resources to pay are supported. The failure to collect the rents and to guarantee good management within the housing department means that a heavier burden falls, unjustly, upon those who are called upon to make up the deficit. The failure to collect the £35 million means that a heavier burden falls on all the other right-thinking and responsible people of Southwark who have made their payments.

To allow such staggering rent arrears to accrue is one aspect of the overall failure of local authority housing provision. Another is the inability of local government to bring empty properties back into use swiftly. Practices within local authority direct labour departments—they may or may not be corrupt—have often led to an empty property, habitable or not, being boarded up immediately or being subjected to a maintenance provision. Many people on the housing waiting list would willingly take an undecorated property. They could work on that property and decorate it according to their style. Instead, those properties are unnecessarily refurbished by the local authority. Empty properties should be brought back into use immediately, but the restrictive practices that direct labour departments of local authorities enforce are equivalent to socialism in action. They limit the opportunities to reduce housing waiting lists.

Today, we have heard mention of the right to buy. That provision has given people the opportunity to obtain independence from a local authority landlord who puts many heavy restrictions upon them. One notices immediately the sense of independence that is apparent among those who have purchased their homes. They are no longer subject to those restrictions and can make the improvements that they want.

The right-to-buy policy has been grudgingly adopted by the Opposition because they know that it touches a nerve of popular appeal. However, although the Labour party has accepted it in theory, it has done all that it can in practice—certainly in Southwark—to inhibit those who wish to purchase. However, new provisions have been enacted to ensure that local authorities act promptly to deal with right-to-buy applications; they are penalised if they fail to do so. That has forced the Labour party to find other tactics to frustrate those who want to purchase.

I hope that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry will speak in the debate. He should be aware of the way in which local authorities project high maintenance charges with a view to frightening off those who might think of purchasing a property. We know that the work envisaged in the estimate of charges would never be done, but those astronomical figures frighten off potential purchasers.

Housing is just one aspect of the failure of socialism in local government. That failure is also apparent in the provision of social services. My borough of Southwark has a scandalous history of failure in the provision of such services. That has happened in many homes for the elderly. In one or two cases, a calculated and systematic regime of cruelty has been inflicted on those who have been incarcerated—I use that word advisedly—in such homes in the care of Southwark council. Those incidents have been subject of a ministerial inquiry at the homes involved have been closed.

Mr. Bermingham: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I thought that there was a convention that we do not attack people who cannot reply. The hon. Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) has used the word "corrupt" several times with regard to Southwark council. He is now using the word "incarcerated". Of course, incarceration is the criminal offence of false imprisonment. If the hon. Gentleman wishes to attack people personally, let him have the courage to make his remarks publicly outside, were he can be sued.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is a matter for the hon. Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden). He did not say anything that was out of order.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. On the issue of corruption in local government, some of us are prepared to talk about corrupt Tory councils outside this place. As the hon. Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) is talking about corrupt councils, I wish to refer to the corrupt Westminster city council, which sold off three cemeteries for 5p a piece. Its successor, another Tory council, now has to buy them back for several millions of pounds. The result is that people in Westminster and taxpayers generally have to foot the bill for the corrupt activities of the Tory-controlled Westminster city council, and I shall say that outside this place.

Mrs. Teresa Gorman (Billericay): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. These are not points of order but matters for debate. If the hon. Member wishes to raise a point of order, I shall hear it.

Mrs. Gorman: Further to the earlier point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. As a member of Westminster city council when that deal was done, I want the House to know that it was done for the perfectly legitimate reason of reducing the cost of running a very expensive loss-making operation for the council. There was no suggestion of corruption and there has been no question of prosecution. To say that there has been is an absolute and outright untruth.

Mr. Skinner: That is very revealing. The hon. Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) was involved as well—a Tory Member of Parliament.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We must not forget the hon. Member for Dulwich, who has the floor.

Mr. Bowden: I shall check the record, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but I think that I did not personalise my remarks at all. In a debate such as this, with such an enticing motion on the Order Paper, I expected to see the Opposition Benches thronged with hon. Members wishing to defend the ideology that brought them here and justifying the basis on which they sought election, but those Benches are denuded.

Southwark is one of the most interesting councils in as much as the area includes three parliamentary constituencies—one held by a Conservative, one by a Liberal Democrat and one by a Labour Member. If Southwark's socialism needs defending, the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman)—who represents the socialist interest in the House—might attend to make that point.

Mrs. Mahon rose——

Mr. Bowden: The Opposition Benches may not be strong in numbers, but the sanctimonious tendency is here in strength.

Mrs. Mahon: The hon. Gentleman talked about ideology. I wonder whether he would like to comment on the ideologies that prevail in countries such as Brazil, where millions of street children are shot because the capitalists send out gangs to murder them because they make the place look untidy, or the Philippines, where in Manila alone there are 25,000 child prostitutes and millions of people live below the poverty line.

If we are having a discussion about ideology, perhaps the hon. Gentleman will give a more balanced view and point out that capitalism is failing millions of people, not least in this country. Yesterday, in my constituency, a 79-year-old lady collapsed and died as she queued for free food from the EC. Hundreds of people queued in the freezing cold. I raised that matter last night on the Adjournment. Does the hon. Gentleman believe that his party's ideology has been a success for people over the past 12 years?

Mr. Bowden: I understand why the hon. Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun (Mr. McKelvey) wished to divert our attention to Scotland and why the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) wishes to divert it to Brazil. What one sees near home is far too embarrassing for them to debate.

During a quiet evening when I was in the Chamber, I found myself thumbing through the debates in the other place. I was particularly struck by a debate on 31 January 1991, when the deputy leader of the socialist Opposition raised the matter of corporate governments. I should like to direct the attention of the hon. Member for Halifax to that debate, which dealt with what the duties of non-executive directors of companies should be—[Interruption.]

Mrs. Gorman: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I know what the hon. Member is about to say. We would be well advised to take notice of what is happening in the Chamber.

Mr. Bowden: To return to the tranquillity of the debate in the other place on 31 January, Lord Williams of Elvel and Lord Donoughue referred to corporate governments and the duties of directors. It is interesting that they both represent the socialist interest in the other place and that both have been identified as directors of the flagships of socialism, the Daily Mirror and the Maxwell group of companies.

Yesterday evening, I had the opportunity to remind Lord Donoughue of his words. He said, "Most of the recent highly publicised corporate scandals"——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is the hon. Member quoting the words of a member of another place? It is not in order to do so unless that member for is a Minister. I remind the hon. Member that it is not in order to criticise members of the other place other than by way of a motion.

Mr. Bowden: I am grateful for your guidance, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I was not quoting. I was paraphrasing, not criticising. Indeed, I was complimenting Lord Donoughue on his foresight at such an early stage in the year in drawing attention to an issue that bears heavily on socialism in action, the socialists who control companies and contribute to the socialist party in the House and in the country at large—"By their deeds ye shall know them."

If I may paraphrase, Lord Donoughue said, "Most of the recent highly publicised corporate scandals could have been avoided or exposed at an earlier stage by alert and truly independent directors." Both Lord Donoughue and his colleague, Lord Williams of Elvel, were directors of just that independence and quality. It is interesting that, with the collapse of those great empires of socialism in eastern Europe, we have also seen the collapse of the great commercial socialist empire of Maxwell. We do not take pride in a failure, because we see within it the essence for the failure which we are trying to identify in this debate.

Mr. Skinner: He was a crook.

Mr. Bowden: I am not sure whether the hon. Gentleman is referring from a sedentary position to me as a crook or to some other person, but I shall willingly give way so that he can clarify the matter.

Mr. Skinner: The hon. Gentleman obviously did not catch what I was saying. I was referring to the fact that Maxwell was a crook. I was one of those who from time to time highlighted that fact both in this place and outside it. It was no surprise to me when the house of cards came tumbling down.

Mr. Jacques Arnold: It was a surprise for that gullible gentleman, the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Skinner: I have nothing to say about the hon. Gentleman's comment.

The Daily Mirror supported the Labour leadership. I do not know whether the hon. Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) is aware that from time to time I was attacked in the Daily Mirror because I stood up and acted like a socialist.

Mr. Bowden: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for his clarification. I would not say that Mr. Maxwell was a crook—merely that he was a socialist in the way he conducted his affairs. That seems to be evident from the debate.

We are discussing a rather wider issue than the simple matter of two ideologies. We are examining the way in which they provide for the needs of a country and the way in which, in delegated form, local government and local health and education authorities make provision for people's needs. It is demonstrable that when socialism is in charge of those matters the provision of the services is less efficient, less attractive and more expensive. That issue is fundamental whatever Labour's cosmetic changes and irrespective of the way in which it tries to disguise or put a fig leaf over its socialism. With the advent of an election, Labour cannot disguise the basic fact that, in practice, when socialism provides services it does it less efficiently and more expensively. Over the past 12 years we have demonstrated what conservatism in practice can do, and I know that the electors will make the right choice.

Several Hon Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Before I call the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan), may I say that I regret any misunderstanding that may have arisen between the hon. Gentleman and me and apologise to him. However, I remind the hon. Gentleman and the House that it is the sole prerogative of the Chair to decide which hon. Member to call.

Mr. Robert Maclennan (Caithness and Sutherland): Your remarks, Mr. Deputy Speaker, show your characteristic courtesy. I regret anything that I may have said which has given offence.

The debate has certainly not thrown a great deal of light on the nature of socialism. The hon. Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) failed to discharge the burden of proof that the troubles faced by the country have anything to do with socialism. We have never really seen socialism in this country and some people may take comfort from that. Others, including, perhaps, the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner), regret it. Socialism has not characterised the beSaviour of the Labour party in government although individual members of Labour Governments may have been inspired by socialist idealism.

The debate was initiated by the hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans) and he treated socialism and Labour as synonymous. No doubt that was intended to shower pejoratives on the concept. The House does not normally deal in abstract philosophical concepts but rather with the way in which the country is being governed and the impact of that on the country. It is remarkable that the three speeches from Conservative Members have wholly failed to acknowledge the plight to which their party has brought the country.

Mr. Bermingham: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that Conservative speeches have been cant and rubbish? There was not an intelligent remark in any of them.

Mr. Maclennan: I thought that they would have taken the opportunity to engage in serious discussion about political ideology, but, bearing in mind the Conservative Members who participated in the debate, perhaps that was too much to hope for.

The hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris) said that his friends who come to this country from abroad would be struck by the enormous progress that has been made over the past 12 years. His experience is different from mine, because most of my friends from other countries are struck by the relative decline in our standards of public provision over the past 12 years. They are struck by the squalor of our cities compared with other western European cities and by the evident poverty of sections of our community who are forced to lie out in the streets in freezing weather. They are struck by all the signs of a country in which mammon reigns and where the divisions between rich and poor are increasing, to the discredit of the Government who have presided over it.

I do not know whether that is a denial of socialism. Socialism has little to say that is relevant to the world in which we live. It may have had at some time, but not now. I am more interested in what drives the current Labour party. I ask myself whether it is socialism and what is meant by socialism. I recall the reasons that drove me to leave the Labour party. I certainly did not feel that it was about to be taken over by some form of eastern European-style socialism. It was rather the disunity, the dogmatism and the unwise trade union domination which dogged the Labour party in government, in which I served, and in opposition when many of the policies pursued by the last Labour Government were rejected and reviled.

Mr. Skinner: When the hon. Gentleman came here he came as a Labour Member. Even if he did not profess to be a socialist at that time, the only way in which he could become a Labour Member was by taking socialist money. To win marginal seats, such as that of the hon. Gentleman in Scotland, socialists had to put their hands into their back pockets and provide money. That was how the hon. Gentleman became a Labour Member and served in a Labour Government. Then he joined the gang of four and another party. That borders on—I was about to say hypocrisy, but I do not think that I am allowed to say that.

Mr. Maclennan: The hon. Gentleman wants to fight battles of years which he and I fought 10 years ago. The reality is that those who elected me have seen fit to re-elect me twice since that battle was fought. I can only assume that they did not think that my action was mistaken.

Mr. Soames: I know the hon. Gentleman extremely well. When he changed his party those who sent him to Parliament supported him in great numbers. On this occasion the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) is wrong.

Mr. Maclennan: I have always rather admired the hon. Member for Bolsover. I know that he does not reciprocate and I do not expect him to. I admire him for his outspoken adherence to his beliefs. My beliefs have taken me down a different path, but I think that the hon. Gentleman knows that they are sincerely held. I shall leave it at that.

What is the democratic socialism that inspires the Labour party? Perhaps a clue was given about this time last year when the right hon. Member for Leeds, East (Mr. Healey) published his autobiography. It was something of a best seller just before Christmas last year and I was struck by its reference to the words of a Polish democratic socialist, Lesjek Klakowski, who has chosen to live in this country. He defined democratic socialism as "a positive will to erode by inches the conditions which produce avoidable suffering."

That creed has sustained embattled dissenters in eastern Europe when the going was rough and perhaps it has also sustained people in the Labour party. However, for me, that approach is too gradualist, too determinist.

A positive will to erode by inches the conditions that produce avoidable suffering will not bring about the changes that are needed in this country, in the time scale that is necessary, if we are to avoid the fate of being a third-class economy and a third-class democracy.

As a description of the approach of the right hon. Member for Leeds, East, it is faultless. In a memorable passage in his book he also said:

"In a parliamentary democracy change can be achieved only through working inside a party. This means accepting its constraints and its disciplines. It means acquiescing in policies that you dislike until you can persuade your party to change them."

I do not know whether the hon. Member for Bolsover always acquiesces in policies that he dislikes, but I certainly recognise that the right hon. Member for Leeds, East did.

I do not believe that politics can be compared with the race between the tortoise and the hare. That description of political change and how it comes about in this country, is, in my view, unhistorical. When reform has come it has not come by tittuping little steps, taken and then held firm. It has come in great waves. It has come twice in this century —in the reforming Governments of Asquith and Lloyd George before the first world war and, for the second time, in the post-war Labour Government of 1945 to 1951, which introduced the national health service and an altogether more secure position for people living in poverty than had been their lot in the 1930s.

There are some who think that there has been a similar change in the 1980s under the right hon. Member for Finchley (Mrs. Thatcher)—the change in the balance of power between the trade unions and the state. I doubt whether it will be seen, in the eye of history, that any such historic change occurred. The right hon. Lady's achievements seem to me to be likely to be passing ones. They certainly do not appear to have prepared the country for the challenges that we face as a result of the growing union in western Europe.

Labour party strategists appear to me to be unnecessarily conservative. They seek to reassure the public that by change they mean little more than not doing the unpopular things that have been done by the present Government. For some people, I suppose that the mere relief that would flow from the end of this present Government might be regarded as enough to support the Labour party, but in its day-to-day handling of the political challenges that face it, too often the Labour party relies upon the negative. I do not think that it has put its alternatives clearly enough before the country.

When the country was faced by the last challenge of empire—Hong Kong—the Labour leadership was swift to condemn the Government's paltry and counterproductive proposals in refusing to allow Hong Kong citizens to come to this country, but they made no policy statements about what they would do in those circumstances. When the stock market collapsed on Black Monday, the then Chancellor of the Exchequer, the right hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Lawson), sought to boost demand to forestall a possible recession. It transpired that he was wrong in his predictions of what was going to happen. Although the Labour party attacked him, it was in almost exactly the same position as he was when he took his decision. Opposition for opposition's sake is understandable, but it does not exactly inspire the nation and does not give the impression that the vision of spokesmen on economic matters in the Labour party is any greater than that of the right hon. Member for Blaby.

As Labour has wobbled a little ahead of the Conservatives in the opinion polls, we have heard from time to time a somewhat triumphalist note from the Labour party. We have heard voices that sound as though they believe that all will be right in this country if the ins are out and the outs are in and the quango chairmen are changed. I doubt whether that will win the Labour party the election. I also doubt whether, if it did win the election, a Labour Government would produce a striking improvement in the quality of government or in the economic success of this country.

The causes of freedom and democracy require a more radical change than is contemplated by the Labour party in opposition. If the Labour party in opposition is not prepared to be radical, how much less radical is it likely to be when in government, judging by the experience of previous Labour Governments? I remember, just anecdotally, all that was said by the Labour party in Opposition about how it would tackle the land question in the highlands and islands. The hon. Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) will remember that, too. He will recall that nothing was done to tackle the land question by the Labour party. The position remains as it has always been: that the decisions of those who own large tracts of land are taken without let or hindrance, sometimes unwisely and not in the interests of those who live in the community. The Labour party has had plenty of opportunities in government to tackle that question, but it has not chosen to do so.

Mr. Skinner: The hon. Gentleman was a Minister.

Mr. Maclennan: Others were, too, and others had greater power to do something about it.

Mr. Skinner: The hon. Gentleman played a blinder, didn't he?

Mr. Maclennan: I published a Bill. The Highlands and Islands Development Board of the day, after four years of sitting on the proposals, adopted them and put them to the Labour Government in their last months when it was too late for legislation to be enacted. However, that is anecdotal and by the way.

If there is to be more effective government, delivering what the people of this country seek in the way of economic and social improvement, whichever Government are returned to office will have to tackle the unsuitedness of our constitutional arrangements to deal with the problems that we face. We need a modern constitution that defines the powers of government, gives individual citizens redress against the abuse of power and decentralises government to levels appropriate for taking decisions that affect people, both in the nations of Scotland and Wales and in the provinces of England—thus matching, perhaps, the experience of other countries much more successful than ours, such as the Federal Republic of Germany, which has decentralised provincial power and which is much more open than our Government are. With freedom of information legislation, the quality of debate is much more informed. Ministers can discuss with parliamentarians the realities, not the slogans that tend to characterise exchanges here between the two Front Benches.

The development of the Committee system in the past 10 years in this House has been a modest step in the right direction, but it has been hampered by the secretiveness of the Government. I read today that the Ministry of Defence has refused to reveal the details of any of the discussions that have taken place about the changing structure of our defence forces and has backed out of giving the sort of evidence on defence to the Select Committee on Defence which would enable it to take a serious view of what this country should do, in view of the markedly changed conditions in eastern Europe. There is also a markedly changed position in the middle east. However, we are still faced with the old confrontations. It is time for the power of the Government to be more defined and for the absolutism of this place to be curbed. It is not operating either efficiently or equitably, and nor does it protect citizens from abuses.

We must spread power throughout the country. We must rely, to a greater extent, on a definition of those powers and make them justiciable in our courts, as have other countries, so that we can defend the fundamental rights and freedoms of our people. This country is peculiar in not having an enforceable Bill of Rights to override the contraction or limitation of those rights by abuse. Until we have that, we shall continue to allow citizens' rights to be eroded.

I am not persuaded that the Labour party is ready to tackle those out-of-date parts of our parliamentary constitution. For that reason, I doubt whether it is yet fit for government. If it does show a willingness to embrace the necessary reform measures—not least those that will elect a more representative House of Commons—the public will view it with a different eye and it may, indeed, be a great radical party once again.

12.30 pm

Mr. Nicholas Soames (Crawley): I am sure that the House will forgive me if I do not take up the remarks of the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan), who is always worth listening to and who represents one of the most beautiful—indeed magnificent—constituencies in the country. It has a splendidly independent electorate, who will rightly continue to return him to the House with an increased majority. Although what he had to say was of great interest, I do not intend to follow him, because I want to deal with the question of socialism.

You and I, Mr. Deputy Speaker, will have many fond memories of the last debate on this subject on 15 December 1989, under a motion in the name of my hon. Friend the Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton). Unfortunately, now that my hon. Friend has taken vows of poverty, chastity and obediency, he is unable to contribute to our debates. On that day in 1989, our late and greatly lamented hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne, Mr. Gow, gave us a small tour—as he always did on Fridays—of the anniversary list in The Times. He drew some specious connection between that list and the House.

The House will wish to know that today is not only the anniversary of the birthday of the Aga Khan, but the anniversary of the death of Maimonides, an early socialist philosopher in Egypt in 1204. It was our great good fortune to be in this House when our late hon. Friend discovered in The Times that our right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development—to whom he always referred as the deputy Foreign Secretary—shared her birthday with the Emperor of Japan. You, Mr. Deputy Speaker, called our late hon. Friend to order and said that he had to make some connection between that event and the subject for debate. Before you do that again today, I shall move on.

The socialist movement and ideal have collapsed and they are everywhere in terminal decline. The fact that there are only four Labour Members of Parliament present today to debate the demise of socialism shows what a parlous state the party is in. Of those four, only the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) actually means what he says.

During the debate in 1989, my hon. Friend the Member for Tatton buried socialism with a stake through its heart, and at the crossroads of world affairs. He said that everywhere in the world socialism was in retreat. In 1989, the eastern European countries were just beginning to see the light of common day—Hungary, Romania, Czechoslovakia and Poland.

The collapse of socialism in Europe has continued apace. The revolutions in eastern Europe in the autumn of 1989 have been followed by the collapse of communism in the Soviet Union and the creation in the past few days of a new country, Ukraine, an independent state of the same size as France and a united Germany put together. It is an important power with vast resources and, unfortunately, a battery of nuclear weapons. This year, Sweden, which is often cited as a model of democratic socialism by the left in western Europe, has turned away from socialism after decades of rule by the left.

The Labour party in Britain has not been insulated from these developments and, in its policy reviews, has attempted to rid itself of some of the old socialist shibboleths. However, as my hon. Friend the Member for Tatton pointed out two years ago, the Labour party has spent the past 10 years in implacable opposition to all the changes, of whatever sort, that the Government have introduced and on the basis of which the extraordinary transformation of Britain has taken place. If matters had been left to it, we would be stuck in the world of the 1970s, of corporatism, failure and decline.

While no one would suggest that the Labour party in Britain shares the socialist policies pursued in eastern Europe or the Soviet Union, it is worth remembering the words that my right hon. Friend the Member for Mole Valley (Mr. Baker) used in that debate two years ago. He said:

"The common thread that binds all Socialists is their belief that the state and the Government have a crucial role in determining policies and economies in society. Like it or not, that is the pre-supposition of all Socialist programmes, whether they be communist or Fabian, British or Romanian."
—[Official Report, 15 December 1989; Vol. 163, c. 1335.]

Mr. Skinner: On the basis of changing minds, perhaps the hon. Gentleman should include the fact that a couple of years ago he went through the Lobby to vote for the dreaded poll tax—a degree of centralisation over local government the like of which we have never seen before. Two years later, having got rid of Mistress Finchley, the hon. Gentleman went through the Lobby to support getting rid of the poll tax. Nobody has changed his mind more than the Tory party over that.

Mr. Soames: I am not sure that that is quite the case, but the hon. Gentleman is correct to draw attention to the matter. As a distinguished ancestor of mine once said in the House, "I have regularly had to eat my words and have generally found them to be a wholesome diet."

Look at the Labour party today. Doubtful of its mission, for the very reason that the hon. Gentleman has pointed out, it has changed its mind on almost everything. It is no longer confident of its principles because, as far as I can see and everybody is able to tell, it has none that matter. It is drifing to and fro in the tides and currents of British political life. It is wrong on economics, on political conceptions and, thank God, in its estimation of public opinion.

Mr. Chris Smith: In the tests of public opinion that have taken place in the past two and a half years—in Mid-Staffordshire, the Vale of Glamorgan, Langbaurgh and Monmouth—the people of Britain have spoken clearly about which party they want to see in government.

Mr. Soames: That may be true, but the hon. Gentleman can only whistle in the wind about by-election results.

What of Labour policy? It seems to me to be a succession of formulae, designed to enable people who differ profoundly to persuade themselves that they are, in every respect and in each regard, in total agreement. Labour's policies are not only unsatisfactory but in a lamentable state of deficiency. The intellecutal left in Britain is completely clapped out and impoverished. As Robert Harris, who is no friend of the Tory party, pointed out in The Sunday Times:

"The truth is that Labour—in terms of intellecutal activity, as measured by numbers of publications—is perilously close to brain dead in this country."

Mr. Skinner: We have had that already.

Mr. Soames: It is worth repeating. That view echoes those of many socialists who have made similar statements in recent years. They show that the failure of socialism in many countries has left the democratic socialists in western Europe with few ideas and models for inspiration. As my right hon. Friend the Member for Bath (Mr. Patten), the chairman of the Conservative party, said at the party conference:

"Socialism, a clapped out relic of the industrial turmoil of the last century, hobbles on its Zimmer frame into the sunset. Unelectable if they embrace the principles of socialism, a cause despised abroad, they want to claim at home that it has nothing whatsoever to do with them."

Let us be plain about what remains at the heart of the new, glossy, red-rose modern Labour party. There remains at the core of it an extremely disagreeable and dangerous body of people who regard success prosperity and patriotism as major obstacles to their wicked and subversive objectives. They may cut off a few Militant twigs in Liverpool and Coventry, but the roots are strong, vigorous and virile, and they extend through every constituency in the land. Those people are a powerful and sinister influence in the Labour party.

What of the leader of the Labour party—the fount of socialist inspiration in this country? In an article the other day, George Wills wrote:

"Neil Kinnock started as George Lansbury, and is trying to become Harold Wilson—without the integrity of the one, or the intelligence of the other. Underneath the pulpit cant, he is a trifler and an opportunist. Rarely has mouth depended so little on brain. A Kinnock Government would be a lurch into frivolity—"

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. I counsel caution. The hon. Gentleman cannot get away with putting words into the mouth of another which, if he used them himself, would be deemed to be unparliamentary.

Mr. Soames: I am not quite sure whether I understand that, Mr. Deputy Speaker,

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman cannot seek refuge in quoting words which, if he had used them himself, the Chair would have deemed them to be unparliamentary. He is dangerously near to doing that Mr. Soames: Oh.

Mr. Skinner: You are just beginning to get through to the hon. Gentleman now, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Soames: Indeed. The article says:

"A Kinnock Government would be a lurch into frivolity, at a crucial moment for NATO and for Britain's economic prospects. We would quickly discover that we had never had a Prime Minister so . . . intellectually ill-equipped for the job."

Amusing and articulate the right hon. Gentleman can be, but he is scarred with more than a streak of left-wing envy——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman has disregarded what I said. It should be clear to him and to the whole House that if any Member sought to impugn the integrity of another and make discourteous remarks about him, those remarks could easily be attributed to any man in the street. The hon. Member could then claim in his protection that he was merely quoting the views of others.

Mr. Soames: I am not attempting to impugn anyone's integrity, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I was merely quoting a newspaper article about the Leader of the Opposition. Amusing and articulate as the right hon. Gentleman can be, he is scarred with more than a streak of left-wing envy and spite. We have only to see the Labour party in the House to realise how cosmetic are those much-vaunted reforms both as to policy and to structure.

Now we come to the issues. What about Labour industrial policy? There is a vital connection between confidence and industry's willingness to invest. In my constituency—an area which over the years has benefited enormously from the encouragement of the enterprise economy, although it is having a difficult time now in the recession—a number of big, important companies are delaying investment decisions out of pure fear of a possible Labour Administration. That is being repeated throughout the length and breadth of the land.

Industry has always accepted the Conservative Government's priorities because they have always been made plain. They are the encouragement of enterprise, the control of inflation, improvements in industrial competitiveness, and a radical increase in incentives. All that would be put at threat by a socialist Government. There would be burgeoning bureaucracy, inefficiency and political extremism—those are the hallmarks of Labour economic policy. What is good for Britain is bad for the Labour party, yet the language of socialist denunciation sounds daily more idiotic and out of place.

What of Labour's programme of public expenditure? Whichever way one adds it up, it amounts to a substantially more costly programme. To attempt to increase provision simply by increasing state spending, financed by higher taxation or borrowing, may be tempting in the short run, but would soon involve reversing the economic policies that have brought us the steady growth without which we would become less competitive, poorer individually and, in the long run, less able to pay for public services—quite apart from our lack of ability to compete in the rest of the world. To my mind, the electorate is unlikely to be seduced by promises of higher public expenditure and by a raft of promises that cannot possibly be delivered without substantially higher taxation.

What about law and order? Can we ever trust the Labour party with the solemn care of law and order? What of its record on law and order during the miners' strike?

Mr. Skinner: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Paul Boateng (Brent, South): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Soames: No.

Mr. Skinner rose——

Mr. Boateng rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Mr. Soames.

Mr. Soames: The crucial question is this: how much does the Labour party care for the law and how much do Labour Members value order when it stands in the way of something that they themselves want? Inconvenient colleagues are betrayed and dropped out of the side door. Trivia, irrelevance and implausibility are the hallmarks of Labour policy on law and order.

On defence, Labour has not even a credible hint of a policy. The Leader of the Opposition has already said that he could countenance no circumstances in which he would use the nuclear deterrent. The whole point of the nuclear deterrent, which is that it must be credible as to its use, has been thrown out of the window at a stroke.

Mr. Skinner: The hon. Gentleman has the cheek to talk about law and order when his Government are refusing to prosecute B & Q and many other big traders who hand over money to the Tory party. In addition, when the Government were elected 12 years ago, there were three prisoners in every cell. Now we have had God knows how many Home Secretaries, there are three prisoners on every roof, and the IRA is running Brixton prison. The Government were supposedly elected to set the people free but the prisoners got out.

Mr. Soames: I knew that it would be a mistake to give way to the hon. Gentleman. The House will wish to know that today is also the anniversary of the birthday of Dr. Johnson, who once said that one should never make way for a fool. I regret having done so.

We avow ourselves against socialism. We are against its uniformity, its ugliness, its ordinariness, its complexities, its limitations, its rigidity, its institutionalism, its banality, its ready-made ideas, its hypocrisy, its routine, its severity, and its prejudice. Above all, we are against it because of its incompetence and inefficiency and because of the great harm that it has done over the years to the economic and industrial standing of our nation.

Socialism has been a melancholy story of indecision, miscalculation and ineptitude. From the Labour party we hear nothing much but a judicious blend of prejudice, ignorance and, from Manchester, Gorton, menace. Never before has the Labour party approached the electorate with such self-seeking, superficial and ignorant views and it will not win.

When Pope Innocent X saw the terms of the treaty of Westphalia, he called them

> "Null, void, invalid, iniquitous, unjust, damnable, reprobate, inane and empty of meaning for all time."

Such is socialism, and it is dead as a result.

12.48 pm

Mr. Gerald Bermingham (St. Helens, South): This morning, we have been entertained by three Conservative Members who, with cant, venom and spite, raised their voices against socialism without even knowing what it meant. Innuendoes and allegations have been made, often without any foundation or a single ounce of truth, as the hon. Member for Luton, North will certainly learn to his cost before the day is out.

Mr. David Evans: Who?

Hon. Members: Welwyn Hatfield.

Mr. Bermingham: That just goes to show: there are so many Conservative seats around London with empty voices speaking for them that it is easy to get mixed up.

The fourth Conservative Member to contribute to the debate was the hon. Member for Crawley (Mr.Soames). It is probable that he has not, since his prep school days or his first year at Eton, used so many big words in one speech. He had to read them, of course. He would not have been able to remember them. What did they all mean at the end of the day?

Mr. Boateng: Precious little.

Mr. Bermingham: That is right. I thank my hon. Friend.

Mr. Skinner: The hon. Member for Crawley is educated beyond his intelligence.

Mr. Bermingham: It is necessary to have some intelligence to get a first.

I shall not speak for long but, first, I shall refer to the motion. It would be a good idea if someone did that. It is in the name of the hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans). The first part of it reads:

"To call attention to the failures of socialism".

We have not had a socialist Government for about 12 years, but what was happening in the economy at that time? I recall that the secondary banks went bust in 1974, but that was when a Conservative Government were in office. We must never forget that. I recall development companies going bust. That happened when a Conservative Government were in office. I remember security houses buying out companies and breaking them up.

Mr. Boateng: That happened under a Conservative Government.

Mr. Bermingham: Yes, another Conservative Government.

Mr. Boateng: Those are their successes!

Mr. Bermingham: Indeed.

As I have said, we have not had a Labour Government for 12 years. But what have we had during the past 12 years? I intervened in the speech of the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris) and posed three questions. The hon. Gentleman told me that the Conservative party was the party of low taxation. Either every economic commentator has it wrong and the hon. Gentleman has it right, or he has it wrong and the economic commentators have it right. I think that my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith), who sits on the Opposition Front Bench, will confirm that overall average taxation has increased in the past 12 years.

Mr. Chris Smith indicated assent.

Mr. Bermingham: In 1979, the Conservative Government told us that they would never touch value added tax. It was 8 per cent. in those days. It is now 17·5 per cent. Unless I am unintelligent that means that VAT has increased.

I seem to recall that in 1979 capital gains tax was 30 per cent. It is now 40 per cent. I accept that certain death duties have been reduced, but property prices have risen to meet the lower levels of duty. I understand that national insurance has increased from 6 to 9 per cent. Those are all examples of taxes increasing. Over the same period the level of taxation overall has increased.

The unfairest increase in tax of them all is that of VAT. That is because it hits the ordinary person in the street. It is a tax on what people buy. Whether someone is a rich man or a poor man, he still has to buy food, clothes and furniture. He still has to put socks on his feet and to wear shoes. I suppose that the difference is that rich men buy more shoes than poor men. Rich men buy more clothes than poor men. In my constituency, there are people who cannot afford to buy clothes in the shops. They have to go to bring-and-buy sales or jumble sales. Those are the places where they get their clothes.

There were about 20,000 people working in the glass industry in my constituency 12 years ago. There are now only 8,000. The rate of unemployment in my constituency 12 years ago was 6 or 7 per cent. The most recent figure that I have seen—it is the product of all the adjusted, moveable and variable methods that the Government use nowadays to calculate unemployment—is 10·4 per cent.

All these events have taken place under a successful Conservative Government, so this Administration would have us believe. I dread to think what would happen to St. Helens under an unsuccessful Conservative Government. I know what would happen to it under a successful Labour Government. We would not have unemployment standing at 10·4 per cent. We would start building things again—houses, for example. It is a little, old-fashioned idea to build houses.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Will the hon. Gentleman confirm that under every socialist Government since 1929 unemployment has doubled, except for one socialist Government under which it increased by 50 per cent?

Mr. Bermingham: That may be historically correct, but the hon. Gentleman must, in turn, remember that just before the 1979 election about 1 million people were unemployed. I understand that now about 2·4 million are unemployed so unless my arithmetic is terribly wrong, the second figure is almost 250 per cent. of the former. Does the hon. Gentleman call that success? Those figures are the fiddled figures—according to the straight figures there is an underlying trend of another 2 million who do not have a job and who are no longer registered. Hon. Members may laugh, but I can take them round St. Helens and show them people who have been out of work for 10 years or more and who are no longer on the register because they have been "retired early". It is a bit sick to retire people early in their 40s and 50s—it is a sign not of success but of abject failure.

Before the hon. Gentleman intervened, I was saying that we shall begin to build houses again. Hundreds of thousands of homeless people are sleeping rough. I do not disagree with the right to buy and I can tell the Minister that Sheffield city council was building starter homes for sale in the 1970s. They were built with public funds on public land and were sold locally, so the Conservatives should not tell us that we do not know about the right to buy.

It would be nice if local authorities were allowed to use their money to build houses again, whether to sell or to rent or to help the housing associations. All those options are fine but when one starts to build houses one needs glass, piping and bricks—Ibstock Brick and Pilkington are in my constituency—and we need to get those industries going again. The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry——

Mr. Chris Smith: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I apologise for interrupting my hon. Friend the Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) in his important speech, but I have just received some important information which should be raised on a point of order.

In his introductory speech, the hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans) made an accusation against my right hon. Friend the Leader of the Opposition. He said that he had been informed that Mr. Robert Maxwell had made available to my right hon. Friend a red Jaguar car and a plane during the election campaign of 1987. The hon. Gentleman will recall that I challenged him at the time about the veracity of his allegation. It appears that he was merely repeating an item which appeared in The Sunday Telegraph last Sunday. I understand that my right hon. Friend has taken up the matter through his solicitors, has pointed out to The Sunday Telegraph that there is no truth whatsoever in either of the allegations and that The Sunday Telegraph will be putting the matter right this Sunday.

In those circumstances, I hope and trust that the hon. Gentleman who made the allegations at the outset of the debate will now have the courtesy to withdraw them immediately.

Mr. David Evans: If the allegations are untrue, I withdraw them. There is no problem.

Mr. Smith: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The hon. Member must accept the undeniable fact that the allegations that he and The Sunday Telegraph made are completely untrue. I hope that the hon. Gentleman will not qualify his withdrawal but will withdraw the remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not for me to judge where the truth lies, but I think that if the hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield, (Mr. Evans) were to make a less qualified withdrawal of his remarks, it might avoid the necessity of having to return to these matters again.

Mr. Evans: Unreservedly I withdraw the remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Bermingham rose——

Mr. Don Dixon (Jarrow): Although the hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans) withdrew his slanderous remarks unreservedly, he has not had the courtesy to apologise to the House for telling what was obviously a blatant lie. I raised a point of order earlier, when you were not in the Chair, about the—[HON. MEMBERS: "Withdraw."] He has already accepted that it was a lie and withdrawn it. I raised a point of order about the number of civil servants in the civil servants' Box for private Members motions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. On the second and lesser matter, we do not refer to people who are outside the Chamber—I am not aware of their existence. What is more important, I am not sure whether the hon. Member for Jarrow (Mr. Dixon) was suggesting that the substance of the newspaper article amounted to a blatant lie, or whether he was saying that the hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans) uttered a blatant lie. If it was the latter, the hon. Member for Jarrow must withdraw.

Mr. Dixon: Could I put it this way, he repeated a lie which appeared in The Sunday Telegraph. When your predecessor was in the Chair I raised a point of order because during a debate on private Members' motions some time ago, the present Home Secretary had someone from Tory central office sitting in that Box and we had to get them shifted. That is the reason I raised the matter this morning.

On a further point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Immediately after that Member made his speech—[HON. MEMBERS: "Honourable Member"]—there is nothing honourable about him—he immediately went to see the civil servants from the Department of Trade and Industry. He happens to be a Parliamentary Private Secretary to a Minister at the DTI. I wondered whether the DTI were feeding Tory Back Benchers with this sort of——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Those are not matters for me. We really should move on.

Mr. Bermingham rose——

Mr. Boateng: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It pains one to have to mention this issue, but one is bound to say that if there were a case of a member of Conservative central office sitting in the civil servants' Box, feeding Tory Members with lies——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am not prepared either to contemplate or to rule upon any hypothetical matters.

Mr. Bermingham rose——

Mr. Alan Meale (Mansfield): Further to the point of order raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Jarrow (Mr. Dixon). Would it not be appropriate for the hon. Member involved to apologise to the House for the error of his ways because——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans) made an unqualified withdrawal of the remark that he made. That should satisfy the House.

Mr. Bermingham: Would anyone else like a point of order before I continue?

We need houses, and building them would put people back to work, thus increasing the number of people with jobs, which would increase the general wealth of the country. That would mean more moneys would be available for taxation, even if it were to stay at the old 1979 rate. One of the interesting aspects of income tax is that the higher it goes, the less people pay. I am not in favour of high taxation, as my party knows only too well.

If there is greater wealth in the country greater tax revenue would be available and we would be able to do many of the things that we want done. We would be able to have schools with books in them, hospital beds and operations. It would not be a case of people waiting months for a hip operation, as happens in my constituency. How do you tell a 65-year-old woman that she cannot have a hip operation for 18 months because there is no bed available, and expect her to have quality of life? That is what happens. We all know from our postbags and surgeries that that is happening throughout the country. Waiting lists have got longer. I concede that efforts are being made to reduce them, but how is it being done? One can get the operation next week if one can pay for it.

An 85-year-old constituent informed me that she was told that if she paid £3,000 she could have a hip operation; if she did not, she would have to wait for a year. It is surprising what a letter from me to the area health authority did on her behalf—I do not claim any credit. Suddenly, the waiting time went down and she did not have to pay. That is the sort of land we live in.

One of my favourite gripes is banks. We are having to pay exorbitant rates of interest. The present base rate is 10·5 per cent. By the time that one pays the bank back it is not 10·5 per cent. because some banks, for example Lloyds, run a "privileged" account with interest at 1·4 per cent. per month. Even on my arithmetic that is nearly 18 per cent.—on a base rate of 10 per cent. Other banks, such as Barclays, are running at 2, 3 or 4 per cent. over base, depending on their agreement with the customer. How can small seed-corn industries invest when the effective repayment rate is about 15 or 16 per cent? Such companies must pay those interest rates and then start to repay the capital. With such rates, companies cannot afford to invest, which explains the decline in investment.

I am glad that the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry is here, because my next point is a personal gripe. The Conservative party is the party of privatisation. "It will work better," it said. About 18 months ago, in an magnanimous gesture—an inspirational move, they thought—the Government sold four skill centres to a man, but not for money; they gave him £2·1 million. One of those skill centres is in St. Helens and it employs 28 people. Within 18 months, that man had gone bust. We shall probably never know where the £2·1 million went to. The skill centre that we needed in St. Helens has gone—and the money with it.

When the centre was privatised, civil servants were told, "Your pension and rights will not be touched." That has not been honoured. Magnanimously, although they have not gone far enough, the Government have said that if the workers receive no redundancy from the liquidation they will help a bit. That is not good enough. There is a moral duty on the Government. The local authority wanted to takeover the skill centre. Luckily, with the help of the St. Helens Trust and others, moves are being made to enable it to do so. I pay tribute to the local authority and the St. Helens Trust. That is the true cost of privatisation.

Local authorities bought land for the water companies when they were responsible for running those companies before 1974. The money that was realised when the water companies were floated did not go back to the people but went into sustained Government spending. The real profits will be made when the water companies start to sell that land for housing, tourism and development. The people will not see the benefit of that. Those who could afford to buy shares will see the benefit, but they are not the ordinary people who are finding it difficult to make ends meet and who stand in the dole queues in St. Helens and queue up at the jumble sales for clothes.

Twelve years has taught me one thing: 12 years ago, the rich had a lot, but 12 years later they have a hell of a lot more. Twelve years ago, the poor had something, but 12 years later they are very much poorer. The motion is not an attack on socialism. It does not even discuss socialism. It tries to justify 12 wasted years, and I say to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, "Your time is up mate. Put your card in and we will see how you do in the dole queue after the election, when your party has the courage to call it."

1.8 pm

Mr. Chris Smith (Islington, South and Finsbury): I should begin by congratulating the hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans) on his success in drawing first place in the ballot. I cannot congratulate him on the risible content of the motion or on the intellectual vacuity of the speech that accompanied it. I am glad that the hon. Gentleman put the record straight on one extremely important matter that he mentioned in his speech.

Let us consider the motion piece by piece. It says:

"That this House notes the success of Government policies over the past 12 months".

I am immediately tempted to ask the obvious question, what on earth has happened in the past 12 years, according to the hon. Gentleman? We have had a Conservative Administration not just for the past 12 months, but for twelve and a half years.

They have been years of unparalleled failure in our economic and social life. Let us consider one or two of the basis facts of those years. Growth under the Conservative Government has been lower than it has been under any Government since the second world war. Between 1979 and 1991, the average annual growth rate was 1·75 per cent.—the lowest average figure achieved by any post-war Government. The growth rate has not only been lower than it has been under any previous Government in Britain, but lower than that of all of our European competitors. Between 1979 and 1991, Britain has become sixth from the bottom of the growth league of the 24 OECD countries.

The Conservatives have caused the two worst recessions since the 1930s. Manufacturing investment is now lower than it was when the Conservatives took office and is still falling. Britain has the worst manufacturing investment record in the European Community. The level of unemployment is now more than double what it was under the previous Labour Government. The interest rates achieved under the Conservatives have reached record levels. Under previous Governments in the post-war period interest rates were at 12 per cent. or above for 26 months only. Under this Government interest rates have been at 12 per cent. or more for 60 months. Therefore, we have had those high interest rates for twice as long as the rates reached by all the other post-war Governments.

Since 1979 the top 1 per cent. of taxpayers has received more than twice as much through income tax cuts as the bottom 50 per cent. That is the record of twelve and a half years of Conservative Government. Therefore, we will take no lectures from Conservatives about economic success or failure.

Let us consider the motion on its own terms. Let us lay aside some of the things that have occurred in the past 12 years. Let us consider what has happened in the past 12 months—the period of the John Major premiership. Unemployment has risen by 768,000 which means that 3,000 people have joined the dole queue every working day. Since November 1990, 45,000 businesses have failed, 200 per working day. In the past year, 85,000 homes have been repossessed, 300 per working day. The gross domestic product has fallen by 2·3 per cent. Manufacturing output has fallen by 5·3 per cent. and manufacturing investment is down by 12 per cent.

That is the record of the past 12 months. I am extremely surprised that the hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield failed to mention any of those basic underlying indicators of failure and incompetence on the part of the Government when he introduced his motion.

Mr. Den Dover (Chorley): I appreciate that the past 12 to 18 months have been difficult for the economy and that unemployment has risen nationally. Is the hon. Gentleman aware, however, that in Chorley, in Lancashire, in the past two months the level of unemployment has fallen—even when that level has been seasonally adjusted? Does not that show that the high interest rate policy has squeezed inflation out of the economy and has brought about the first signs of improvement in it?

Mr. Smith: I am glad that the hon. Gentleman decided to join our discussions. He ignores the fact that unemployment is still rising. The signs of recovery which he pretends to see are few and far between. No doubt—I raised this point earlier—he will be aware that the inflation figures, which show a rise in the headline rate from 3·7 to 4·3 per cent., reveal how tawdry is the Government's claim to have conquered inflation. It is clear that they have done no such thing. The underlying inflation rate is rising, not just the headline rate.

Mr. Jacques Arnold: Will the hon. Gentleman please tell the House when, under the last Labour Government, inflation was brought down to that level?

Mr. Smith: Perhaps the hon. Gentleman wants to tell me what happened to inflation when the Conservatives took office in 1979. There was deliberate inflation, created by increases in gas and electricity prices and the imposition on the British people of a near doubling of VAT. I shall not take any lectures from the hon. Gentleman about inflation, given that the Government raised inflation, then savagely squeezed it out of the economy and then allowed it to rise again.

Mr. Arnold: I intervene again to ask the hon. Gentleman whether he will specifically answer my question: when, under the last Labour Government, did inflation fall to anything like the levels about which he is now complaining? Indeed, will he tell us the lowest levels that they ever reached?

Mr. Smith: As the hon. Gentleman will be aware, when Labour left office in 1979, inflation was at the European average. Under the Conservative Government, it has been consistently above the European average. Only in the past few months has it been brought down to approximately, in headline terms, the European average. It now appears to be rising again.

The Conservatives subjected this country to a recession at the start of the 1980s, followed by an unsustainable boom and then a recession at the end of that decade. The pattern is familiar—it is exactly the same pattern as the Maudling dash for growth, the Barber boom and the Lawson credit explosion. Each time the Conservatives have had the stewardship of our economy, they have gone from boom to bust. If they are permitted to have that stewardship again, that is precisely what will happen again.

The motion proclaims that the Government have reduced inflation, whereas it appears to be rising, and reduced interest rates, whereas interest rates have been consistently higher under this Government than any previous post-war Government. Instead of proclaiming those untruths, the Government should be turning their attention to the real needs of our economy—for a proper framework of macro-economic stability, coupled with the supply side measures on training, research and development, investment, infrastructure and regional policy which we have been advocating consistently.

After making a fool of itself on the economy, the motion

"congratulates the Government for protecting the interests of this country abroad".

Let us consider the outcome of the discussions at Maastricht and the deal that the Government have brought back. It is a bad deal for Britain. It has left this country isolated on the issue of economic and monetary union. This is the only EC country that has not yet decided whether economic and monetary union is desirable. The uncertainty that that will create in the coming years will be bad for our economy, for inward investment and for the forward-planning needs of business and industry. The Government have forgone any realistic chance of securing the location of the new central European bank in Britain.

Mr. Neil Hamilton (Tatton): Big deal.

Mr. Smith: It is a big deal. The location of that bank in Britain would have substantial advantages for our financial services industry, which is a vital sector of our national economy. Under the Conservative Government it is almost certain that that bank will not be located here and in the long term that will have adverse effects on our financial services industry. It is clear from their response that Conservative Members are not at all worried about that dire prospect.

At Maastricht the Government rejected the social charter. That means that they have deprived British workers of rights that will pertain to all workers in the rest of the Community. In the past couple of days the Prime Minister has talked much nonsense about the social charter being some sort of licence to strike, a return to what he claims would be the bad old industrial relations days. Of course it is nothing of the sort. The Prime Minister should have read the charter.

Mr. Jacques Arnold: Has the hon. Gentleman read the comments of his socialist colleague, Mr. Delors, who says that, as a result of Britain's rejection of the social charter, this country will be paradise for Japanese investment? Would he care to comment on the thousands of jobs that will result?

Mr. Smith: For once Mr. Delors is wrong. The hon. Gentleman should read the social charter and the annex 4 document which has been agreed by the remaining 11 members of the Community and which our Government rejected. That agreement specifically rules out areas of concern which the Prime Minister appears to be claiming are included in paragraph 6 of article 118 to the annex. It states:

"The provisions of this Article shall not apply to pay, the right of association, the right to strike or the right to impose lock-outs."

The Prime Minister is wrong in trying to claim that the social charter covers such items. It does not. They are specifically excluded. What is included in the social charter is a range of items that I should have thought any self-respecting Government would wish to endorse. It includes equality between men and women with regard to labour market opportunities and treatment at work. It says:

"The Commission shall have the task of promoting the consultation of management and labour at Community level and shall take any relevant measure to facilitate their dialogue by ensuring balanced support for the parties."

The social charter also includes items relating to the improvement of the working environment to protect workers' health and safety. Moreover, it includes the provision that [Mr. Smith]

"each member state shall ensure that the principle of equal pay for male and female workers for equal work is applied." Those specific items are included in the social charter: consultation rights for employees, an equal balance between partners in industry, equal pay for equal work as between men and women and the right to equal treatment for women workers. Those are the provisions which the Prime Minister said were so outrageous that he had to object, throughout a 14-hour negotiating period, to ensure that Britain did not benefit from them.

I make it absolutely clear, for the benefit of the House, that a Labour Government will join the other 11 Community countries in signing the social charter. What this Government have been about is not protecting the interests of the British worker; they have been about selling the rights of British employees down the river.

The motion applauds the Government for initiating "reforms which will improve the National Health Service". Which reforms is the hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield talking about? Is he talking about the one in five acute beds in national health service hospitals that have been closed since 1979? Is he talking about the fact that there are 300 fewer national health service hospitals now than there were in 1979? Or is he referring to the fact that hospital waiting lists have grown by 50 per cent., with a quarter of all patients waiting for treatment for over a year? Or he is, perhaps, referring to the opting out of hospitals which has been encouraged so assiduously by the Government—the opting out of hospitals which neither the patients nor the local communities affected want to happen? Or is the hon. Gentleman talking about the charge now levied for eye tests, which has caused the number of people having eye tests to drop by a full third, almost certainly meaning that 200,000 people have serious eye conditions which, as a result, have gone undetected? And for what purpose? The Government have saved £90 million as a result of that change, the equivalent of one and a half year's worth of private health insurance tax relief. What an appalling state of priorities for the Government to adopt.

It comes very ill from the mouth of the hon. Gentleman when he says that the Government's reforms will improve the national health service. The Government's reforms are damaging it. The evidence is there, in the daily experience of people throughout the country.

Mr. Dover: The hon. Gentleman has concentrated on the reforms during the past year or two. One of the most fantastic reforms, which occurred about eight years ago, was the reorganisation of the health service. Lancashire area health authority was abandoned on that level, doing away with costs and bureaucracy. Chorley and South Ribble health authority then came into being. It comes under the regional health authority, but could opt out. That reform means that we now have local control; we are not the poor relation under the old Preston health authority or the Lancashire area health authority. Our spend has gone up from £5 million to £53 million over those eight years of local coverage and that is what the people want. The reform giving power to local people in response to local wishes has been a super deal for the Chorley area.

Mr. Smith: The hon. Gentleman referred to local control and response to local wishes. I would take it a great deal more easily from him if there were a Government in office—which there is not—who considered local wishes in relation to the opting out of hospitals. I know of no case, when local people have been consulted through a ballot, referendum or opinion test, where they have supported the opting out of hospitals in their areas.

The motion congratulates the Government on "improving social security payments". I invite the hon. Member for Welwyn Hatfield to tell that to my constituents who are living on income support. They come to my surgery week in and week out saying that they find it impossible to live on the benefits that have been so meagrely made available by the Government. I invite him to tell that to the pensioners who, because the link between pensions and earnings was broken by the Government in 1979, have seen the value of their pensions drop by £14·55p for a single person and £23 for a couple. I invite him to tell that to those applicants who have to go to the social fund to apply, like Dickensian supplicants, for cash-limited funds so that they can afford the basic necessities of life. I invite him to tell his story to the homeless people who are camped out on the streets of our capital city in the middle of winter, many of them consigned there because of the Government's restrictions on benefit payments.

Let us consider what has happened to the poor in this country during the past 12 years. In 1987—the last date for which figures appear to be available—2,890,000 people, 5 per cent. of the population, were living below the supplementary benefit level. We must remember that that is the basic minimum that even this Government accept that people need to have for the bare minimum of a decent existence. Five per cent. of the people of this country were living below that basic minimum threshold and that included 490,000 children—4 per cent. of all children.

In addition, 10,200,000 people—19 per cent. of the population—were on or below the supplementary benefit level. They were either at or below the basic minimum. Twenty-one per cent. of all children were also at or below that level. Those are the actual figures that the hon. Gentleman should take into account. For his motion to refer to improving social security payments is an insult to the millions of people for whom social security payments manifestly have not been improved under this Government.

The text of the motion, like the speeches from Conservative Members, is imbued with a fundamental misunderstanding and misrepresentation of what democratic socialism is all about. It is about three important fundamental principles: first, a recognition that the market system is fallible and needs to be tempered by regulation and enabled by Government assistance; secondly, an understanding of the place of the individual in society and of the fact that the dignity of the individual and the welfare of the community as a whole are totally interdependent and each must enhance the other; and, thirdly, a realisation that opportunity must be available to all, not just to the few.

Let me dwell for a moment on these three important principles, starting with the market system. Conservative Members have spoken about what has happened in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. They appear to be labouring under the benighted notion that what persisted in those countries was some form of socialism. It was not. It was state centralism in the same way as much despotism round the world has been. The 1980s have seen the end of two competing ideologies. The ideology that the state can and should run everything has been shown comprehensively and rightly to bring neither prosperity nor happiness to the people on whom it was imposed. The competing ideology —that the free market can achieve everything and all that one needs to do is to lift off the constraints of the state and everything will be well—has also been demonstrated, where it has been tried, including here and the United States, to have deep fundamental flaws.

The successful economies of the world in the past 10 years have been those which have found the right mix between private enterprise on the one hand and state assistance and regulation on the other.

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and President of the Board of Trade (Mr. Peter Lilley): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Smith: Ah, the great free enterpriser of the Cabinet wishes to intervene.

Mr. Lilley: Out of courtesy, will the hon. Gentleman repeat his repudiation of socialism for the benefit of the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner)?

Mr. Smith: My hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) has been consistent in his opposition, over decades, to what purported to be socialism in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, but which has been no such thing.

The second and fundamental belief to which I referred was the importance of the idea of community. The former Prime Minister was fond of saying that there is no such thing as society.

Mr. Skinner: I did not catch what was said earlier, but as my name has been mentioned I should put it on the record that I have always taken the view, contrary to the opinions of some Tories, that what took place in eastern Europe was not socialism. People who have been here have probably heard me say that before. There is no problem on that score.

I shall take the opportunity to raise another important point about what is happening under the authority of the Government. I have just been in the Tea Room and a young worker there has had £29 deducted from her pay by the authorities of the House, supposedly for not clocking in and out properly. Yet that person had been working an extra hour in the morning—coming in at 8 o'clock although she was not due to start until 9 o'clock. People who do not clock in at all——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman must realise that that does not arise out of the motion.

Mr. Skinner: The authorities of the House have deducted £29 from that woman's wages. That is an important matter and it is time that that money was repaid. It is a scandal to treat a low-paid worker in that way.

Mr. Smith: My hon. Friend has done the House two services. First, he has confirmed exactly what I said about his views and mine—and those of our hon. Friends—on what purported to be socialism in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. Secondly, he has drawn our attention to one specific consequence of the Government's economic policy over the past 12 years: some people are being badly treated by their employers and frequently receive wages that are far too low.

I was talking about the second fundamental principle —the importance of the community. The former Prime Minister was fond of saying that there was no such thing as society and the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris) came close to saying much the same earlier in the debate. There is such a thing as society. It is extremely important that the Government realise that and take into account the needs of the community as a whole as well as those of individuals.

William Godwin's treatise, "Enquiry Concerning Political Justice"—I realise that political justice is a foreign concept to Conservative Members—was written in 1793. It contains these words, which are still relevant today:

"Democracy restores to man a consciousness of his value, teaches him, by the removal of authority and oppression, to listen only to the suggestions of reason"— would that that were true of Conservative Members. Godwin said that democracy

"gives him confidence to treat all other men with frankness and simplicity, and induces him to regard them no longer as enemies against whom to be upon his guard, but as brethren whom it becomes him to assist".

That text could stand as a fundamental tenet of the democratic socialism which my party espouses and which will guide a Labour Government.

Mr. Soames rose——

Mr. Smith: I shall not give way now, because time is marching on and I know that the Secretary of State wishes to speak.

The third fundamental principle was the need for opportunity for all. The Government are fond of the idea that one need only look after the people at the top of the tree and somehow the condition of the people at the bottom will thereby be improved. That has not happened; it does not happen. The trickle-down theory, as it is called, is a fallacy. The deteriorating quality of our public services and deterioration in the standard of living of many people are a testimony to that.

I urge the Government to understand what R. H. Tawney, a great man, who formed much of the thinking of the Labour party in Britain, wrote in his book "Equality":

"A society is free in so far, and only in so far, as, within the limits set by nature, knowledge and resources, its institutions and policies are such as to enable all its members"—

note "all its members"—

"to grow to their full stature, to do their duty as they see it, and—since liberty should not be too austere—to have their fling when they feel like it. In so far as the opportunity to lead a life worthy of human beings is needlessly confined to a minority, not a few of the conditions applauded as freedom would be more properly denounced as privilege. Action which causes such opportunities to be more widely shared is, therefore, twice blessed. It not only subtracts from inequality, but adds to freedom."

That is the basic belief of democratic socialists. The widening of opportunity to everyone is what we in the Labour party are all about and what we in the Labour Government will be all about. Those are the fundamental beliefs of democratic socialism, which sees society as a whole as well as a disparate collection of proud individuals. It is a philosophy which understands how our economy can grow, how our public services can be improved and how those least able to fend for themselves can, for once, be recognised as the fully fledged citizens that they are. Government's purpose must be to support all the people, not just a few. That is the philosophy that the British people will support at the coming general election.

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (Mr. Peter Lilley): I commend my hon. Friend for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans) for securing the debate and I congratulate him and my other hon. Friends on their excellent contributions to it. My hon. Friend is well known for his kid-glove approach to debating, but his demolition of the Leader of the Opposition was made all the more effective by the delicacy and gentleness with which he approached it. He certainly made it absolutely clear that, if the Leader of the Opposition were ever Prime Minister, we would not have a credible nuclear deterrent in Britain. I can assure my hon. Friend of one thing, however: the Leader of the Opposition remains the credible ultimate deterrent to voting Labour, and we can continue to rely on that. —

A notable feature of the debate has been the conspicuous absence of my shadow, the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown). At his party conference this year, he concluded by urging the Labour party to be "confident most of all in our enduring socialist values". Today, we have had a debate on socialism and the hon. Gentleman is not confident enough to come and defend his enduring socialist values. I am sure that the whole House will miss the little ray of gloom that he habitually casts on our deliberations and will welcome the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith), who is brighter in every respect.

The hon. Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun (Mr. McKelvey) made a notable contribution to the debate. It is the first time that I have ever heard an hon. Member filibuster his own motion—in this case, due to come on later today. He refused, in his lengthy contribution, to answer two key questions put to him by my hon. Friends: first, how much would he and his Labour party reduce Scottish representation in the House as a result of their plans and are the Scottish people aware that they will be deprived of that representation, and, secondly, by how much would the burden of taxation on the Scottish people increase as a result of an extra body empowered to raise taxes upon them? I have a great affection for Scotland and, like many English hon. Members, I am proud to be able to claim my little portion of Scottish blood. I should certainly hate the Scots to have to face the proposals without the issues being first clarified.

My hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris) made a fine and witty defence of freedom and enterprise as only he can. He drew on his immense experience in those areas.

The hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan) excited the debate—I think for the first time in recorded memory. That was when he, an ex-leader of an ex-party, exited with a flounce, only to flounce back a short while later. The hon. Gentleman advanced the memorable argument that anyone who did not propose the complete abolition of taxation could not say that the level of tax was a matter of important political principle. For the Government, it is a matter of great importance. That is why we have striven to cut tax rates and oppose the Labour party, which is determined to raise them.

My hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) made a memorable speech which I shall plagiarise frequently. I shall endeavour to give my hon. Friend credit for his many witticisms, which I shall reuse.

The hon. Member for St. Helens (Mr. Bermingham) made an important point when he made the surprising complaint that privatisation proceeds had all been used to sustain Government spending. That is a complaint to which we must plead guilty. We ask ourselves how Labour could sustain public expenditure, let alone increase it, if it is to forgo future proceeds from privatisation.

The hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury accused us of running a pre-election boom. This will be welcome news to many of my right hon. and hon. Friends. I shall let my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer know of the dangers of overheating in Islington, South and Finsbury.

Mr. Chris Smith: The Secretary of State knows that I accused the Government of no such thing. Instead, I accused them of starting the 1990s with a deep recession and with having an irresponsible boom based on credit expansion in the mid-1980s, which was inevitably followed by a further recession. That is the charge that I made. The right hon. Gentleman should address himself to that rather than conjure up a charge that I did not make.

Mr. Lilley: We can consult the official record. I think that we shall find that the hon. Gentleman said that we always have pre-election booms, and that that was the problem.

Socialism is in retreat throughout the world. Countries everywhere are turning to the policies that we pioneered in the 1980s—privatisation, free markets and lower taxes. They are doing it for the best of reasons. They have seen the market, and it works. I have seen that in every country that I have visited over the past 18 months. In Poland, I addressed the Polish Parliament on privatisation on the very day that the Polish Government were taking powers to privatise about 14,000 companies.

In the Guangdong province of China I could see the spectacular developments where free markets have been allowed. Already 2 million jobs have been created, largely by capital from Hong Kong.

Hong Kong provides the most dramatic proof of the success of capitalism and the failure of socialism. Since the Communist revolution, the population of Hong Kong has increased roughly tenfold. Incomes in Hong Kong are now many times higher than those on the mainland. The only difference between China and Hong Kong is that Hong Kong has no natural resources and a free market system.

In India, I was again invited to speak on our economic reforms. The Indians were increasingly conscious that the most damaging part of the British imperial legacy was the belief, which was at its apogee in the United Kingdom at the time that we gave India its independence, that the state could develop a modern industrial economy by intervention, protection and state ownership. India, too, is now abandoning that legacy of socialist imperialism; privatisation, liberalisation and lower taxation are the orders of the day.

In Latin America the pattern is the same. In September I visited Venezuela which is leading the way—it is privatising major industries, cutting taxes, reducing tariffs and moving back into the world economy. As a result, it is one of the fastest growing economies in Latin America.

Finally, last month I had the privilege of representing this country in St. Petersburg at the official celebrations of the demise of communism. It was a glorious day for the Russian people and, as Major Sobchak said in a moving speech in front of the Winter palace:

"After 74 years in the darkness Russia is re-emerging into the light of freedom."

We all welcome that change.

The most painful part of the economic legacy of socialism and of communist control is the fearful cost of transition back to a market economy and bold steps are needed to achieve it. Therefore, it was heartening to hear the mayor of Moscow promising to give flats to tenants absolutely free. Anyone who has seen the quality of Soviet flats would, I think, be bound to observe that the mayor of Moscow probably got the price about right. No doubt some of my hon. Friends think the same may be true of some properties in Labour-run authorities.

Mr. McKelvey: The Secretary of State has taken us through the highways and byways of the world, but he has not commented on housing conditions in Scotland. When there was a Select Committee on Scottish Affairs and when we visited Scotland, we discovered that about 300,000 houses were almost inhabitable because of dampness but the Government refused to give additional money to deal with that.

Mr. Lilley: In his earlier contribution, the hon. Gentleman acknowledged that the Labour party had been averse to home ownership, and in the words of one of my hon. Friends, had merely allowed its hostility to lapse, just as the Leader of the Opposition's membership card for CND lapsed. It is in Scotland that the hostility to private ownership by socialist local authorities has been most intense and until recently half the population in Scotland had the state as its landlord. Now the hon. Gentleman complains that the conditions under which they suffer are worse than those in other parts of the country where free enterprise was able to make a greater contribution. I am happy to say that in Scotland the desire for home ownership—long repressed by socialist councils—is now becoming manifest and sales of council houses have been increasing rapidly.

Western firms can play a part in restoring the Russian economy. I saw in St. Petersburg a splendid example being set by Littlewoods. It has linked up with a Russian clothing company, introduced British design, management and quality standards and opened a Littlewoods store. It is so popular that queues form well before it opens. People in the queue are given a ticket which is itself a valuable object. Demand is so great that each person is allowed to buy only two items and when the doors open, the store is emptied of goods within minutes. Turnover is rising as rapidly as output can be increased—would that more companies from this country followed Littlewoods' example and contributed to the restoration of the Soviet economy from the devastation wrought by socialism.

The list of countries in which socialism is now in retreat and in which free market policies are on the advance is immense. Countries that are privatising, cutting taxes, reducing state intervention and freeing markets include the whole of eastern Europe, all the republics of the former Soviet Union, all continental Latin America, all North America, most of sub-Saharan Africa, most of Asia and all Australasia.

Those that reject privatisation cling to nationalisation and want to extend state intervention are a more select band. In the entire world they comprise only Cuba, North Korea, Libya and the British Labour party.

Mr. McKelvey: Does the right hon. Gentleman not think that it is scandalous that the Cuban economy is being strangled by a country the size of the USA? Why does it not lift the blockade?

Mr. Lilley: The hon. Member's sympathy for his socialist friends does him credit. However, I have made it clear that we shall not enforce, or allow the subsidiaries of American companies to enforce, the American blockade, since we retain our independence in that matter.

Mr. Soames: My right hon. Friend has done an enormous amount to promote the interests of British companies in the Soviet Union and elsewhere. Does he agree that the great difficulty in those countries, as they emerge from the socialist hold around their necks, and what matters most, is enabling them to manage businesses in a sensible manner, which is completely alien to anything that they have been taught? To assist eastern European countries, we need to supply more management training. What steps is my right hon. Friend taking to try to ensure that they receive such training?

Mr. Lilley: My hon. Friend makes a valid and important point. We have established the know-how fund because we recognise that know-how, rather than straight cash, is the important contribution and ingredient that we can offer. Under the fund we have arranged a scheme—especially with St. Petersburg—for about 100 small business men to receive training from Manchester business school, which is very welcome over there.

There are probably other schemes which my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary—who is in overall charge of the know-how fund—would be able to expand upon.

The Labour party is one of that small band of people and institutions in the entire world which remain wedded to the extension of state control and state ownership. In its policy documents this year, the Labour party has reaffirmed its commitment to nationalisation, its rejection of privatisation, its plans to extend the powers of the state, to intervene in industry and to control more of the nation's income.

When I say that socialism is alive in the British Labour party, I should explain that I use the word "live" purely in its technical sense. As Robert Harris—a Labour sympathiser—who has already been quoted in this debate has said:

> "The truth is that Labour—in terms of intellectual activity . . . is perilously close to brain-dead in this country."

I should explain to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that that did not involve any snide reference to the intellectual vitality of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Harris was talking about the demise of magazines. He went on to say—this should be added to the fund of quotations which have emerged during the debate:

> "It is very odd. Sometimes, in the right light, Labour looks more impressive than it has for a generation: disciplined, talented, responsible, well-presented. And then you stand still for a moment and listen and you can hear . . . nothing. It is eery. It is like walking down a street built on a film set: the technicians have put up wonderful frontages, but behind them —thin air."

We are here to debate this important subject and we see row upon row of thin air.

Mr. Harris was referring to the demise of a series of left-wing magazines, culminating in the closure of Marxism Today. I doubt if many of my hon. Friends read it or regret its passing. "Better dead than read" would be their verdict, I suspect.

[Mr. Lilley]

The magazine went out with a splendid drinks party recently. One cynical ex-Marxist suggested that the Communist party might end its search for a new name by calling itself the "Cocktail party." To mark its demise the magazine also produced a final issue which sent a crisp message to all socialists, "The End."

That lack of faith in "our enduring socialist values", as he called them at the party conference, did not stop the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East from writing a moving tribute for the final issue. He wrote:

"Marxism Today . . . never forgot the value of matching imagination and ideas with rigorous analysis, and that will be its lasting contribution."

That tells us a lot about the hon. Member's capacity for imagination and rigorous analysis. An especially penetrating example of it was an article contributed to Marxism Today by the right hon. Member for Islwyn (Mr. Kinnock). He wrote:

"The . . . market system never has and never will produce the plenty necessary to meet human need."

He has since jerked from that extreme position to another, as is his wont.

Labour's presentation has changed, but its policy proposals remain remarkably similar to those advocated in previous manifestos and implemented by previous Labour Governments. All Labour Governments have nationalised at least one industry. Labour is committed to nationalising the water industry and the national grid as priorities.

Mr. Chris Smith: Will the Secretary of State tell us what the Conservative Government of 1970 to 1974 did to Rolls-Royce?

Mr. Lilley: If the only problem with our record that the hon. Member can find occurred between 1970 and 1974, when I was not a candidate for the Conservative party, he is obviously endorsing our position.

Labour is committed to nationalising the water industry and national grid. Those pledges were spelt out this year in "Opportunity Britain", its manifesto document.

All Labour Governments have set up a Government body to intervene, invest in and takeover private companies: first, there was the industrial reconstruction corporation and then the national enterprise board. We know the history of the latter, and of the 102 companies that it took into partial public ownership, 35 were liquidated or failed, 38 were sold at a loss and only 29 returned the taxpayers' cash when they were disposed of.

Labour now promises a national investment bank—an NIB—presumably to take equity stakes, among other things, in private companies. That is nationalisation by the back door.

All previous Labour Governments have increased the proportion of the nation's income that is spent by the state. The commitments in Labour's recent documents have been objectively costed at £35 billion a year. That would take public spending back up to about half the national income. Like all their predecessors, a Labour Government would be committed and obliged to raise taxes.

That all appears in the small print of Labour's policy documents. Voting Labour would lead to the political equivalent of date rape. A Labour Government would do many things to British people to which they would strenuously object, but Labour would then say, "You were asking for this when you invited us back in." We must make people aware of the pledges in the small print of Labour's policy documents if we are to avoid that fate.

Labour assiduously pretends nowadays that it has abandoned socialism or that socialism is not what we always thought it was. It even claims sometimes to have embraced the market, although that did not come up today. If it has changed, we are entitled to ask what brought about that conversion. There are only two possible explanations: it has been convinced either by the success of our policies in transforming the economy since it was last in power or by the success of our policies in winning three successive elections.

There is no doubt that our policies have transformed the economy. In the 1960s and 1970s, Britain was bottom of the growth league in Europe. In the 1980s, we were top of that league and that was the first decade for more than a century when Britain grew faster than France and Germany. The transformation was greatest in areas where we had been weakest, such as industrial relations. In 1979, 29·6 million working days were lost as a result of the disputes and strikes that we inherited from Labour's industrial relations regime. In the past 12 months, fewer than 1 million days were lost through strikes and industrial disputes.

There is no doubt that the transformation is the result of the policies that we have pursued. The transformation of the economy is the result of privatisation, of reducing taxes and of reforming trades union law. Labour consistently denies the facts and the cause. Moreover, had it really been converted to free markets, its policy documents would surely contain some free-market policies.

The Labour party's counterparts in Australia and New Zealand have undergone that conversion. They have adopted free market policies and genuinely abandoned socialism. However, the British Labour party does not advocate privatisation, because it has voted against every privatisation that we have carried out. It does not advocate cutting a single tax rate; it has voted against every tax cut that we have made. The Labour party plan, quite openly, to raise taxes again. It has not supported a single trade union reform. Instead, it is committed to restoring many of the union privileges that we have removed. We may safely conclude that the Labour party's conversion is simply cynical opportunism.

Several hon. Members have reminded the House of the threat posed to pension funds by socialists. I do not want to go into that issue in detail, but they are right. The two previous Labour manifestos threatened to divert pension funds for purposes other than seeking to enhance pensions. The previous Labour Government took the Christmas bonus away from pensioners. All Labour Governments have robbed pensioners by resorting to inflation. Under the previous Labour Government, inflation plucked 27 per cent. from the value of people's savings in a single year. The value of pensioners' fixed incomes were cut by a half during the lifetime of the previous Labour Government. If the Labour party wants to see the unacceptable face of socialism, it should look into the mirror.

The collapse of the Soviet economy has finally discredited socialism. The collapse of the Soviet Union has also surely discredited that other fashionable doctrine, federalism. It has shown that artificial federations inevitably collapse. Nations prefer to govern themselves, not to be governed by each other. How extraordinary that the British Labour party has still not managed to break free from socialism yet it has already half fallen for federalism.

The collapse of socialism has left an intellectual vacuum in the minds, or what passes for the minds, of our left-wing intelligentsia. The concept of federalism has rushed in to fill that void. The Labour party, unable to make the state supreme within the nation, wants to submerge the nation within a supreme super-state.

The excellent deal that my right hon. Friends the Prime Minister, the Foreign Secretary and the Chancellor were able to negotiate at Maastricht would not have been available to a Labour Government. A Labour Government would have signalled their intention to sign any deal on paper. They would have signalled their intention to abandon any power to govern ourselves that might have been requested by our partners. They would have signalled their intention to extend the competence of majority voting into huge areas of our national life. They need not have gone to Maastricht, but could have signed the communiqué when it was telexed to them at the end of the negotiations.

The great paradox is that the Labour party has always been against Britain intervening in other countries' internal affairs, but now it has carried that to the ultimate extreme, because it is against us interfering even in our internal affairs. The issue of the social charter is not just about whether Labour's policies are better or worse than Conservative ones—the British electorate can decide that. The question is whether other countries of Europe should be able to overrule the decision that the British electorate and Parliament make on such matters.

We believe that the British people, through their representatives in this House, should be able to tailor policies on such crucial matters to fit our needs, experience and traditions. This issue is vital, since we cannot and will not go back on the reforms that we introduced to trade union law, and which have been profoundly successful in the past 12 years.

We could not return power to the trade union bosses and go back to the strikes, chaos and inefficiency that marked the Labour party's trade union laws. However, the Labour party want us to hand over responsibility so that we are governed by trade union laws—often foreign trade union laws at that.

Mr. Chris Smith: Would the right hon. Gentleman care to tell me what it is in the social charter agreement which was signed by the other 11 EC countries that in any way accords with what he just said about new powers for trade union leaders?

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Tristan Garel-Jones): It is article 118B.

Mr. Lilley: As my hon. Friend so succinctly puts it, it is article 118B. We believe that the House and the Government should have the right to select and to choose the laws that apply in the British economy. Over the past 12 years, we have amply demonstrated that the laws which we have chosen have done this country a power of good, and we should be reluctant to go back on that.

The agreement, which we have negotiated successfully and in accord with our partners, will achieve what Mr. Delors said that it would achieve—it will help to make this country a paradise for investment. I have ensured that that message will go out to all our commercial attachés throughout the world.

In recent years, we have been successful in making this country more attractive for investment—whether inward investment, domestic investment or investment from other European countries—than any other European country. We intend to retain and to reinforce that position. That is what my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and his colleagues achieved at Maastricht.

The debate has been about socialism—its demise and its end as a credible intellectual force. My hon. Friends' contribution have demonstrated that fact, as have those of the Opposition. The Opposition's paucity—in terms of numbers and of the intellectual content of their speeches—has revealed that the Labour party has indeed, as their friend Robert Harris said, no further intellectual contribution to make to the political debate. The Labour party is certainly not ready to think, let alone to govern. Until the Labour party has re-established its ideas, principles and what it actually stands for, it should not pretend that it will be in a position to take charge of the fate of this nation.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield on his motion and on securing this valuable debate.

2.16 pm

Mr. Jacques Arnold (Gravesham): I pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans) on choosing for debate so timely a subject—the implications of socialism. We have come here not to mourn socialism but to bury it, because socialism has been a pernicious creed which has held much of Europe in its iron grip for 74 years. What has been the cost? It has been economic stagnation, massive pollution and millions of dead. With its stablemate, the national socialists of Germany, it laid waste to much of our continent during the middle of the century.

The peoples of Europe have risen up and we have seen the fall of hundreds of bronze Lenins around eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union, but socialism has left in its wake economic devastation, hunger and famine, social disruption and suspicion of one's neighbours. Look at the position in the former East Germany and one finds a country in which the dreaded Stasi kept a file on almost every citizen. There is suspicion between neighbours and between brother and sister in that country. The peoples of Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia have fought for their freedom and are now fighting for the success of free enterprise. They have been joined by the peoples of the three Baltic republics who are at last free from that shameful deal between national socialists and communist socialists. The peoples of the Ukraine and Russia are following suit.

Is not it funny that, when the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) and many of his hon. Friends see the failure of socialism in eastern Europe, they suddenly say, "No, that is not socialism"? But that is not what they said when Labour leaders trooped to pay tribute in Moscow, time and again referring to their brothers and comrades.

Mr. Chris Smith: The hon. Gentleman is totally incorrect. The position is precisely what I have always said. The hon. Gentleman must not tar me with that brush.

Mr. Arnold: The hon. Gentleman has just said, "It was not me, sir." As in the case of its association with Robert Maxwell, when failure beckons, the new high-gloss Labour leadership cannot be seen for dust. But some are seen. John Austin-Walker, Labour's prospective parliamentary candidate for Woolwich and leader of the Labour-controlled Greenwich council, said that he thought that the overthrow of eastern European regimes was very sad.

The right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) has gone even further, explaining that the campaign for socialism will have to be resumed inside the USSR and eastern Europe. Only last month, six Labour Members signed an early-day motion noting that the Bolshevik revolution of 74 years ago represented the aspirations of Russian workers and peasants. Did not that turn out wonderfully for those workers and peasants!

To this very day the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) defends Cuba and its Castro regime. After all, Fidel Castro is an unreformed socialist, the last dictator in Latin America. Like the Bourbons, he has learnt nothing. He blunders on, his people in poverty and want, with five-hour speeches which are another by-product of socialism. The hon. Member for Islington, North never learns either. In the House he glows with praise for socialist Nicaragua, but the people of Nicaragua gave their verdict on socialism and kicked out the Sandinistas. Not to be outdone, Mrs. Kinnock wrote to The Independent wishing the Sandinistas well just days before they were voted out of office.

Only a year ago Labour Members told us to look at Sweden as a marvellous example of socialism in action. We did look at it, but more important, so did the Swedish people and at their first opportunity they chucked the socialists out of office. Around the world socialism is in retreat and collapse, but here it is alive and only too keen to do the kicking—kicking the British people in the pocket and then in the teeth.

Until the general election socialism is being kept carefully under wraps. We know that the Opposition totally rely on opinion polls for policy direction. They know, as we do, that the British people are clearly anti-socialist. Therefore, Labour's publicity machine sees to it that its presentation is definitely anti-socialist. The question that we must ask is whether the Labour party itself is anti-socialist. Let us take a warning from that great sage the right hon. Member for Chesterfield, who said recently that Labour had changed its mind to win the next general election, but could also change it back again after the election. That is a clear warning to the British people.

With great fanfare, Labour kicked out the hon. Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mr. Fields) to prove that the Labour party was safe in the hands of the right hon. Member for Islwyn (Mr. Kinnock). Now with even greater fanfare Labour has dispatched the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist), who earned the accolade of Back Bencher of the year. He puts the case for socialism today, as the right hon. Member for Islwyn did yesterday, although he does so in a less long-winded way and with more evident intellectual integrity.

The socialists are still there in the Labour party. They are official Labour party prospective candidates and Members of the House. The hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) was and is a national by-word for town hall socialism with all that that has meant in reality and in the minds of the electorate. I presume that he is ready to overthrow the Labour leader with a palace putsch after the general election in the way that he did in the GLC. He should not worry, because the Leader of the Opposition will be overthrown after the next general election when he fails yet again to lead Labour to victory.

The hon. Member for Tottenham (Mr. Grant) also remains an official Labour party candidate. That hon. Gentleman gloried in the recent problems in Haringey and gloated that the police were given a good thrashing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Earlier today I had occasion to reproach hon. Members for what seems to me to be growing discourtesy in the House. The hon. Gentleman's remarks are coming dangerously near unparliamentary in respect of one of his colleagues.

Mr. Dixon: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. If an hon. Gentleman wishes to refer to another hon. Member, is not it the convention of the House that that hon. Member should be informed before the debate? Has the hon. Member for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold) spoken or written to the hon. Member for Tottenham (Mr. Grant) and told him the he intended to make this scurrilous attack upon him today?

Mr. Arnold: No, I did not. I assumed that as the debate was about the implications of socialism, a matter very close to the heart of Opposition Members, the hon. Member for Tottenham would be here this morning.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman should observe the long-standing courtesies of the House. The fact that he is getting dangerously near to making personal attacks on parliamentary colleagues is a symptom, I fear, of the growing discourtesy in the House.

Mr. Arnold: I shall press on, then, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and say——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I should like the hon. Gentleman to show some sign of contrition before he moves on. It is not unreasonable that the hon. Gentleman should withdraw his remarks or apologise for his discourtesy in not informing the hon. Member to whom he referred.

Mr. Arnold: In the circumstances, I certainly withdraw them, on the grounds that I explained just now and, if it is necessary, I apologise for not so informing the hon. Member concerned.

The British people should be aware that the key question at the next general election will be, "What would socialism cost you?" They will not get an answer to that question from the Labour party. It just keeps on spraying out the promises. The House should be grateful to our right hon. Friends at the Treasury who have costed these sprayed promises at a figure of £35 billion. What would that figure of £35 billion mean? It would mean an increase of 15p in the standard rate of income tax, from 25p in the pound to 40p in the pound. The Labour party has already declared that the top rate of income tax would rise from 40p to 50p in the pound, together with the removal of the upper limit on national insurance contributions. That would mean a marginal rate of 59 per cent.—up from the present 40 per cent.

In the small print of its programme the Labour party has announced eight extra taxes, but we have heard nothing about them today nor have we seen them in the glossy brochures that have been put about. Even so, those eight extra taxes still leave a massive shortfall that would require an extra 10p in the pound on the standard rate of income tax.

Opinion polls tell the Labour party, the Conservative party and our constituents that health and education are very close to the heart of the British people, but the difference between the socialist and the Conservative approach to these matters is that we are interested in service—as are the public—not in the structure or the institutions of the education service or the national health service. Our education reforms are clear. What should be taught to our children is contained in the national curriculum. How well our children are coping will be shown by assesement and testing. Reports to parents are being made clearly, not by means of the gobbledegook that educationists alone understand.

What, at the end of the day, can parents do about it? We have seen fit to increase the number of parent governors. We have given schools local financial management and, further, through grant-maintained schools control over the totality of education funds for children. What has been the Labour party's reaction? It dislikes assessment. Why? Because the National Union of Teachers has given it its instructions. It will not allow data to be provided which would enable the performance of members of the teachers' unions to be measured. Why has the Labour party done that? Because the NUT is one of the paymasters of the Labour party.

In particular, the Labour party opposes grant-maintained schools. In my constituency, the parents of children at St. George's school, Gravesend, voted by nine to one for grant-maintained status so that they could be in full control of the finances and running of that school. Other schools have gone ahead, by similar vast majorities, and have taken control over them. The Labour party dislikes the idea of parents calling the shots rather than the bureaucrats, particularly when the bureaucrats are members of affiliated unions. The House should note the Labour party's decision to destroy grammar schools, which have provided an excellent education for many children.

Across the House, we share the belief that the national health service should be open to all, regardless of income, and financed out of taxation. The question is how to deliver that. Socialists believe in bureaucracy and they created the largest employer in the world, the NHS—that is, the largest other than the red army and the Indian railways, neither which is an especially helpful comparison——

It being half-past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

2.30 pm

Mr. Chris Smith: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. During his remarks, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry made a comment about the social charter which he may wish to reconsider. I challenged him on whether there was anything in the social charter that accorded with the points that he was making. His response was to cite article 118B. I now have the text of that article and it does not justify his remarks.

Mr. McKelvey: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Would it be in order for me to move my motion formally?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret that that is not possible.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That, at the sitting on Wednesday 18th December, the Motion in the name of the Prime Minister relating to the European Community: The European Council at Maastricht may, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order No. 14 (Exempted business), be proceeded with, though opposed, until 2.00 a.m.—[Mr. Kirkhope.]

Mr. Frank Brand

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Kirkhope.]

2.31 pm

Mr. John Wilkinson (Ruislip-Northwood): On 30 November 1990, a constituent of mine, Mr. Frank Brand, was informed that, in accordance with a decision given the previous day at a summary hearing, he had been summarily dismissed from service as a steward on British Rail.

The charge was that

"on Thursday 1st November 1990 whilst working on duty circuit 092, 1703 Paddington to Cheltenham service you issued an ICOBS buffet receipt to 2 passengers in lieu of a travel ticket. This receipt was to the value of £5·00 which you failed to account for in your daily business."

He was told to return all company property—uniform, travel passes, keys and so on—but he was given the right of appeal. The passengers in question apparently boarded the train at Stonehouse, got off at Gloucester, reboarded after an interval at Gloucester and got off at Stonehouse.

Before coming to the detail of the hearing and the appeal, I make two general points. The first concerns the extreme improbability of the alleged action. Mr. Brand was a steward with a high reputation. According to his advocate at the appeal, he scrupulously handed back miniature drink bottles, as he did his revenue and copy receipts.

The catering manager at Paddington complimented Mr. Brand on his professionalism, having received on 14 November a letter of praise from a passenger. The manager wrote:

"I would like to thank you for your efforts and I am sure that your future announcements will continue to project the same professionalism and create additional sales on our buffet services."

It is hard to imagine that anyone in Mr. Brand's position, as a British rail employee knowing of the likelihood of inspectors going through the train—as they do frequently on InterCity services—and with ticket collectors at the barriers, would crudely write out a return fare from Stonehouse to Gloucester on a buffet slip. It is also strange that the allegation of malpractice against Mr. Brand came from a woman, without any address being given, who is the mother of one of the two passengers and that her evidence should have been uncorroborated.

My second general point is that we have no other account of this incident. Everything seems to revolve round a photocopy of the receipt. How were the two passengers on the train without tickets in the first place? Who were they? We have no names, addresses, ages or occupations. They are variously described as youths, lads, students and children.

At the appeal hearing, the chairman admitted that he had no idea of their ages. Did Mr. Brand lean over the counter of the buffet and say, "You look like two customers who might not have tickets. I have a good method of getting round this"? Or did they come to him and say, "We are travellers without tickets; can you help us"? The transcripts in the case are haphazard and confusing, but, as I understand the story, the passengers were apprehended on the return journey to Stonehouse and discovered with this bogus document. However, the allegation was made by the woman some five days later.

If we look at this case carefully, it seems more and more incredible. Would not an official of BR have issued two tickets, the normal practice, and have written "return" on both? In any case, the £5 that British Rail says that Mr. Brand received and appropriated for his own use bears no relation to the fare, which is 85p for a child single or £1·70 for an adult single. We are still not clear whether these were two children or two adults. All that we know that the mother of one of them reported the story five days after the events and, prima facie, I must say that it looks to me as though she may have fabricated this highly implausible story to exculpate the travellers from an attempt to travel without paying the fare.

Two points should be mentioned before I deal with the hearings themselves. At the summary hearing, there was a great deal of discussion about handwriting, although it was admitted that on a moving train and with different pens, letters and words could vary even when written by the same hand. At the summary hearing, the chairman, Mr. McIlroy, said—this is on page 3—that the colour of the original ink was black. During the adjournment, Mr. Brand's representative rang Gloucester station, where someone said that the original ink was blue.

One might have thought that, by this time, the sole piece of evidence should have been regarded as important, but apparently it has since been lost. It was also said that, from the receipt book, receipts Nos. 04 to 09 were missing. Were some of these stolen, perhaps by the two passengers in question? We do not know. At the appeal, we heard that only Nos. 04, 05 and 06 were missing. No. 8 was used by Mr. Brand and we have heard nothing again of No. 7. I do not say that this is vital evidence, but it was evidence that the matter was carelessly investigated, and no one seems to have been sure of the facts.

At all times, Mr. Brand has been desperately eager and willing for a full police investigation. He certainly was in the repeated interviews that he has had with me. The handwriting has been examined from a photocopy only, which could, after all, have been copied from a forgery, yet British Rail places great stress on the handwriting issue. Mr. Barry Woledge, personnel director of InterCity, British Railways Board wrote to me on 16 July 1991. He said:

"A forensic report has confirmed that the receipt was completed in Mr. Brand's own handwriting."

Let us see what the forensic report says. It is much more cautious. Mr. M. S. A. Handy, document examiner, has examined receipt No. 409604—the first time that we have been given the number. He says:

"There are many similarities between these writings and in my opinion BRAND completed the receipt. The evidence is such that I cannot exclude the possibility that another person was responsible, however, I consider it unlikely. It should be noted that examination of the questioned writing has been limited because it is photocopied."

Mr. Woledge continues to me:

"This clearly confirms the allegations from the two members of the travelling public".

The House will note how two lads, children or youths on the Stonehouse to Gloucester train without a ticket have now become "members of the travelling public".

Mr. Woledge says that they "were required to pay £3 for travel and for which they received a buffet receipt in lieu of a ticket".

Prima facie, a BR official seems to have been exerting some measure of compulsion here. Mr. Woledge continues:

"We believe that there is sufficient evidence from the buffet receipt and the unsolicited complaint that we received to confirm that an offence has been committed."

To call the complaint unsolicited is stretching language. The original letter was from the mother of one of the two members of the travelling public found in possession of a buffet ticket. Those two might well have alighted at Stonehouse at the end of their journey and disappeared into the night. A complaint can be described as unsolicited only if a person under no suspicion and unknown and unrelated to any party concerned raises a matter related to his or her treatment.

Mr. Brand's advocate raised the question of the relevant receipt. He asked:

"We have not seen the original, we have not had it analysed have we?"

The answer was:

"Not a court of law here."

Presumably referring to something that he had to write out at the hearing, Frank Brand said that the "s" in Stonehouse had a tail on it but on the receipt the "s" had no tail. The chairman replied:

"We have to agree handwriting can differ".

Mr. Brand pointed out that on the second handwriting sample there was no tail on the "s". The advocate said that there was no comparison. The chairman replied:

"At the moment we will have to agree to leave that open".

Yet in his verdict he referred to colour of ink and style of handwriting.

Mr. Woledge's letter to me said that Mr. McMillan, the catering manager, had carried out his investigation in a structured manner, yet according to Mr. Brand he had not seen the receipt until the summary hearing.

There was then a discussion about whether another person might have stolen the receipt book and written out a receipt in a passable forgery while Mr. Brand was clearing up the first-class area. We then learn that on the receipt a figure of £2·50 had been crossed out, but that appeared to be passed over in the hearing. It may seem a minor point, but I suggest that it is more consonant with an amateur offender, such as a boy trying to travel without paying his fare, than with someone out to obtain money by unfair means and versed in that art, as Mr. Brand was alleged to have been.

There are gaps in the transcript. For example, when Mr. Brand asked:

"Why was it made out for £2·50 initially and not £5?"

the chairman apparently replied:

"The name of the gentleman in charge of the case is Detective Constable Moles".

That is a non-sequitur. The chairman went on to say:

"You can confirm for your own satisfaction the colour of the ink".

How could one do that from a photocopy?

The chairman said that there had been previous examples of Mr. Brand's paperwork going missing. That is a serious matter. If the allegation were true, some evidence should be produced at a proper inquiry. But, on the contrary, the chairman at the appeal said that there had been no previous irregularities on Mr. Band's part. Nothing further was added at the time.

When asked if the complainant—who, as I said earlier, was the mother of at least one of the two passengers—had been interviewed, the chairman simply said that a letter had been written asking for a description of the person who issued the receipt.

Incidentally, it took the woman five days to make the complaint. Most parents would have been round at the police station within hours if their children had been involved by a steward in an alleged railway fraud.

What did the chairman mean by saying of the passengers:

"It is very lucky they did not have anything other than the fare on them, what do you think?"

How did he know? Were the boys asked to turn out their pockets? Was he suggesting that they might have been parted from large sums of money for that comparatively short journey?

The chairman asked:

"What motive would there be for a mother to react in this way?"

I should have thought that there was every reason, if a child were found carrying a buffet receipt instead of a rail ticket. Let us assume for a moment that that child has snatched two or three tickets from the book while the steward's back was turned or while he was clearing up the first-class spaces. There would be every reason for saying that the steward issued the receipt. I do not state that that is what happened. I say only that it is necessary to look carefully at statements made by mothers on behalf of children who have been found breaking the law. Once again, the age of the "children" is germane to the case, but remains unknown.

Mr. Impey, the senior steward, who presumably knows Mr. Brand and his handwriting better than most people, was then called to give evidence. When asked whether he thought that the writing on the receipt was Mr. Brand's, he replied, "I would say not" The chairman said immediately:

"I think I should say that I consider Mr. Impey's testament irrelevant."

Why irrelevant? It may have been biased, perjured or the result of acute myopia, but it was not irrelevant. Mr. Impey would not agree conclusively that the writing was Mr. Brand's

Some of the comments in the hearing seem meaningless. When the advocate pointed out that the ink on the original was blue, the chairman is quoted as saying, "One factor of receipt". What does that mean? When the advocate asked, "were British transport police involved?", the reply was, "Their business not ours". When the advocate asked:

"What about the means of identifying Mr. Brand. Would they be able to identify Mr. Brand? Have they been asked?", the reply from the chairman was: "I consider that irrelevant." Then the advocate understandably insisted:

"Who did issue that receipt? It would have to be a proper identity parade otherwise there would be lying", to which the chairman again replied:

"Irrelevant . . . they could know Frank from travelling before."

The press has recently told of several cases in which passengers travelling innocently without correct tickets have been subjected to severe harassment by the inspectors of British Rail—for example, Ian Botham's son. I recall Ian Botham's letter to The Times on the subject. At the very least, the boys should have given their names and addresses to the authorities when the allegation was first made.

First, however, came the chairman's comment:

"I find the whole thing strange. I refer to you as a good member of staff, your buffet display is top notch. You got more revenue than others. There is no discrepancy here before on file, so I find it strange. But on the other side to manufacture the story is strange, also. Unless of course a son of yours has tried to travel free and been caught out."

[Mr. John Wilkinson]

After referring again to Mr. Brand's reputation for honesty, Mr. Stevenson added:

"Your hearing officer was taking his job away due to a third hand account. My son could do this type of writing (i.e. Mr. Brand's)—it is possible. You should reinstate and leave the evidence to the police . . . In the modern education system people have a bagful of different pens . . . Mrs. Taylor"—we have the name of the woman now—"has had ample opportunity to come back to you but she hasn't responded. This was November 1990. If she was convinced she would have responded".

Nevertheless, the decision was confirmed.

There is one final point. I have been surprised and very shocked to discover the difficulty that exists in arranging a proper investigation or securing a change in attitude towards an employee in a nationalised industry—British Rail. The reply of the chairman of BR to me on 4 April was curt—two lines of acknowledgement and three of reply. Mr. Watkinson, director of employee relations, simply repeated that the examination had been thorough, the forensic report definite and the hearings correct. He added that Mr. Brand had been employed for less than two years and would not have been eligible to apply to an industrial tribunal. How convenient for British Rail. That fact is certainly no justification for the thoroughly sloppy investigation that it conducted.

A colleague, Mr. Barry Woledge, replied again on 16 April that further investigations had been carried out and that there was no reason to waver from the view that Mr. Rand intended to defraud the railway. No help or involvement could be afforded by the Department of Transport or of Employment, despite my representations to Ministers at both Departments. Mr. Woledge of BR gave no hard factual evidence arising from his series of investigations and I feel that, at the very least, and in view of the many vaguenesses and inadequacies that I have pointed out, we are entitled to such evidence.

I am not making a categorical statement on innocence or guilt, but I do not feel that a fair hearing has been afforded. The matter has been passsed on, with general support being given up the line by different members of the same organisation.

Mr. Brand's last words at the appeal were:

"Looking you in the eye, I did not write that receipt."

I would not have taken such trouble over the case if I did not feel that a man's livelihood had been removed by British Rail without any effective means of redress against allegations which beg more questions than they answer and which British Rail made no effort to substantiate satisfactorily to Mr. Brand, his representatives, his union or even his Member of Parliament.

The gross insouciance of British Rail reflects no credit on any of the management representatives concerned—right the way up to the chairman himself. British Rail should either prove its case—which to my mind it has not—or reinstate Mr. Brand at once as compensation not just for loss of earnings but for the damage done to his character, reputation and family.

2.50 pm

The Minister for Roads and Traffic (Mr. Christopher Chope): I pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Ruislip-Northwood (Mr. Wilkinson) for the close interest he has taken in the case of his constituent, Mr. Frank Brand. I congratulate him on securing this debate today.

My hon. Friend has been typically diligent in his pursuit of this matter with British Rail, with both the chairman and the director of employee relations. He has also had correspondence with my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin), the Minister for Shipping and Public Transport at the Department.

My hon. Friend has set out his concerns very clearly for the House, and set out in detail how this case was handled by British Rail. As he has explained, Mr. Brand was dismissed by BR from his post as a senior steward with InterCity On Board Services—InterCity's train catering division—in November 1990. This followed a complaint alleging that he had issued a buffet receipt to two young passengers in lieu of a travel ticket and failed to account for the £5 received.

The allegations stemmed from a letter received by BR's area manager at Gloucester in November 1990, in which a woman alleged that her son and a friend, while travelling from Stonehouse to Gloucester, were stopped by the steward and asked if they were trying to avoid paying their fare. They are said to have explained that they were looking for the conductor to buy their tickets as Stonehouse station did not sell tickets at that time of night. The steward is said to have issued the boys with a receipt, made out for £5 and indicating that it was for the journey from Stonehouse to Gloucester.

On the return journey, the boys were apparently challenged by the ticket collector on the train, who explained that the receipt was not a valid ticket, and that they would have to pay the full fare. The mother asked that the area manager investigate who had issued the bogus ticket. With her letter, she attached the receipt said to have been issued to her son.

Investigations by BR showed that the only steward on the train in question was Mr. Brand. He was seen by the Gloucester area catering manager. He was subsequently charged, under BR's disciplinary arrangements, to answer the allegations.

A summary hearing was held, chaired by BR's InterCity catering manager at Paddington. My hon. Friend has commented in detail on the transcript of that hearing, including the statements by the witness, Mr. Farrell; the differences of opinion about the handwriting on the receipt; whether someone might have stolen the receipt book and forged the receipt; unsupported allegations about previous examples of Mr. Brand's paperwork being missing; and the apparent lack of follow-up to the mother's original letter.

As my hon. Friend has said, the hearing focused particularly on the buffet receipt and whether or not it was written by Mr. Brand. The type of pen and colour of ink used was believed to match that used by Mr. Brand. I undertand that the British Transport Police yesterday found the receipt and now confirm that the ink is black—the receipt had a reference number written on it, 092, the one issued to Mr. Brand for this journey and known only by InterCity staff. This, with the similarities in handwriting, led the BR manager to conclude that he felt convinced beyond all reasonable doubt that Mr. Brand had committed the offence. He dismissed Mr. Brand with immediate effect, reminding him of his right to appeal in writing within seven days.

The appeal was fixed for 19 December, but was postponed until 16 January this year to allow Mr. Brand to give notice to his union to arrange a legal representative. The appeal was chaired by the business group manager for Bristol and the original verdict was upheld.

My hon. Friend has set out a number of concerns, including the lack of firm evidence, the way in which the matter was investigated, and the conduct of BR's disciplinary hearing. He has also drawn the attention of the House to the difficulties he has faced in arranging a proper investigation or a change in BR's management's attitude towards an employee. He has made his points in a measured and careful way. He accepts that he cannot make a categorical statement about innocence or guilt, but he feels that his constituent has not been given a fair hearing.

I know that my hon. Friend will recognise that this case is very much a management matter for BR, and the decision to dismiss Mr. Brand was entirely BR's. But my hon. Friend's points are important ones about fairness in handling disciplinary matters, and I shall of course ensure that they are drawn to the attention of BR. I am sure that BR should take careful note of them. With the rediscovery within the past 24 hours of the original receipt and, I am informed, the two statements from the youths involved, I am sure that my hon. Friend would wish to take the matter further. My hon. Friend the Minister for Public Transport has said that should he wish to have a meeting with him and a representative of BR, he would be happy to offer that opportunity. I hope that that demonstrates that the persistence of my hon. Friend has, if nothing else, at least found the receipt that hitherto had been missing.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at six minutes to Three o'clock.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Sunday Trading

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the current round of discussions with interested bodies on Sunday trading to conclude.

Mr. Rumbold: I hope to have concluded my current programme of separate discussions with the wide range of interest groups on their proposals or positions on reform of the Shops Act 1950 early next year. When that programme is complete, we shall consider what further consultations may best promote the development and agreement of acceptable proposals for reform.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what meetings he or Ministers or officials in his Department have held in the last six months regarding Sunday trading; and if he will list (a) the dates of such meetings and (b) the bodies represented on each occasion.

Mrs. Rumbold: Following is the information requested in relation to meetings in or connected with my programme of separate discussions with interested bodies on possible ways of reforming the law on Sunday trading:

Date of meeting	Body represented
5 June	Shopping Hours Reform Council
13 June	Sort Out Sunday
20 June	Lord's Day Observance Society
27 June	National Federation of Meat Traders
2 July	GMB
9 July	Keep Sunday Special Campaign
11 July	Lord's Day Observance Society
17 July	British Tourist Authority/English Tourist Board
24 July	Association of District Councils
24 July	Churches Together in England Council of Churches for Britain and Ireland Free Church Federal Council
31 July	Shopping Hours Reform Council
7 August	OPEN (Outlets Providing for Everyday Needs)
22 October	Institute of Safety and Public Protection
24 October	British Retailers' Association
6 November	Association of Private Market Operators
6 November	Keep Sunday Special Campaign
11 November	Board of Deputies of British Jews
19 November	Retail Consortium

Given the general interest in the subject of Sunday trading, it would be impracticable to maintain a record of all other meetings involving Ministers or officials in which the subject has arisen.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will initiate a publicity campaign to remind companies of the requirements of the law on and the need to observe the law in respect of Sunday trading;

(2) what advice his Department offered to companies considering opening on Sunday in contravention of current legislation prior to 27 November.

Mrs. Rumbold: Companies themselves, in consultation as necessary with their legal advisers, are responsible for understanding the law on Sunday trading and for their conformity with it, as they are in respect of any other relevant law. It was not and is not appropriate for us to issue advice or guidance on this to companies, by a publicity campaign or otherwise. The statement by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General on 27 November at column 913 confirmed the understanding of the law—that it is not in suspense, and that its enforcement is for local authorities—which we had previously given to those who have asked us for that.

EC (Visits)

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for himself, and for each of the Ministers at his Department, details of (a) the number of visits made in the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, (b) the number of visits made to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (c) the number of nights spent over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

Prison Officers (Brixton)

Mr. Leadbitter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison officers have been transferred from Brixton prison following the escape of two category A prisoners from Brixton; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Since 7 July, the date of the escape, 57 staff in the grades from prison officer to principal officer have been transferred out of Brixton. Twenty eight had responded to national trawls inviting applications to staff new establishments. The remainder had previously requested a transfer from Brixton and vacancies became available at the establishment of their choice.

Knives (Offensive Weapons)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will take further action to reduce the use of knives as offensive weapons;

(2) if he will bring forward proposals to tighten the law on the sale of knives which may be used as offensive weapons;

(3) what initiatives have been undertaken by his Department to reduce the danger to the public from the use of knives as offensive weapons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The sale and possession of knives is subject to a number of controls. The sale of flick knives, gravity knives and butterfly knives, which have no legitimate use, is banned. These knives have distinctive mechanisms which can be defined in law. There would be considerable practical problems in seeking to apply more general restrictions on the sale and purchase of knives which have a variety of legitimate everyday uses.

For this reason, the Government have tackled the misuse of knives by tightening the law on possession rather than imposing further restrictions on sale. The Criminal Justice Act 1988 makes it an offence for a person to have a bladed or sharply pointed article (other than a small folding pocket knife) in a public place without good reason. The Act also places the onus on the knife-carrier to show that he has good reason for possessing it in public.

This measure supplements the Prevention of Crime Act 1953 which makes it an offence to be in possession of an offensive weapon in a public place without reasonable excuse or lawful authority.

The Government believe that these measures provide the police and the courts with effective powers to punish and deter the carrying of knives in public places. The Government have no plans to introduce further legislation in this matter.

Parliamentary Constituencies

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the 20 largest and smallest parliamentary constituencies, in geographical terms in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is set out in the tables. The areas are given in hectares and include land and inland water.

Juvenile Crime

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Government policy on making parents fully responsible for the behaviour of and crimes committed by their children.

Mr. John Patten: In the Criminal Justice Act 1991 the Government have put more responsibility on the parents of young offenders to look after their children properly. The 1991 Act strengthens courts' powers to require parents to attend court with their children, to pay their children's fines and to bind over the parents of convicted juvenile offenders. These provisions will come into force in October 1992.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Home Office guidelines regarding the number of cautions which the police have to give to juveniles before criminal proceedings can be taken against juvenile offenders.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The decision to caution is a matter for the discretion of the police and it is not for the Home Secretary to specify how many cautions can be given to any offender.

Crime Victims

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the amount of support made available to victims of crime.

Mr. John Patten: Our major financial commitment is through the criminal injuries compensation scheme, which will pay over £125 million this financial year to victims of violent crime throughout Great Britan, the most generous such scheme in western Europe.

In addition, the Home Office makes a grant to the voluntary organisation Victim Support, chiefly to enable local victim support schemes to employ paid co-ordinators helping them to make the best use of volunteers. This year's grant is £5·7 million and we have announced plans to increase it to £7·3 million next year, an increase of 28 per cent., sustaining and reinforcing the present schemes and allowing some expansion into providing new services to support victims at court.

The third strand of our support for victims of crime is our work with the criminal justice services to improve their response to victims' needs, following up the victims charter which we published in 1990.

New Housing Schemes

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet the chairmen of the major house builders to discuss the involvement of the police through formal procedures at an early stage to discuss the design and layout of new housing schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The police have a significant contribution to make to the design of new housing schemes with their ability to offer expert advice to property developers on design measures which can reduce the opportunities for crime. All police forces in England and Wales except Hampshire have designated architectural liaison officers for this purpose. The police's "Secured By Design" scheme, which is a joint initiative with the major companies in the house building industry operating in many parts of the country, is aimed at ensuring that newly built homes and estates are safe and secure. The Government fully support this programme, which is an excellent example of the partnership approach to crime prevention. The Government also believe that the house building industry already recognises the importance of design in preventing crime and making homes and communities safer. My right hon. Friend has therefore at present no plans to meet the chairmen of the major house building companies.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the involvement of the police at an early stage through formal procedures with planning authorities to discuss security and safety measures for house building schemes.

Mr. John Patten: The police have dedicated architectural liaison officers who advise local authority planners and others in the building industry on the design of housing and estates from a crime prevention perspective. In addition the Department of the Environment is revising its planning policy guidance to include advice for local planning authorities on crime prevention aspects in the design and layout of new developments, and on consulting police architectural liaison officers about planning applications. This will be issued early in the new year.

Car Insurance

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet the chairman of the major insurance companies to discuss differential rates of insurance premia charged on individuals, depending on the level of car security undertaken by the motorist; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to meet the chairmen of the major insurance companies. He and I did, however, meet representatives of the Association of British Insurers on 16 September to discuss what action the insurance industry was taking to help tackle car crime. This included the development by the association of a new motor insurance rating formula which, for the first time, takes into account security features fitted as standard equipment by vehicle manufacturers. My right hon. Friend attended the launch of this new formula on 16 October.

My right hon. Friend has urged the insurance industry to take further measures to encourage better vehicle security by offering discounts to motorists who fit effective after-sale security devices to their cars.

Emergency Planning Review

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to make the further announcement on arrangements for warning to which he referred in his answer to the hon. Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler), 10 July 1991, Official Report, column 391-94.

Mr. John Patten: We intend to make an announcement on arrangements for warning in the new year.

Young Offenders

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the educational and social opportunities provided in young offender institutions.

Mrs. Rumbold: There are two categories of inmates in young offender institutions: juveniles between the age of 14 and 16 and young offenders up to the age of 21. Juveniles under the school leaving age receive a minimum of 15 hours education per week in academic subjects, life and social skills, leisure activities and work skills. Juveniles over the school leaving age are expected to participate in full-time education, though it is not compulsory. Where the inmate chooses not to participate, alternative constructive activities are provided. They should still receive part-time education averaging two hours per week.

Young offenders should also receive at least an average of two hours education per week, broadly covering the same areas as juveniles, though more flexibility may be exercised in giving greater emphasis on the provision of work-related training or remedial teaching where this would be valuable.

Regarding social opportunities, inmates are given the opportunity to mix with other inmates to preserve and encourage the proper use of leisure time and to relate to their peer group. At least an hour per day should normally be provided to allow inmates to participate in a choice of activities such as table tennis, billiards, board games, as well as the chance to watch television. Inmates are also encouraged to use the library facilities.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to remove teenagers completely from the prison system.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to a question from him on 26 November at column 444. We have no plans further to restrict courts' powers to commit young people to custody.

Closed Circuit Television

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many courts have been provided with closed circuit television equipment to enable children to give evidence without being present in the court room; when he expects the central criminal court at the Old Bailey to be so equipped; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

To date, 35 crown court centres have been supplied with such equipment as part of a programme which will provide equipment in a total of 44 centres by the end of the 1992-93 financial year. The Central Criminal Court was one of the first 14 centres equipped in preparation for 5 January 1989. An application for the use of a television link may be made under s.32(1) of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 to any crown court centre. The decision as to whether an application should be made is for the appropriate party. The granting or otherwise of such an application is a matter of judicial discretion. Where an application is made and granted at a court centre which is not equipped, rules of court provide for the case to be transferred to a convenient equipped centre.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

EC (Visits)

Mr. Forman: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list for himself, and for each of the ministers at his Department, details of (a) the number of visits made in the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, (b) the number of visits made to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (c) the number of nights spent over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

The Attorney-General: None.

Mr. Forman: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list: the number of visits made by officials in his Department during the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, the number of visits made by officials in his Department to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and the number of nights spent by officials in his Department over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

The Attorney-General: An official from my Department attended a conference in the Netherlands on combating EC fraud and spent four nights away from the United Kingdom.

House of Fraser

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 6 November, Official Report, column 113 to the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery, (Mr. Carlile) when he expects to hear the outcome of Metropolitan police inquiries on matters referred to it by the Select Committee on Trade and Industry regarding the interference with its working on the House of Fraser takeover.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service has not yet received the report from the Metropolitan police.

The Metropolitan police are continuing their inquiries and the Crown Prosecution Service anticipates that the preliminary police report will be submitted by 6 December 1991.

EC (Meetings)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the EC ministerial council meetings at which his Department has or will be represented during November and December.

The Attorney-General: None.

Fraudulent Share Applications

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the number of prosecutions for fraudulent multiple share applications arising out of each privatisation share issue.

The Attorney-General: One hundred and twenty seven prosecutions have been conducted by the fraud investigation group at Crown Prosecution Service headquarters. A very small number of multiple share application cases are likely to have been submitted by the police to local offices of the Crown Prosecution Service but records are not maintained such as would enable these to be readily identified from other cases of deception.

Statistics relating the number of prosecutions broken down according to individual privatisation issues are not routinely maintained by the Crown Prosecution Service, and the information can only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Law Commission Reports

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General how many Law Commission reports recommending legislation remain to be acted upon and for what reasons it has been decided not to present Bills to implement the recommendations.

The Attorney-General: Since 1965 the Law Commission, often in conjunction with the Scottish Law Commission, has published 37 reports relating to the consolidation of existing legislation which, except for the one most recently published, have all been implemented. It has published 14 reports recommending the repeal of obsolete enactments, all of which have been implemented. It has published 93 other reports containing draft legislation of which 59 have been implemented.

The Government have not presented Bills to implement the remaining 34 reports for one or more of the following reasons:

(i) the underlying policy has been rejected;
(ii) the case for reform has not been thought to justify parliamentary time;
(iii) the recommendations have been superseded by later events;
(iv) the report is being given further consideration either within Government or at the Law Commission;
(v) although the recommendations have been accepted, there has been no suitable legislative opportunity.

Probate Registry, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the historic fixtures and fittings removed from the Probate Registry, Cardiff road, Llandaff, Cardiff; when their removal was authorised; how they were disposed of; and whether Cadw was consulted before their removal was authorised.

Mr. Yeo: I have been asked to reply.

So far as I can ascertain, the original internal doors were replaced to comply with fire regulations and the fireplaces were removed when adaptations were made to accommodate increased activity by the registry. This work was carried out in the 1960s. The building was not listed as of historic interest until May 1975. No records are available to indicate who was consulted or how items were disposed of. No historic items have been removed for at least the last 20 years.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Air Pollution

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations his Department has received from the investment casting industry regarding difficulties faced in implementing the new air pollution controls required under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Leigh: The Department has received a number of representations on the guidance note for foundry processes which covers the castings industry. In addition to correspondence with Ministers and officials, the guidance note was the subject of a meeting between Lord Hesketh and representatives of the British Foundry Association in April this year.

Credit Application Forms

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to require the credit industry to discontinue using negative options on credit application forms.

Mr. Leigh: Yes. Regulation are to be made under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 prohibiting persons licensed under the Act from presenting or sending to prospective borrowers application forms or agreement containing inertia selling provisions such as negative options.

Telephone Bills

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether his proposed charter for consumers will include a right for users of telephones to have a detailed breakdown of their bills if they so require; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: As a result of BT's £15 billion investment in its network since privatisation, 77 per cent. of BT's customers may now receive itemised bills. The service should be available to more than 90 per cent. of BT's customers by the end of 1995. All Mercury and cellular radio customers can already receive itemised bills.

The additional benefits to customers that will result from the Competition and Service (Utilities) Bill will depend on the final scope of the Bill and the specific regulations that are made under it.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with the chairman of OFTEL concerning the need for British Telecom and other telephone service providers to be able to justify in detail the bills they send to their customers and the programme for enabling detailed bills to be available in all areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: BT invests £11 million every working day to extend services such as itemised billing to all its customers. I meet the Director General of OFTEL from time to time to discuss a wide range of telecommunications issues. He fully shares the Government's view of the importance of customers receiving accurate and properly detailed billing information.

Company Auditors

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from persons seeking to register as being eligible for appointment as company auditors or responsible for company audit work about difficulties in meeting the registration requirements.

Mr. Redwood: None.

New Cars

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether it is his intention to publish simultaneously the two reports by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on the supply of new cars and the supply of new car parts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry received the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of new cars on 31 October and is currently considering it. The report will be published as soon as is practicable. The MMC's report on the supply of new car parts will be received on 20 December; that also will be published as soon as is practicable. I cannot comment at this stage on whether the two reports will be published simultaneously.

The content of all MMC reports remain confidential until publication. If the MMC find no adverse effects the Secretary of State has no power to act. If the MMC have reached any adverse findings he will decide what steps, if any, should be taken to remedy the situation. He will also consider whether or not to announce a period of consultation before reaching his conclusions.

Breweries

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many breweries have reduced their pub ownership numbers to 2,000 or below since 1989.

Mr. Redwood: One brewer which owned more than 2,000 pubs in 1989, Scottish and Newcastle, has reduced its estate to below that figure.

ECGD

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a further statement on progress towards the sale of the short-term business of the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Lilley: I am pleased to confirm that the sale of the short term business of ECGD, hitherto conducted by the Insurance Services Group, was successfully concluded yesterday, 1 December, following negotiations between Government and NCM, the preferred purchaser.

As a result of the privatisation, a new group of companies has been established. The credit insurance activities of the group will be undertaken, with immediate effect, by NCM Credit Insurance Limited, a fully capitalised company which has been duly authorised by the relevant United Kingdom authorities to undertake such business. Publicity and customer information for the privatised business will be carried forward by the new group.

The sale negotiations were conducted on a basis which provides value for money for the taxpayer. The sale will be examined by the National Audit Office in due course. The sale price was £70 million, comprising £50 million for the capitalisation of the business, plus a goodwill payment of £20 million. Five million pounds of this goodwill element is payable on a deferred basis, subject to the future performance of the insurance company. If the loss ratios for the first two years of underwriting in the private sector are at least as good as those projected when tenders were submitted, the full balance of £5 million will be payable. If the loss ratios for these years are not as good as those projected, the balance of £5 million will be subject to downward adjustment. The deferred element will be payable in 1996 after the accounts for the first two underwriting years are closed. The amount of the deferred element will be indexed to the retail prices index so as to preserve its present value.

Under private sector ownership the new group will be able to offer a more efficient and flexible service, including domestic credit insurance facilities. It will not be vulnerable to the risk of legal challenge which would have remained for as long as the business had been conducted by a Government Department. The new owners, NCM, are specialist credit insurers who were selected as preferred purchaser following a competitive tendering process against a range of criteria including commitment to, and understanding of, the business and financial robustness, as well as tender price.

The vast bulk of insurance services' risk portfolio—political as well as commercial risks—has been successfully placed in the private sector reinsurance market. This is a major achievement. As already confirmed to Parliament, the Government are providing the company with some limited transitional reinsurance facilities to "top up" private sector reinsurance capacity plus a separate "national interest" facility to maintain a measure of cover for the small number of higher risk markets for which cover is not currently available from the private sector. This "national interest" facility will be kept under close review and will remain available for as long as necessary to meet the reasonable needs of exporters, subject to its satisfactory financial performance.

ECGD will, of course, continue as a separate Government Department, the main activity of which will be the provision of facilities for medium and long term export credit on projects and capital goods exports. These facilities will not be affected in any way by the sale to NCM of the Insurance Services Group.

Rechar

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out the legal basis of Her Majesty's Government's case against Commissioner Bruce Millan on Rechar and additionality.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 26 November 1991]: There have been discussions with the Commission on the subject mentioned by the hon. Gentleman, but there are no legal proceedings pending. For a statement on the Government's general position as regards the question of additionality and article 9 of Council Regulation (EEC) 4253/88, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 27 November at column 525.

Export Licences

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for how many years his Department routinely stores copies of export licences (a) granted and (b) refused; what criteria has been adopted in deciding the appropriate time period for storage of such licence applications and export permissions; and if he will make a statement on any changes adopted in export licensing policy and the licensing process since 1 August.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 29 November 1991]: The eighth Schedule on Public Records (22 June 1950) as required by the Public Record Office Acts of 1877 and 1898 laid down the period for which export licence applications should be kept as six years. The Public Record Office Act 1958 gave Departments the authority to determine their own destruction dates for their records. Until recently the Department has seen no reason to depart from the six years period approved by Parliament. However, because of the Trade and Industry Select Committee inquiry into export controls in relation to Iraq, destruction of export licence applications over six years old has been suspended for the time being.

The Government announced in October the adoption of a policy of full scope safeguards the effect of which is that significant nuclear exports will not be permitted to countries with nuclear facilities not subject to IAEA safeguards.

EC Directives

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy not to support the EC advertising directive.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 28 November 1991]: I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to the proposal for an EC directive on comparative advertising. The Government support in principle the EC Commission's proposed directive to remove prohibitions and restrictions on comparative advertising provided the comparisons are factual, fair and honest. Such restrictive laws do not exist in the United Kingdom, but in some member states legislation on comparative advertising can restrict competition and deprive consumers of useful information.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy not to support the direct selling directive in respect of its ban on selling by fax.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 28 November 1991]: I take it my hon. Friend has in mind the proposals for a Distance Selling Directive which were circulated to interested parties by the EC Commission earlier this year. These proposals would not ban selling by fax, but they would seriously restrict it. The Commission has consulted member states on its proposals, and we have made it clear we see no need for a directive in this area. The Commission has not yet formally submitted any proposals to the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy not to support the proposed alcohol advertising directive.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 28 November 1991]: I am not aware of any EC proposal on alcohol advertising. However, it is the United Kingdom Government's view that advertising should, so far as possible, be subject to the self-regulatory system of control which works well in this country.

PRIME MINISTER

Irish Republic (Legislation)

Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Prime Minister of the 32 applications by the United Kingdom under the Irish Criminal Law (Jurisdiction) Act 1976, referred to in his written answer of Monday 11 November, Official Report, column 352, how many cases have been prosecuted in the Irish Republic for offences committed in the United Kingdom; and with what results.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General gave to him on 19 December 1988 at column 94, and to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North, (Mr. McNamara) on 14 May 1990 at column 280. These answers give information about the outcome of cases prosecuted in the Irish Republic following the 31 applications (and not 32 as stated on Monday 11 November at column 352) made by the United Kingdom authorities.

Child Care

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will arrange to circulate to other departmental parliamentary clerks a summary of the papers and index on child care made available to European Standing Committee B as a good example of content and presentation.

The Prime Minister: I am glad that my hon. Friend regarded those papers as a good example of content and presentation. I do not propose to circulate the documents to other Departments, but I am sure that they will have noted my hon. Friend's comment.

National Lottery

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister what study has been made of a national lottery; and what consideration has been given to the objectives of a scheme and objections to it.

The Prime Minister: The Rothschild Royal Commission on Gambling, which reported in 1978, studied the matter in detail and recommended that there should be a single national lottery for good causes. A number of organisations have since undertaken studies of the merits of a national lottery, and the Government have kept the matter under review.

The objective most frequently suggested for a national lottery is to raise money for good causes.

Among the many other factors which have to be considered are the implications for gambling and the revenue raised, the impact on existing local charitable lotteries and charitable giving generally, and the use of the proceeds.

Disability

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Prime Minister, further to his answer, 19 November, Official Report, column 95 what is the total number of whole-time employees employed by the six departments and agencies which exceeded a 3 per cent. level of staff registered as disabled; and what percentage this is of total employees of all departments and agencies.

The Prime Minister: The total number of full-time equivalent staff employed by the six departments and agencies is 57,400. This is 10·4 per cent. of all full-time equivalent staff in the home civil service.

Sterling (German Support)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what understandings he reached with the German Chancellor about German support of the £ sterling.

The Prime Minister: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to disclose details of intervention in the foreign exchange markets.

British Youth Council

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to meet representatives of the British Youth Council to discuss a range of issues of concern to young people in the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: I am well aware of the valuable work of the British Youth Council (BYC) in representing our young people, but I have no immediate plans for a meeting. I understand, however, that a meeting is shortly to be arranged between my hon. Friend the Minister for Sport and representatives of the BYC to discuss youth issues which fall within the responsibilities of the Department of Education and Science.

Welsh Research Organisations

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Prime Minister when the mid-Wales meeting of research organisations in Wales, to be convened by the Cabinet Office, in the autumn of 1991 to encourage greater participation in collaborative projects under the aegis of European Community framework funds for research and development, that was referred to in his letter to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West in August 1991, will take place; how many organisations have been invited to attend; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The event that I referred to in my letter of 1 August took place in Rossett, Clwyd on 15 November. This seminar was organised by the Mid Wales Export Association Ltd., with sponsorship from the Welsh Office. It included speakers from the Cabinet Office, various directorates of the European Commission, and Welsh businesses. The seminar provided up-to-date information on current and future developments in EC R and D funding for representatives of businesses and research organisations. Thirty-two companies and research organisations took part in the seminar.

Special Financial Allowance

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the public duties undertaken by former Prime Ministers for which the special financial allowance is provided.

The Prime Minister: The allowance that I announced on 27 March is available to former Prime Ministers to assist them with the heavy office and secretarial expenses they incur in handling correspondence and engagements as a result of their special position in public life.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister for what reasons he decided not to introduce legislation in the current session to provide a new legal framework for the regulation of Sunday trading.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise) on 28 November at column 1066 and the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Home Office, on 27 November at column 919.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Student Loans

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students were refused a loan; and for what reasons were they refused.

Mr. Alan Howarth: No valid applications from eligible students have been refused by the Student Loans Company.

Music Tuition

118. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will publish figures showing the level of funding from central Government for tuition in musical instruments in schools (a) in each year since 1986 and (b) estimated funding for 1992.

Mr. Eggar: Resources for tuition in musical instruments in schools are not separately identified within the funding which central Government provide to support local authority expenditure on education. It is for individual authorities and schools to decide how much to allocate for this purpose from their budgets.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take measures to ensure that school curricula dealing with music lessons are not limited to the theory and appreciation of music but also provide equal emphasis on practical tuition in musical instruments.

Mr. Eggar: In August, my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and Science and for Wales published their proposals for music for ages 5 to 14. In England, these proposals were the subject of a consultation exercise undertaken by the National Curriculum Council, whose advice is due to be submitted by 20 December.

Teachers (Pension Scheme)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer 5 November, Official Report, column 53, regarding equalisation, of female contributor survivor benefits within the teachers superannuation scheme, if equal benefits are available on total service, including periods prior to 1988, without extra charge, for all teachers who have an equal retirement age.

Mr. Fallon: Widows' pensions are payable in respect of service from 1 April 1972. Service prior to that date counts only if the individual teacher elected to cover the period at full cost. Widowers' pensions are payable in respect of service from 6 April 1988. Individual female teachers had the option to cover at reduced cost service in the period 1 April 1972 to 5 April 1988, and at full cost any service before 1 April 1972.

Statemented Children

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list, for each local education authority in England, what extra resources have been made available for statemented children, expressed as teacher-hours per statemented child.

Mr. Fallon: My Department does not collect the information requested. The latest available data suggest that in 1989-90 overall spending per pupil by local education authorities in England on maintained special schools and related provision was more than four times higher than spending per pupil in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools.

American Studies

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he proposes to take on the Fulbright Commission report on the future of American studies in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend welcomes this report. He notes with pleasure the commission's endorsement of the provision in the national curriculum for the study of the United States. For further and higher education, the nature of subject provision is a matter for individual institutions.

School Transport

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to respond to the Audit Commission report "Home to School Transport: A System at the Cross Roads".

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend is considering the commission's report carefully and will respond as soon as possible.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to review the Education Act 1944 as it refers to the transport of pupils from home to school.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend will consider whether the transport provisions of the Education Act 1944 should be reviewed when he has completed his consideration of the Audit Commission's recent report on home to school transport.

Higher Education Fees

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the basic mandatory fee level for higher education students for 1992-93.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that my right hon. and learned Friend gave to my hon. Friend the member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 6 November 1991 at columns 137-40, which included details of the higher education fee levels to be reimbursed through student awards at publicly-funded institutions next year.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the estimated cost of the two journeys made by car or plane since July 1990 to Bradford by the Minister of State and the additional associated costs of the journeys.

Mr. Eggar: The total cost of two journeys to Bradford by air for myself and civil servants is as follows:

(a) air fares	490·00
(b) associated costs	410·27

Education (School Premises) Regulations

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what conclusions he has reached in respect of his review of the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981; and when he will bring the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981 into force.

Mr. Fallon: The results of the review are expected to be available towards the end of next year. The current regulations came into operation on 1 August 1981, with the exception of certain requirements which would have been likely to require building work at existing schools. Those requirements were covered by a transition period which was due to expire in September 1991 but has been extended until 1996 pending the outcome of the review.

Pupil Testing

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the 1992 tests for seven-year-olds will be sent to schools.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Distribution of the revised and simplified tests for seven-year-olds for use in 1992 began in late November and will shortly be complete. I have placed copies of the tests in the libraries of both Houses.

EC Education Ministers (Meeting)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the outcome of the meeting in Brussels on Monday 25 November of the European Community education ministers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I attended the meeting on Monday 25 November of the Council and the Ministers for Education meeting within the Council. Before the meeting opened formally, the Ministers heard a presentation by the Education Minister of the Russian Federation. The Commission presented its recently published memoranda on higher education and on distance learning. The Council and the Ministers agreed a resolution on the improvement of Community co-operation on research and statistics in education, and conclusions concerning co-operation in relation to quality assessment and transnational mobility in higher education, transnational school partnerships, and questions concerning the teaching profession. The Council and the Ministers noted a report on the implementation of the resolution of 24 May 1988 on the European dimension in education, and they received a report from the Presidency on the work in progress in the Education Committee of the preparation of a draft convention revising the Statute of the European Schools.

WALES

EC Regional Policy

15. Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on proposals for a new European regional body to advise on regional policy and the administration of the structure funds.

Mr. David Hunt: The forthcoming inter-governmental conference on political union will be considering proposals put forward by the presidency for strengthening the regional dimension at the Community level. How this is achieved will be determined in the negotiations.

25. Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will meet European Commissioner Millan to discuss the impact of EC regional policies on the economy of Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I met the Director General of the Regional Policy Directorate, Mr. Landaburu on 22 November and hope to meet Commissioner Millan shortly.

River Quality

16. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has regarding the quality of river water.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The most recent comprehensive information published is contained in the 1985 river quality survey.

19. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he would make a statement on conditions of rivers in Wales in the light of the 1990 river quality survey conducted by the NRA.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The report of the 1990 survey has not yet been published by the National Rivers Authority. When it is, I confidently expect it to show an overall improvement in the quality of rivers in the Authority's Welsh Region since 1985.

Welsh Assembly

17. Mr. Grist: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for establishing an elected Welsh assembly.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Homelessness

18. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has concerning the number of people registered as homeless with Welsh local authorities.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The number of people within households accepted as homeless by housing authorities under the Housing Act 1985 in Wales in the first six months of 1991 was 12,153.

Local Government Reform

20. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the consultation process on Welsh local government reform.

Mr. David Hunt: The consultation period closed on 31 October. I am currently evaluating the very full and helpful responses that have been received.

Rural Housing

21. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what Tai Cymru's rural housing initiative will be in 1992-93; and how many new tenancies will be available in the rented sector as a result of Welsh Office policy.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend hopes to announce the details of the block distribution very soon. This year, Housing for Wales is devoting 27 per cent. of its resources to rural housing. Together with the additional £3·8 million that I have made available to local authorities, this should produce a total of more than 1,000 additional social housing units this year in rural Wales.

Welsh Language

22. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the quality of teaching in Welsh-medium schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The outcome of Her Majesty's inspectorate Wales general inspection reports and the first test results of seven-year-olds in Wales indicate that the quality of teaching in Welsh-medium schools is sound.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to establish an independent Welsh for Adults funding council; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No. From 1 April 1993 the Further Education Funding Council for Wales will have a duty to secure for adults the provision of adequate facilities for courses for proficiency or literacy in Welsh.

Unemployment

23. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on trends in unemployment in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Between March 1986 and April 1990 seasonally adjusted unemployment in Wales fell from 172,300 to 83,100—a fall of 51·8 per cent. Unemployment then rose in Wales, like the rest of the United Kingdom, and in September 1991 unemployment stood at 119,900. It is pleasing to note that this trend was broken in October, when there was a fall in seasonally unadjusted unemployment in Wales.

Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty

24. Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he proposes to protect and enhance designated areas of outstanding natural beauty in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have no plans to change the existing legislative basis and policies for designating areas of outstanding natural beauty. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment gave a full statement of the Government's view on the protection of such areas in England and Wales in reply to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) on 17 January 1991.

East Glamorgan District General Hospital

26. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the chairman of the Mid Glamorgan health authority to discuss the replacement of the East Glamorgan district general hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: In addition to informal meetings, my right hon. Friend last met the chairman of Mid Glamorgan health authority on 20 November 1991 along with other DHA chairmen. The authority is currently working up the design for the new hospital, which received approval in principle on 29 April 1991.

A465

27. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the start date for construction of the A465 missing link.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Subject to the overall management of the programme it is the intention to start the A465 Aberdulais-Glynneath scheme in 1992-93.

Inward Investment

28. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the proportion of United Kingdom inward investment attracted to Wales in 1990-91.

Mr. David Hunt: In the financial year 1990-91, Wales secured almost 18 per cent. of the foreign inward investment projects coming to the United Kingdom. Already this year another 165 projects have been secured promising capital expenditure of £830 million and more than 15,500 new or safeguarded jobs.

This figure is based on information provided by companies to Welsh Development International and the Invest in Britain Bureau at the time of the announcement of the decision to invest. It takes no account of subsequent developments.

GP Fund Holders

29. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to require all health authorities in Wales to adopt policies at unit management level which prevents any consultant from treating his waiting list for general practitioner fund holders more favourably than for non-fund holders.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: We will shortly be issuing guidance on contracting for services in 1992-93 which will confirm that the management of waiting lists must be on the basis of clinical need. All district health authorities, provider units and GP fund holders are aware of, and conform to, this principle.

Cardiff-Wales Airport

Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will allocate any funds from his Department's budget to enhance the effectiveness of Cardiff-Wales airport in making a contribution to the economy of south Wales, including the maintenance of high standards of security and all other arrangements at the airport.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Cardiff-Wales airport is a successful business and should continue to operate on a commercial basis. It has been able to finance its recent investment without needing to borrow. Applications for supplementary credit approval to cover additional investment are matters for consideration by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

Community Councils

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what review he has made of the spending by community councils in Wales, especially where spending is in excess of a community council's precept; what record he has of borrowings by community councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No review of spending by individual community councils in Wales has been undertaken recently. Community councils can spend in excess of their precept only where they have the necessary reserves or have received my consent to borrow. Consents to borrow in the present financial year are as follows:

Towyn town council	35,000
Whitland town council	50,000
Cwm Cadnant town council	10,000
Overton community council	2,000
Pennard community council	12,000
Aberaeron town council	70,000

Nitrogen Oxides

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what action he has taken to achieve implementation in Wales of the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe agreement on the reduction of emissions of nitrogen oxides or their transboundary fluxes;

(2) what action he has taken through the relevant Government departments to achieve implementation in Wales of the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe agreement on the reduction of emissions of nitrogen oxides or their transboundary fluxes.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This agreement requires parties to reduce total national emissions of nitrogen oxides (NOx) to 1987 levels by 1994, and to apply emission standards to major sources based on best available technologies which are economically feasible.

This will be achieved in Wales and throughout the United Kingdom principally through implementation of the European Community Directives on emissions from large combustion plants, from cars, and from heavy diesel vehicles; and through the operation of the new systems of air pollution control and integrated pollution control being introduced under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

NHS Wales

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether it remains his policy that the future of the NHS in Wales should be based on the district health system as defined by the World Health Organisation global programme committee in 1986.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend is mindful of the views of the World Health Organisation. It remains a cornerstone of our policy to devolve management responsibility within the NHS wherever possible. Our reforms are aimed at improving accountability by bringing the management of health services closer to the local community.

EMPLOYMENT

Low Pay

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will set out the proportion of manual and non-manual workers, male and female, in each standard industrial classification division, who earned below £100, £120, £150, £170, £180 and £200 according to the 1990 earnings survey.

Mr. Forth: The information available from the 1990 new earnings survey (NES), and the more recent 1991 NES, is given in the following tables:

Employment, Northumberland

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many men and women are in (a) manual and (b) non-manual employment in each local authority district in the county of Northumberland.

Mr. Jackson: This data is available only from the decennial census of population. The latest information published is for 1981 and can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library. Information from OPCS on the 1991 census of population is expected to be available in mid-1992.

Apprenticeship Statistics

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the numbers of completing apprenticeship as bricklayers, joiners, electricians, plasterers, and plumbers in each year since 1981.

Mr. Jackson: Reliable information about the numbers completing apprenticeships in these trades each year is not available.

Earnings Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the percentage increase in the average gross weekly earnings of all adult males between 9 April 1990 and 8 April 1991.

Mr. Forth: The increase in average gross weekly earnings between the April 1990 new earnings survey and the April 1991 survey for all adult males is estimated to be 7·7 per cent.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the average length of time taken from the date of suspension of unemployment benefit and the reduction of income support until a decision is made by the adjudication officer to allow or disallow the claim; and, of the number of claims suspended, how many have now been decided upon;

(2) what statistics are compiled by local unemployment benefit offices concerning claimants whose benefit is suspended, when a doubt arises as to the circumstances under which their last job ended;

(3) how many claims for unemployment benefit made in the Oxford area in October 1991 were suspended on the grounds that the claimant may have left his or her job voluntarily or may have been dismissed for misconduct; and what proportion of the total fresh claims this number represents;

(4) what specific guidance and procedural instructions are given to staff in local unemployment benefit offices, to decide which claims for unemployment benefit and income support should be suspended on the grounds that the claimant may have left his job voluntarily or may have been dismissed for misconduct, and those which should not; and if he will make this information available publicly.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service Executive Agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the response from the training and enterprise council's chief executive network on staffing arrangements to his proposal for the future of civil service staff now seconded to the TECs.

Mr. Jackson: The TEC chief executive consultative group is still involved in discussions with the Department. We have no plans to publish its views.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the impact of the autumn statement on the monitoring of expenditure of local enterprise companies and training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Jackson: The autumn statement as the Government's plan for public spending does not have a direct bearing on the monitoring of expenditure of local enterprise companies or training and enterprise councils.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to change the monitoring of training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies.

Mr. Jackson: The TEC operating agreement for next year is currently being reviewed and this includes monitoring arrangements. Arrangements for monitoring the performance of local enterprise companies is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to change the method of output-related funding for training and enterprise councils and local enterprise companies.

Mr. Jackson: In 1992-93 the method of output-related funding of youth training and employment training for training and enterprise councils will be largely unchanged. However, there will be a new category of output for trainees who achieve literacy and numeracy qualifications.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to end the secondment of civil service staff for local enterprise companies and training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Jackson: As my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State announced on 26 July, we have asked officials to take forward discussions with TECs, trade unions and seconded staff about future staffing arrangements and the practicalities of TECs as private companies, being free to employ directly all their own staff. Discussions are now well under way.

The position with local enterprise companies in Scotland is different in that legislation determined that all secondments would be for a maximum three-year period from 1 April 1991.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the organisations consulted on the future arrangments for seconding civil service staff for local enterprise companies and training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Jackson: Discussions about the future staffing arrangements for training and enterprise councils (TECs) have been with TECs, staff on secondment to TECs and with the two main trade unions representing members on secondment. No other organisations have been involved in the discussions.

Arrangments for secondments to local enterprise companies in Scotland were agreed prior to 1 April 1991 and there are no proposals to change them.

Large Goods Vehicle Licence

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether drivers who hold an LGV licence, who do not take the medical examination required once drivers reach the age of 46 years or to renew their licence, are deemed to be unavailable for work.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service Executive Agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of employment in manufacturing was lost in the Coventry area from May 1979 to the latest convenient date; how many jobs that represents; and what has been the change in employment levels so far in 1991.

Mr. Jackson: The earliest and most recent estimates of employment in local areas are from the censuses of employment for September 1981 and September 1989. Between those dates, the number of employees in employment in manufacturing in the Coventry local authority district fell by 19,900 or 29 per cent.

Employees' Earnings

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report, figures for Merseyside giving (a) the proportion of full-time employees, male, female, and total earning less than (i) £140 per week and (ii) £130 per week, and (b) the proportion of part-time employees, male, female, and total earning less than (i) £3·80 per hour and (ii) £3·60 per hour in each case excluding overtime, shift, and payment-by-results premiums.

Mr. Forth: The information available from the 1991 new earnings survey is given in the following tables.

Bank Holidays

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for The Wrekin of 26 November, Official Report, column 764, he will identify the source of his figures on public holidays in the Netherlands; and if he will list each of the seven public holidays to which he referred.

Mr. Forth: The figures that I gave to the hon. Member are contained in the HMSO official diary for 1991 and have been confirmed by Employment Department officials with the royal Netherlands embassy in London. These are new year's day; Good Friday; Easter Monday; Ascension day; Whit Monday; Christmas and Boxing day.

I am aware that the Netherlands also has one or two days taken as holidays by some groups of workers; these are not considered public holidays by the Dutch Government.

CIVIL SERVICE

Executive Agencies

45. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will make a statement about progress under the "Next Steps" initiative.

Mr. Renton: "Next Steps" is progressing well. On 19 November the Central Statistical Office was launched as the 57th agency: now almost 40 per cent. of the civil service is covered, with more to come. The Government's second "Next Steps" annual review, published last month, shows agencies meeting and beating targets for quality of service, financial performance and efficiency. It gives many instances of improved service to customers.

Women Civil Servants

46. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many women are employed in the upper grades of the civil service.

Mr. Renton: On 1 April 1991 there were 3,156 women in grades 1 to 7 and equivalents. This represents just over 12 per cent. of all staff in these grades, up from almost 7 per cent. in 1984 when the programme of action to achieve equality of opportunity for women in the civil service was launched.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Canadian Lobsters

Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations Her Majesty's Government are making to the European Commission on the problem of imports of Canadian lobsters.

Mr. Curry: Our officials have raised this with the Commission, which as a result has the matter under review.

Food Marketing

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on Government support to help farmers market their product better.

Mr. Curry: The Prime Minister launched the Government's initiatives at a seminar on food marketing which he chaired in November. We are introducing a new group marketing grant to encourage the development of producer groups with real commercial expertise. We have set up in the Ministry a market task force to stimulate interest and action by producers. It will be working with major buyers in the retail, catering and processing sectors to identify broad production opportunities for farmers and growers. Meanwhile, we shall continue to ensure that the burdens on industry are kept to reasonable levels. These and other initiatives are explained in the policy statement "Our Farming Future", which was also published in November.

Farmers (Early Retirement)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to introduce a scheme to enable farmers to take early retirement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The EC Commission has tabled proposals which would require all member states to set up an early retirement scheme linked to the amalgamation of small farms. This is not relevant to UK conditions, and we are arguing that the scheme should be optional.

Sheep Annual Premium

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will investigate the delays in paying out the first advance payment of sheep annual premium to farmers in Northumberland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The Department has met its declared target of making the majority of first advance payments under the sheep annual premium scheme by the early autumn and payment of the second advance is already under way. The position in Northumberland is in line with the rest of the country.

Food Labelling

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy that all British-produced food, both at the farm gate and at the retail stage, be labelled with country of origin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: We believe that consumers should know the origin of the products they buy, since it is as a result of public concern that we have set stringent welfare and safety standards in the United Kingdom which are more severe than those of our major competitors. The consumer cannot be informed of this unless food at the retail stage is labelled with the country of origin—whether the United Kingdom or an overseas country. The country of origin is usually clear on branded goods, but it is not always evident on goods marketed under retailers' own labels unless they voluntarily declare it. We are, therefore, encouraging retailers to state the country of origin on own-label goods, and are very pleased that those who attended the Prime Minister's food marketing seminar last month agreed, where appropriate, to do so. We are now approaching other retailers to ask them to do likewise.

Environmental Controls

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to ensure that farmers are properly compensated for the imposition of environmental controls; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Farmers should not normally expect to be compensated for avoiding pollution, complying with regulations or observing rules which do not go beyond good farming practice.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on proposals for reform of the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Curry: The Government's approach to reform of the common agricultural policy is clearly set out in the policy statement "Our Farming Future", launched by my right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture on 15 November. Copies have been deposited in the Libraries of both Houses, and sent to all MPs, MEPs, Peers and farming organisations.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Westminster Station

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will give consideration to seeking the opening of the entrance to Westminster station on the Victoria embankment to facilitate access and egress for hon. Members.

Mr. MacGregor: This is primarily a matter for London Underground so I am arranging for a copy of the hon. Member's question to be sent to the chairman.

Ministers' Pay

Mr. Page: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement about Ministers' pay.

Mr. MacGregor: The salaries of Ministers and other paid office holders were last increased from 1 January 1991 under the terms of the Ministerial and other Salaries Order 1990. The Government have considered carefully the level of Ministerial salaries and, taking all factors into account, propose a 4·5 per cent. increase in all Ministers and paid office holders salaries. The details are set out in the following table and I have today laid the draft Ministerial and other Salaries Order 1991 to implement these changes from 1 January 1992.

In accordance with the resolution of the House of Commons of 21 July 1987, the reduced parliamentary salaries of Commons' Ministers and paid office holders will increase by 6·5 per cent. to £23,227 from 1 January 1992.

Notes:

Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster does not accept his Ministerial salary.

The Lord Chancellor's salary is governed by Section 3 of the Ministerial and other Pensions and Salaries Act 1991 and is not affected by this Order. His salary effective from 1 December 1991 is £106,750.

The Solicitor General for Scotland is in neither House.

Payroll Giving

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Lord President of the Council what proportion of members of staff directly employed in the House of Commons are participating in the give-as-you-earn scheme.

Mr. Beith: I have been asked to reply.

The proportion of staff directly employed by the House of Commons Commission who are participating in the give-as-you-earn scheme is 2·28 per cent.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Turks and Caicos

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his meeting with the Chief Minister of Turks and Caicos.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I saw the Chief Minister of the Turks and Caicos Islands on 28 November and had a full and thorough discussion of the Turks and Caicos Islands' political and developmental priorities and the good government of the territory. I also met the Chief Minister at the West India Committee's Caribbean conference in Brussels on 21 November.

Children's Rights

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government intend to ratify the United Nations convention on the rights of children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Her Majesty's Government hope to be in a position to ratify the United Nations convention on the rights of the child soon.

Single Market

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table showing the transposition rates of single market laws within each member state of the European Community.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The latest European Commission figures on implementation of single market measures cover the period up to 15 October 1991.

Of 137 measures that should already have been implemented, member states have not implemented:

		Per cent
Denmark	12	9
France	19	14
United Kingdom	26	19
Portugal	29	21
Germany	31	23
Greece	31	23
Spain	32	23
Belgium	38	28
Netherlands	39	28
Luxembourg	43	31
Ireland	49	36
Italy	63	46

The Commission is preparing updated figures. These will be made available to Parliament when published.

Arms Control

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the decision taken for the new organisational format for his Departmental forum on arms control and disarmament held with non-governmental organisations on 26 November; what range of issues was addressed; and with which organisations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At my meeting with 34 non-governmental organisations on 26 November discussion concentrated on the three major topics previously agreed with a broad selection of the NGOs, namely NATO in the wider Europe, arms transfers and nuclear arms control. The proceedings of the meeting, which was held under Chatham house rules, were off the record.

Gibraltar

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 378, if he will give details of the informal arrangement whereby a number of British Members of the European Parliament take a close and active interest in Gibraltar; and if he will list such Members and the convenors or secretaries who arrange any meetings or other functions.

Mr. Garel-Jones: There are two small groups of British MEPs, Labour and Conservative, who informally represent Gibraltar's interests in the European Parliament. They are led by Lord Bethell and Mr. Alf Lomas. There are no convenors or secretaries.

British Mercenaries

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about British citizens fighting as mercenaries in any part of Croatia, Serbia or other parts of Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have seen press reports, and have some independent corroboration, that a small number of British citizens are fighting in Yugoslavia. We have also seen reports of the deaths of two British citizens, which British consular staff in Yugoslavia are investigating. We deplore any foreign encouragement of this tragic conflict.

EC Business

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Foreign Affairs Council will meet on 2 December. The main agenda items are preparations for the European Council on 9 and 10 December and Yugoslavia (including the question of positive additional measures). The Council will also agree a common position for the EC-Egypt Co-operation Council. There may also be discussion on the EC investment partners scheme which is designed to promote joint ventures between private enterprises in the Community and developing countries. There will also be a Ministerial session of the inter-governmental conference on political union on 2 and 3 December.

"a Community strategy to limit carbon dioxide emissions and improve energy efficiency".

This includes a proposal for a tax on the use of energy. There will be a Ministerial meeting of the intergovernmental conference on EMU on 1 and 2 December.

The Labour and Social Affairs Council will meet on Tuesday 3 December. Ministers are likely to discuss the proposed Directives on Working Time; European works councils; proposed recommendations on minimum resources; childcare; proposed directive on safety signs; the declaration on dignity at work (sexual harassment); social security for migrant workers and the Commission report on the second poverty programme.

The Environment Council will meet on 12 and 13 December. Ministers are likely to discuss proposals for regulations on eco-labelling, existing chemicals, the import and export of chemicals and a new environment fund (LIFE). Ministers may also consider the proposals for a directive on the protection of habitats and wild fauna and flora, and on the proposed regulation on the shipment of waste. The United Nations conference on environment and development and climate change will also be discussed.

Joint Energy and Environment Council will meet on 13 December. Ministers will discuss the Council conclusion on the Commission's communication on

"a Community strategy to limit carbon dioxide emissions and improve energy efficiency".

This includes a proposal for a tax on the use of energy.

The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 16 December. Ministers are likely to discuss the Portuguese convergence programme and the Investment Services Directive. Following detailed negotiations, political agreement on the draft Directive for the post-1992 transitional VAT arrangements was reached at ECOFIN on 11 November. Formal adoption of, and final agreement on, the legal text are expected at this Council, provided texts are available from the Jurists-Linguists. Any agreement will be subject to United Kingdom Parliamentary scrutiny. Following the agreement reached in principle at the July ECOFIN that case by case consideration of European Investment Bank lending should be available to countries with trade and co-operation agreements with the Community, the Council will now discuss the detailed terms and conditions under which lending might take place. Ministers may also consider road transport tax and a package agreed by OECD consenses participants to reduce trade distortive export credit and tied aid subsidies.

Ministers are also likely to discuss the Commission's revised proposal for a Directive on technical standards for satellite broadcasting.

European Community

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will state when it became the practice to refer to the European Economic Community, the European Coal and Steel Community and Euratom as the European Community; for what reasons this practice was adopted; and what parliamentary authority has been given to this change of usage.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The European Economic Community, the European Coal and Steel Community and the European Atomic Energy Community are collectively referred to as the European Communities, for example in the Single European Act and the European Communities Act, 1972. The term European Community is generally used as a shorthand reference to the European Economic Community, established by the treaty of Rome in 1957. Members of Parliament need no authority to refer to these institutions in whatever way they choose.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Fixed Profit Car Scheme

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 21 November, what are the fixed profit car scheme tax free rates for (a) hon. Members, (b) volunteer hospital drivers and (c) civil servants compared with the rates of mileage allowances paid to each group.

Mr. Maude: The fixed profit car scheme rates which may be used by honourable Members and civil servants, like any other employees and office holders, to work out the taxable elements of their motor mileage allowances and which form the basis of the tables drawn up by the Inland Revenue to enable volunteer hospital drivers to read off a profit figure for their motor mileage allowances, are the same in all cases.

The 'tax-free' rates for the full tax year 1991-92 are:

Per mile

Cubic capacity	Up to 4,000 miles	Over 4,000 miles
Up to 1,000	24·5p	11·0p
1,001-1,500	30·0	13·0p
1,501-2,000	34·0p	16·0p
Over 2,000	45·0p	20·5p

The rates of mileage allowances paid to each group for 1991-92 are as follows:

(a) Honourable Members

Cubic capacity	Up to 20,000 miles	Over 20,000 miles
Up to 1,300	28·8p	15·1p
1,301-2,300	43·4p	19·9p
Over 2,300	68·2p	34·1p

(b) Volunteer hospital drivers.
The rates vary between health authorities

(c) Civil Service

Cubic capacity	Up to 7,000 miles	Over 7,000 miles
Up to 1,500	35·7p	13·0p
1,501-2,000	37·0	15·0
Over 2,000	39.0p	17·0p

Civil Service Pay

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with civil service trade union representatives regarding pay and conditions of service.

Mr. Maples: Treasury Ministers meet representatives of the civil service trade unions from time to time. The Minister of State last met representatives of the Institution of Professionals, Managers and Specialists on 19 November to discuss the institution's claim for a single scale maximum for the different occupational groups covered by the long-term pay agreement with the IPMS.

Travelling Costs

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which EC member states allow employees to put travel to work costs against their income tax, together with approximate sterling equivalents of the amounts involved; and which member states allow employees to make fixed-amount or fixed-percentage deductions.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The latest available information is given in the table.

All distances have been converted to miles and all amounts have been converted to sterling using the latest available purchasing power parities.

Country	Tax treatment of travel to work costs
Belgium	A lump sum deduction is allowed for employment expenses. This deduction is deemed to include home-to-work travel expenses and is calculated as a percentage of income on a degressive scale. The maximum permitted deduction is £1,533, but if taxpayers can prove higher actual expenses they can claim the higher amount.
Denmark	A deduction is allowed for home-to-work travel which exceeds 12·5 miles per working day. For distances between 12·5 and 34 miles the deduction is 11p per mile per working day, and 3p per mile for distances over 34 miles. If the taxpayer uses his own car and the daily travelling exceeds 34 miles the deduction may be made at the rate of 10·5p per mile for a distance in excess of 12·5 miles per working day, if public transport cannot be used.
France	Actual costs are deductible, but if the distance from home-to-work is more than 18·75 miles the taxpayer must provide evidence of expenditure and must have sound reasons (other than personal preference) for living so far from the place of work.
Germany	Costs in respect of one journey per day by public transport are fully deductible. The costs of travel by the taxpayer's own vehicle are deductible as follows: car —25p per mile motorcycle—11p per mile bicycle —6p per mile
Greece	No specific provisions have been found.
Ireland	No deduction is allowed.
Italy	There is no specific deduction or tax credit for home-to-work travel expenses, but all employees receive a tax credit in respect of expenses incurred in the course of employment. That tax credit is £269 for all employees plus £84 if employment income does not exceed £5,138.
Luxembourg	An annual deduction is allowed amounting to £93·60 per mile up to 18·75 miles. As no additional deduction is permitted for distances over 18·75 miles, the maximum deduction is £1,755.
Netherlands	A fixed deduction is allowed, based on the method of transport and the home-to-work distance. The annual deductions range from £204 where the distance is between six and nine miles, to £887 where the distance is over 44 miles. The deductions for distances over 18·75 miles apply only to travel by public transport. Travel by private car is limited to a maximum deduction of £419. There are provisions to encourage car-sharing: drivers may receive up to 19p per mile as a tax-free reimbursement from their passengers.
Portugal	No special provisions have been found.
Spain	No special provisions have been found.
United Kingdom	No deduction is allowed.

Uncollected Tax

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his best estimates for the levels of uncollected (a) value added tax, (b) income tax, including schedule D, and (c) corporation tax, excise duties and capital gains tax, expressed both as a sum figure and as a percentage of total tax due for each category.

Mr. Maude: The amounts remitted or written off as irrecoverable as a sum figure and as a percentage of tax collected were as follows:

		Remitted or written off £ million	Net receipts £ million	Remittances etc. as a percentage of receipts Per cent.
(a)	Value added tax	212·716	30,542	0·7
(b)	Income tax	364·862	52,847	0·69
(c)	Corporation tax	184·725	22,347	0·83
	Excise duties	0·408	22,385	0·002
	Capital gains tax	12·076	1,801	0·67

The figures for value added tax and excise duties are for calendar year 1990 and the figures for income tax, corporation tax and capital gains tax as for the year to 31 October 1990.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Amos: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to pay interest on moneys outstanding to small business men as a result of a mistake by a VAT office; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Finance Act 1991 introduced a statutory provision under which Customs and Excise are required to pay interest to businesses, irrespective of size, on moneys outstanding as a result of error by VAT officials.

European Monetary Union

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what commitment is made for the provision of convergence funds by those who sign the present draft of the EMU treaty; and how this provision applies to those countries who at any stage have not yet opted to be covered by the single currency.

Mr. Maude: There is no provision in the draft treaty articles on EMU prepared by the Dutch presidency for a convergence fund to be established. The question of the role of non-participants in stage 3 of EMU in such a fund does not therefore arise. The Government believe that convergence is best promoted by the adoption of sound economic policies.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

Mr. Shore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will list the public sector borrowing requirement from 1970-71 to the 1992-93 estimate (a) in cash terms, (b) adjusted for inflation, and (c) as a percentage of gross domestic product.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 28 November 1991]: The figures are in the table. An estimate of the PSBR in 1992-93 will be published in the next Financial Statement and Budget Report.

EC Funds

Mr. Shore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the level of the United Kingdom's contribution to European Community funds since 1973 up to and including the estimate for 1992 (a) gross and (b) net, both in cash terms and after adjusting for inflation.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 28 November 1991]: The United Kingdom's total gross and net contributions to the European Community budget, in current and constant 1990 prices for the years 1973-90, are set out in the table. A forecast for 1991, in current prices of £3,973 million (gross) and £1,225 million (net) was published in the "Statement on the 1991 Community Budget" (Cm 1490). The outturn for 1991 and a forecast for 1992 will be included in the 1992 statement, which will be published early next year.

Export Licences

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what time period Her Majesty's Customs is required to store details of sensitive technology export licences after permission for export has been granted.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 29 November 1991]: Export licences are examined and endorsed, but not retained by Customs and Excise. Questions about their storage after this action are a matter for the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Tax Revenue

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of British Tax revenue was made up from (a) direct taxes, and (b) indirect taxes in each of the years 1979, 1983, 1987 and 1990; and what were the comparable figures in 1990 for each of the other European Community countries.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 29 November 1991]: Government taxes, including rates, are classified in the national accounts as taxes on income, expenditure and capital, and not as direct and indirect taxes. Non-tax items, such as social security contributions and the community charge, are classified separately. Internationally, there is no general agrement on the criteria for distinguishing between direct and indirect taxes. Broadly speaking, however, taxes on income and capital can be regarded as direct taxes and taxes on expenditure as indirect taxes. On this basis, including the relevant non-tax items, the figures requested for the United Kingdom are as follows:

Percentage of total taxes, national insurance contributions and community charge

	Taxes on income[1] Per cent.	Taxes on expenditure[2] Per cent.
1983	48·7	51·3
1990	51·5	48·5

[1] Taxes on income, taxes on capital, employees' social security contributions, community charge and royalties.
[2] Taxes on expenditure (including rates) and employers' social security contributions.

Data for other European Community countries can be found in the OECD publication "Revenue Statistics of OECD Member Countries." The last year for which complete figures are presently available is 1989 and these are shown in the table. The allocation between direct and indirect taxes corresponds, as far as is possible on the available data, with that used in the preceding table. Because of minor differences in accounting conventions, the component OECD figures for the United Kingdom do not in all cases correspond to those given in the national accounts.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on tax revenues in 1992-93 and 1993-94, respectively, of the EC proposals for new systems for the collection of VAT, excise duties and customs duties after the abolition of controls at EC internal borders on 1 January 1993 giving separate figures for VAT, excise duties and customs duties; and if he will estimate the difference it would make to the VAT figures if the proposed new system for VAT on imports of goods and related services from other EC member states were extended also to such imports from non-EC countries.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The effects of the single market on tax revenues are difficult to predict because they depend on behavioural responses and the pattern and terms of trade.

The abolition of travellers' allowances for tax-paid goods from 1 January 1993 will reduce the yield from VAT and excise duties by about £15-40 million in 1992-93 and by about £100-300 million annually in subsequent years.

The introduction of postponed accounting for VAT on EC imports from 1 January 1993 will create a once-off cash flow loss to the Exchequer in 1992-93 of about £1½ billion because VAT will be collected later. There will be no effects in subsequent years.

To offset the revenue loss resulting from the introduction of postponed accounting, the Government have decided to introduce monthly VAT returns for the largest VAT payers in autumn 1992. This change is not a direct requirement of EC single market legislation. However it will produce an offsetting once-off cashflow gain to the Exchequer in 1992-93 of about £1½ billion because VAT will be collected earlier. Again, there will be no effects in subsequent years.

If postponed accounting were subsequently extended to non-EC imports there would be an additional once-off cashflow loss to the Exchequer of about £1 billion. There would be no effects in subsequent years.

As a consequence of the changes to the VAT technical system to operate in the single market, the VAT treatment of non-Community goods imported under inward processing relief (IPR) will change. VAT will no longer be chargeable at importation, but will be relieved while the goods remain under the IPR regime. As a result, in 1992-93 there will be a once and for all cash-flow loss to the revenue, estimated at some £40 million. However, that figure may be lower depending on the number of IPR traders required to submit monthly returns.

The introduction, for those traders who will wish to put EC goods directly on to the market, of the system of registered excise dealers and shippers, may also lead to a small revenue loss in 1992-93. However, this will depend on the details of the accounting arrangements eventually adopted and the numbers of traders wishing to use them. The revenue from customs duties will not be affected by the completion of the single market.

EMS (Norway)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will list the grounds upon which the Norwegian Government's request for association with the European monetary system was rejected; and whether he will make a statement upon the United Kingdom's position.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 29 November 1991]: No request for a formal association with the EMS has been received. In common with other EC member states the United Kingdom welcomed the Norwegian decision to link the krone to the ecu in October 1990 as a positive contribution to exchange rate stability in Europe. The Government also fully support the related bilateral swap arrangements between EC central banks, including the Bank of England, and the Norwegian central bank which give the Norwegian central bank access to short-term funds for intervention purposes.

ENERGY

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answers to the hon. Members for Bosworth (Mr. Tredinnick) and for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) on 11 November, Official Report, column 359, if he will detail what part of the expenditure spent by the public sector on energy efficiency is allocated to direct investments in public sector-owned or operated buildings, transport and other activities; and what proportion is allocated to promoting energy efficiency to those outside the public sector.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Detailed splits in the form requested of the expenditure on the various programmes which made up the total public sector spend on energy efficiency are not available. However, the bulk of the expenditure does relate to direct investment of over £900 million by the Department of the Environment to improve the energy efficiency of local authority housing.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will state the total sum available for grants under the home energy efficiency scheme for 1991-92 and in 1992-93, and total spending in 1989-90 and 1990-91 under the same scheme and its predecessors.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The home energy efficiency scheme came into operation on 1 January 1991. In the period 1 January to 31 March 1991 approximately £1·3 million was paid out in grants under the scheme. In the current financial year £24 million is available for grant. My Department's budget for the promotion of energy efficiency in low-income households for 1992-93 is some £40 million. The bulk of this will go in support of HEES, but is is not yet possible to give a precise figure for the amount which will be available for grants.

Prior to the introduction of HEES, expenditure on grants for draughtproofing materials under the energy grant scheme operated under the employment training programme, was £10·08 million in 1989-90 and £9·31 million in 1990-91.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will indicate the allocation of funding to each network installer for the first year of the home energy efficiency scheme, and the proportion of each allocation paid out by 1 October 1991.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Allocations to individual network installers are made by the Energy Action Grants Agency on a quarterly basis, as provided for under section 15(2) of the regulations (SI 1990 No. 1791). It is not the Department's policy to make public information on individual network installers or other contractors working under the home energy efficiency scheme, but in aggregate the total amount allocated to network installers in respect of the three quarters to end December 1991 was £14 million, of which £6·3 million had been paid by 1 October.

Oil and Gas Extraction

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the prospects for oil and gas extraction in the Firth of Clyde area.

Mr. Moynihan: There are no petroleum licences extant in the firth of Clyde area. My Department knows of no present plans for oil and gas activity in the area.

EC (Visits)

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list for himself, and for each of the Ministers at his Department, details of (a) the number of visits made in the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, (b) the number of visits made to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (c) the number of nights spent over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

Mr. Wakeham: (a) The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory), represented the United Kingdom at the Energy Council in Luxembourg on 29 October. (b) None.

(c) One night in Luxembourg, 28 October, before the Energy Council.

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list (i) the number of visits made by officials in his Department during the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, (ii) the number of visits made by officials in his Department to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (iii) the number of nights spent by officials in his Department over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

Mr. Wakeham: The statistics requested for the period 22 October to 22 November are 31, 21 and 34.

EC Councils

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the EC ministerial council meetings at which his Department has or will be represented during November and December.

Mr. Wakeham: The Department of Energy expects to be represented at a joint Energy and Environment Council planned for 13 December.

Electricité de France

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what amount of electricity has been imported into the United Kingdom from Electricité de France in each of the past five years.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Figures on the amount of electricity imported into the United Kingdom for the years 1986 to 1990 are found in table 50 of the "Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics 1991", a copy of which is kept in the Library of the House. For the first nine months of 1991 imports of electricity total 12,132 GW hours and exports 14 GW hours. Since 1986 all the United Kingdom's imports and exports of electricity have been carried out solely with France.

Subsidence Compensation Scheme

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to receive British Coal's annual report on the administration of the subsidence compensation scheme for 1990-91.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have now received this report from British Coal and have arranged for copies to be placed in both Libraries of the House today.

North Sea Oil

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of North sea oil lies (a) north and (b) south of a line drawn in an extension of the general direction of the border between England and Scotland.

Mr. Moynihan: No such calculations are made by my Department. Estimates of oil reserves remaining on the United Kingdom continental shelf as a whole were published in the latest report of April this year on the "Development of the Oil and Gas Resources of the United Kingdom", also known as the "Brown Book", which is available in the Library of the House.

SCOTLAND

Enterprise Zone Status

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his response to the recommendation of the Lanarkshire working group that strategic industrial development sites in north Lanarkshire should be given enterprise zone status.

Mr. Lang: The Government undertook to consider that recommendation against the background of its existing policy on enterprise zones, and the costs which might be involved. This we are doing.

Proposals for an enterprise zone in Lanarkshire would also have to comply with the European Commission's competition and sectoral aids regimes.

Scottish Bus Group

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is now in a position to state the selling price of each company within the Scottish Bus Group, and the principal conditions of sale.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I have given today about sale proceeds to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro). As previously indicated, the principal conditions in each sale relate to property clawbacks, employee pensions and concessionary fare arrangements for employees, former employees and their families on the basis of the criteria set out in the disposal programme.

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish details of the proceeds obtained from the sales of the bus operating subsidiaries of the Scottish Bus Group, and the price obtained for each.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The proceeds of the sales of the Scottish Bus Group's bus operating subsidiaries were £96·2 million, of which £56·4 million represents dividends before sale, net of capitalisation, and £39·8 million represents the amounts received for the sale of shares. The table shows details relating to each bus company sale. The disposal of insurance, engineering and property interests, and the wind up of the pension funds, is not yet complete.

[1] The number of interests is the number of those registering an interest and receiving a copy of the information memorandum on the company concerned.
[2] Profits are stated before exceptional items. The figures in each case relate to the profit or loss in the period from the preceding 1 January to the date of the last balance sheet. In some cases this period is less than 12 months.
[3] The pro forma net assets are the net assets at the last balance sheet date, adding back all dividends paid to the parent company since 1 January 1990 and adjusted for any subsequent property transfers and waivers of intra-group debt. Net asset values are on a modified historic cost basis that is, properties are included at current use valuation and all other assets and liabilities are accounted for on a historic cost basis.
[4] Dividends declared before sale include all dividends paid to the parent company, stated after deduction of capitalisations, in both cases since 1 January 1990. Capitalisations are further subscription of share capital by the parent in the subsidiary or waiver of inter-company debt.
[5] The sale price is the price paid for the shares of the relevant subsidiary including deferred consideration in the case of Western (see below).
[6] The consideration for the share capital of Kelvin Central was a nominal £1. In addition, STG has retained the right in specified circumstances, such as a resale of the company, to participate in any future uplift in the value of the company, by way of an option to subscribe for 20 per cent. of its share capital. The right expires on 18 February 1998 or, if later, the last date of repayment of debt due by Kelvin Central to STG. This debt amounts to £1 million due to be repaid in instalments by 18 February 2001.
[7] The £1 million consideration for the share capital of Western includes £600,000 on deferred terms, the last payment being due on 14 October 1998. In addition, STG has retained the right in specified circumstances, such as a resale of the company, to participate in any future uplift in the value of the company, by way of an option to subscribe for 20 per cent. of its share capital. The right expires on 14 October 1996 or the date of the last payment of deferred consideration, if later. Immediately following the sale of Western to the MEBO, the company (by prior agreement with STG) sold assets, corresponding broadly to those previously owned by the former Clydeside Scottish subsidiary, to an employee buy-out company.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many directors of training and enterprise councils are (i) men, (ii) women, (iii) from ethnic minority backgrounds and (iv) from the private sector; what information he has about from which industrial sectors directors with a private sector background come; and, of those non-private sector directors, how many are from (a) local authorities, (b) local education authorities, (c) other educational organisations, (d) trade unions, (e) voluntary organisations, (f) ethnic minority organisations, (g) employers' associations and (h) others.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information requested, in respect of the board of Scottish Enterprise, is shown in the table, with the exception of information about the ethnic origins of board members on which records are not maintained. At least two-thirds of the board members of local enterprise companies are drawn from the private sector. Individual appointments are for the local enterprise companies themselves. Scottish Office Ministers will be present at the Environment Council on 12 December and the Fisheries Council on 17-18 December; were represented by Scottish Office officials at the Agriculture Council and informal Regional Policy Council on 18-19 November; and will be represented by Scottish Office officials at the Agriculture Council on 11-12 December.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Scottish Office Ministers have not had occasion to undertake any travel outside the United Kingdom on European Community business within the past month. They are however, if not themselves present, represented at all European Community Ministerial Council meetings.

35. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he intends to visit the Blue Box theatre in Keswick.

Mr. Renton: I would be happy to consider an invitation to visit the theatre when I am next in the region.

Birmingham (City of Music)

36. Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Minister for the Arts, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 347, to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King) what response he has received to his invitation to EC Ministers of Culture to visit Birmingham in 1992.

Mr. Renton: In the course of the meeting of EC Ministers of Culture which I attended in Brussels on 14 November I asked my European colleagues to a special meeting in Birmingham on 7 September 1992, which will be preceded by a gala promenade concert at the Royal Albert Hall on 6 September. The invitation was received with great pleasure.

City of Dance Festival

37. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he intends to visit the east midlands to discuss the region's preparations for being host to the Arts Council's city of dance festival in 1993.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will visit the east midlands to discuss the region's preparations for being host to the Arts Council's city of dance festival in 1993.

Mr. Renton: I hope to visit the east midlands as part of my programme of regional visits early next year. I look forward to hearing about the region's preparations for hosting the Arts 2000 Region of Dance 1993.

Teesside Arts

38. Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next plans to visit Teesside to inspect progress in arts provision.

Mr. Renton: I spent a most enjoyable and informative day on Teesside on 21 November. I visited the "Marking the Ways" project at Bassleton Woods, Thornaby, and the "Riverscape" project at the Dorman museum in Middlesbrough. I also launched Cleveland Arts' publication "On the Map", which celebrates the cultural achievements of the partnerships forged between the public and private sectors in Cleveland. I also met the chairman and chief executive of the Teesside development corporation.

Arts Funding

39. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on public funding of the arts.

Mr. Renton: I announced on 7 November details of the Government's support for the arts for the three years commencing 1992-93. The Arts Council has since announced its detailed allocations for 1992-93, and my hon. Friend will have noted with pleasure its decision to increase the funding of Southern Arts, the regional arts board which covers his constituency, by a very handsome 20·9 per cent.

Libraries

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister for the Arts what was the number of public libraries and branch libraries in operation in the United Kingdom for each year since 1981; and if he will list the number of persons borrowing from them for each since 1981.

Mr. Renton: Statistics about the public library service are collected and published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy. They do not include information about the number of borrowers but show the following numbers of central, branch and mobile libraries:

Year (at 31 March)	Number of returning library authorities[1]	Number of libraries
1981	160	5,451
1982	163	5,456
1983	164	5,444
1984	164	5,395
1985	158	5,295
1986	162	5,364
1987	155	5,174
1988	161	5,457
1989	164	5,325
1990	166	5,587

[1]Not all library authorities make a statistical return each year. Figures for England include information received direct by the Office of Arts and Libraries from authorities.

Concerts, London

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he has any plans to fund special concerts for the youth and pensioners of London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Responsibility for funding individual arts organisations or artists in London lies with the Arts Council and the new London Arts Board. One of the main aims of both bodies in funding arts organisation is to promote access for people regardless of age. But a number of music organisations which offer services specifically for the young or for pensioners do receive grants, among them Youth and Music and Live Music Now.

SOCIAL SECURITY

EC (Visits)

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for himself, and for each of the Ministers at his Department, details of (i) the number of visits made during the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, (ii) the number of visits made to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (iii) the number of nights spent over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

Mr. Jack: As the Minister responsible for Europe in the Department, I made the following visits between 28 October and 27 November: to Brussels on 6 November; and to Lisbon on 25-26 November, which involved an overnight stay.

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (i) the number of visits made by officials in his Department during the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, (ii) the number of visits made by officials in his Department to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (iii) the number of nights spent by officials in his Department over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

Mr. Jack: The latest available information relates to October 1991. The Department arranged 37 visits to European Community countries, of which 19 were to Brussels. Officials spent 58 nights away, although this figure includes additional overnight stays for officials also involved in non-European Community business, such as attending Council of Europe meetings. If the primary purpose of a visit is for European Community business, any additional stay for other business is not recorded separately.

Pension Age Equalisation

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress has been made towards publishing a consultation paper on the equalisation of pension ages for men and women.

Miss Widdecombe: Work on the proposed discussion paper is well advanced.

Community Care Grants

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether any special arrangements exist for consideration for community care grants from the social fund for those recently released from prison.

Miss Widdecombe: People recently released from prison who are in receipt of income support are eligible to apply, in the normal way, for the full range of help available from the social fund, including community care grants.

Correspondence

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East can expect a reply to his written question of 18 November, concerning the state pension and the Christmas bonus.

Miss Widdecombe: I replied to the hon. Member today.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 18 November, Official Report, column 80, concerning the transfer to local authorities of expenditure which would otherwise have been incurred by his Department on the care element, whether the amount transferred will be based on the number of individuals applying, a block grant on average numbers applying or expected, or some other basis.

Miss Widdecombe: The amount transferred will be based on the estimated number of people who would have claimed the higher income support limits for residential care and nursing homes. It will also reflect trends in average payments.

Pensioners

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update to 1988 his reply to the right hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham, Official Report, 20 May 1991, column 389, showing the numbers of retirement pensioners with incomes other than state pensions within the given bands of income.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is in the table:

Numbers (thousands)

	Married	Single
Up to £5	130	650
£5-£10	100	350
£10-£15	140	370
£15-£20	160	430
£20-£30	340	950
£30-£40	200	400
£40-£50	200	230
£50-£60	120	150
£60-£70	90	120
£70-£80	100	130
£80-£90	80	110
£90-£100	60	70
£100-£110	70	60
£110-£130	120	120
£130-£150	90	60
£150-£200	190	100
£200 and over	330	130
Total	2,510	4,430

Note: The figures show respectively thousands of pensioner couples and single pensioners in receipt of gross incomes other than retirement pension, supplementary pension and income support. This definition conforms with that used in the answer provided to my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesham and Amersham (Sir I. Gilmour) on 20 May 1991 at columns 388-89. The income bands have been aggregated in some cases to provide a statistically adequate sample.
Source: 1988 family expenditure survey.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the current value of the state retirement pension had its 1979 value been increased each year by either the percentage rise in prices or in average earnings whichever in each year was the higher; and what would be the current value of the pensioners' Christmas bonus had it been increased since its introduction by (a) the percentage rise in prices, (b) the percentage rise in average earnings or (c) the percentage rise in either prices of average earnings whichever, in each year, had been the higher.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 18 November 1991]: The basic pension would now be worth £65·85 had it been increased since 1979 by the higher of earnings or prices. The extra cost to the national insurance fund of this increase would require the combined employer and employee National Insurance contributions to rise by £8·70 per week for a male employee on average earnings.

The Christmas bonus would now be worth £57·30 had it been increased since 1972 in line with prices, at an extra cost of £568 million; £77·40 had it been increased in line with average earnings, at an extra cost of £809 million; and £88·10 had it been increased in line with the higher of average earnings or prices, at an extra cost of £937 million. As the bonus is paid to all pensioners regardless of income, any increase in its present level would be a poorly targeted use of resources and would also require higher national insurance contributions.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to enable those who are partially sighted to qualify for mobility allowance.

Mr. Scott: Disability living allowance, which will replace mobility allowance in April 1992, will introduce a new rate of benefit for disabled people who, although physically able to walk, are unable to get around on unfamiliar routes without guidance or supervision from another person. We expect that substantial numbers of people with severe visual impairments will benefit from this extension.

Benefit Offices

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) whether he will review staffing levels in local benefit offices; what steps he proposes to increase the staff available; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will review the criteria to determine the number of staff required to cope with the workload in local benefit offices; and what steps he proposes to take to relieve the build-up of work being undertaken by existing staff in local benefit offices.

Miss Widdecombe: The staffing of district offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the benefit offices staff wage bill has been paid in overtime payments for each of the last five years.

Miss Widdecombe: It is not possible to isolate from general Departmental salaries those costs in respect of staff employed in payment of benefits.

The overall figures for staff salaries and overtime are as follows:

Year	Salaries £ million	Overtime £ million	Percentage
1986-87	690·5	21·4	3·1
1987-88	784·2	25·7	3·28
1988-89	838·8	17·4	2·07
1989-90[1]	802·6	31·9	3·97
1990-91[1]	894·9	45·9	5·13

[1] 1989-90 and 1990-91 show the costs for the Department of Social Security alone. Previous years' totals include costs for the Department of Health. It is not possible to separate the information in respect of what were then the component parts of the Department of Health and Social Security.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what specific redress will be available to claimants who are in receipt of benefits from local offices as a result of the citizens charter.

Miss Widdecombe: The question of redress for claimants who are in receipt of benefits from local offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Income Support

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what study has been made on the effect on 16 or 17-year-olds of the change in benefit regulations that removed their right to income support.

Mr. Jack: Research from MORI was commissioned in July 1990 about 16 and 17-year-olds who claim income support under the severe hardship provision. The results were published on 16 July 1991 in the report, "A Survey of 16 and 17 year Old Applicants for Severe Hardship Payments", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what loans or benefits are available to enable people on income support to pay deposits and rent in advance to enable them to move into accommodation.

Miss Widdecombe: Budgeting or crisis loans are available from the social fund to help with rent in advance for private accommodation. Help with deposits for securing accommodation is excluded from the social security system.

Cost of Living

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what evidence he has of the comparative cost of living of a 24-year-old and a 25-year-old.

Miss Widdecombe: The structure of income support is based on the Green Paper which introduced the 1988 social security reforms. This noted that there is no one age dividing line relevant to all claimants and that the clear majority of claimants under 25 were living in someone else's household. Evidence from the most recent family expenditure survey confirms that this remains the position.

Young Persons (Benefits)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pregnant women aged 16 and 17 years, respectively, received any kind of benefit in 1988-89 and 1990-91; and which benefits they received.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 21 November 1991]: Such information as is available is set out in the tables.

Year	Age	Expectant mothers in receipt of income support as a claimant	Expectant mothers in receipt of income support as the partner of a claimant	Total
1988	16	600	200	800
	17	1,400	200	1,600
1989	16	600	200	800
	17	1,100	400	1,500
1990	16	400	100	500
	17	1,700	100	1,800

Notes:

1. Figures on income support relate to the date of enquiry not over the whole year.
2. Figures are not yet available for income support for May 1991.
3. All figures have been rounded to the nearest hundred.
4. As the figures are based on a 1 per cent. sample, small figures may be unreliable.

Year	Age	Maternity allowance	Sickness benefit
1989	16	Nil	Nil

Notes:

1. Figures relate to the number of awards in the 12 months ended 2 April 1989. Figures are not yet available for 1990-91.
2. All figures are based on a 1:100 sample. As the number of sample cases is so small, in relation to the total population they cannot be considered reliable.
3. Additionally, 1,400 16-year-old women and 1,500 17-year-old women were awarded national insurance credits although no benefit was payable.

DEFENCE

Challenger II Tanks

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration was given to the use of a global positioning system in Challenger II tanks in the evaluation of alternative specifications between 1988 and 1990; and why it was decided not to use the system at that time.

Mr. Alan Clark: None. During the period in question, the specification for the Chieftain replacement included an inertial, rather than a satellite-based, navigation system. Subsequent experience in operating Challenger 1 in the Gulf demonstrated that a global positioning system would be adequate to meet our operational needs.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the global positioning system proposed for Challenger II tanks can be used to transfer tactical information to other units as part of a battlefield control system.

Mr. Alan Clark: Yes, when linked with the necessary interfaces and communication facilities.

Royal Naval Reserve

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the necessary technical qualifications of Royal Navy reservists serving in (a) the port divers branch and (b) the degaussing branch; in what other branches of the Royal Naval Reserve they will be able to use those qualifications; and whether those other branches will be funded to provide for higher strengths than at present.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Naval Reserve personnel he estimates will have to leave the Royal Naval Reserve as a result of the disbandment of 11 branches and four communications training centres.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We expect the establishment of the Royal Naval Reserve to reduce by some 1,200. The number of personnel who have to leave will depend on the level of natural turnover.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the principal peacetime and wartime roles of (a) the port divers and (b) the degaussing branches of the Royal Naval Reserve; who will carry out these roles when the branches are disbanded; and what considerations have led to the proposed closure of these branches.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The principal peacetime role of the port divers and degaussers is to train in preparation for their war role, which includes underwater first aid ship repair and ship husbandry and the monitoring and reduction of surface ships magnetic signatures. Longer warning times and the changing international situation mean that adequate arrangements can be made for these tasks during the longer period of force regeneration.

Tanks

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information is available to him about the type of inertial navigation system and/or global position system which is in service or planned for tanks in the armies of NATO member states and France.

Mr. Alan Clark: Our NATO allies provide information on a confidential basis on a wide range of systems, in-service or planned for service with their forces.

EC (Visits)

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list for himself, and for each of the Ministers at his Department, details of (a) the number of visits made in the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, (b) the number of visits made to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (c) the number of nights spent over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business;

(2) if he will list the number of visits made by officials in his Department during the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, the number of visits made by officials in his Department to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and the number of nights spent by officials in his Department over the past month away from the United Kingdom official European Community business.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Neither Ministers nor officials in this Department have made visits to Brussels or any other locations on European Community business in the last month.

Unoccupied Homes

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 152 to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) about the number of Ministry of Defence residential properties that are currently standing empty, what intentions the Department has for their future use.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence housing task force, under the chairmanship of my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces, is currently considering ways in which surplus dwellings could be utilised to help those service personnel leaving the services over the next few years on redundancy terms who may experience housing difficulties.

Not all Ministry of Defence empty properties are surplus to our requirements. We will always need to retain an appropriate management margin of vacant properties because of the frequent moves undertaken by service families. In addition, any properties undergoing or awaiting major maintenance work or modernisation will be brought back into use as the work is completed. Surplus properties are normally disposed of at the earliest opportunity.

Operation Granby

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there were any occasions during Operation Granby when global positioning systems in United Kingdom fighting vehicles did not function either because of equipment failure, environmental or physical obstruction, or because of any risk of location by the enemy; and if he will make a statement on the performance of this equipment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The detailed assessment of equipment performance in the Gulf is not yet complete. As the statement on the defence estimates 1991 makes clear, satellite global positioning equipment was crucial to accurate navigation over the desert and in Gulf waters.

Near Misses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his practice to keep central records of near misses involving military jet aircraft and shipping; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No.

TRANSPORT

West Yorkshire Electrification

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the west Yorkshire electrification project.

Mr. Freeman: I am happy to say that I have informed the West Yorkshire passenger transport authority that the Government are willing to provide credit approvals for the infrastructure, and have opened the way for the PTA to take an operating lease on the rolling stock on terms previously proposed.

Radioactive Material (Transport)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by year for the last four years, and for the current year to date, the number of vehicle journeys on (a) the A1(M), (b) the M18, (c) the M180, (d) the M1 and (e) the M62 involving the transport of (i) medium and (ii) high-level radioactive material.

Mr. Chope: My Department does not collect data of the kind requested.

Lifejackets

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the European Commission proposals for (a) inflatable and (b) non-inflatable lifejackets.

Mr. McLoughlin: The European Commission's proposals for inflatable and non-inflatable lifejackets are set out in the European Council directive 89/086/EEC, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the United Kingdom proposals for lifejackets.

Mr. McLoughlin: The United Kingdom requirements for lifejackets are contained in the International Maritime Organisation's safety of life at sea—SOLAS—convention 1974, as amended, and the Merchant Shipping (Life Saving Appliances) Regulations 1986. For non-SOLAS ships the British standard for lifejackets—BS 3595:1981 may, under specific circumstances, be accepted as an equivalent. Copies of each of these documents have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the representations he has received and made about the European Commission's lifejackets proposals.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the European Commission's directive on lifejackets lies with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. My Department, along with other organisations within the United Kingdom, provides input to the relevant British standards technical committee, which represent the United Kingdom's interest in the appropriate European Commission's Comité Européen de Normalisation—European Committee for Standardisation—technical committee 162.

Merchant Navy

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the names of Merchant Navy training establishments and the number of places in each; and if he will give details of establishments and places which have been closed since 1980.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department of Transport is responsible for the approval of seafarer training programmes and for setting monitoring standards for the issue of certificates. It is not responsible for the provision of Merchant Navy training establishments and does not maintain records of the number of places in each; nor does it have a complete record of establishments and places which have been closed since 1980.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the number of (a) officer cadets and (b) ratings who entered Merchant Navy training establishments for each year since 1980, including the number who commenced training and completed training for each of those years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The total numbers of officer cadets and ratings who entered Merchant Navy training establishments each year are given in the table. The number of ratings recruited is taken from the annual report of the National Sea Training college, Gravesend, which goes back to 1984.

Year	Officer cadets	Ratings
1981	656	—
1982	296	—
1983	152	—
1984	183	193
1985	182	373
1986	177	217
1987	162	230
1988	227	240

For officer cadets there is a wastage factor of 25 per cent. over the period of training, but for ratings the wastage factor has been just over 5 per cent. for the considerably shorter training periods.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the yearly cost to his Department of the Government scheme of assistance for training for the Merchant Navy since its introduction.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Merchant Shipping Act 1988 makes provision for building on existing training arrangements and the Department of Transport is providing financial assistance for training for the Merchant Navy. The yearly cost to this Department since the scheme was introduced in 1988 is as follows:

Financial year	Cost £
1988-89	843,844
1989-90	1,757,518
1990-91	2,341,540

Citizens Charter

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the British Rail Board about its plans for complying with the requirements of the citizens charter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Ministers and officials have had a number of discussions with British Rail about the implementation of the citizens charter. British Rail is currently working up its proposals and hopes to publish its passengers charter early in the new year.

Training

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a projection of (a) the number of officer cadets and (b) ratings whom he expects to commence training in each year up to the year 2000.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are some indications that the number of officer cadets commencing training each year is stabilising, but it is too early to predict what the level of recruitment will be each year up to the year 2000. However, the Department welcomes the commitment given by industry in the joint working party report "British Shipping: Challenges and Opportunities" to recruit at least the minimum number of trainees needed to fill its projected requirements for United Kingdom nationals, and will keep the numbers recruited under review.

Car Security

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet motor manufacturers to discuss the installation of security devices on all cars as a matter of standard practice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Immobilisers are already fitted as standard practice on all cars. Possible improvements to installed car security devices are the subject of discussion between my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and motor manufacturers. The last discussions were held on 23 September 1991 and further meetings are planned.

Large Goods Vehicle Licence

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secetary of State for Transport what financial assistance is available to assist drivers who are unemployed and in receipt of benefit, to pay for medical examinations required for drivers of LGVs once they reach 46 years of age or to renew their licence.

Mr. Chope: The Department of Transport has no power to provide financial assistance towards the cost of the medical examination required by any driver who applies to renew a large goods vehicle driving licence at age 45.

Driving Licences

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many short-period driving licences were issued or renewed in 1990-91.

Mr. Chope [holding answer Friday 29 November 1991]: A total of 6,228,634 licences were issued during 1990-91. Of these, 748,955 were short-period licences issued to and renewed by drivers of 70-plus years and 130,720 were short-period licences renewed by drivers with medical conditions.

HEALTH

EC (Visits)

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (i) the number of visits made by officials in his Department during the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, (ii) the number of visits made by officials in his Department to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (iii) the number of nights spent by officials in his Department over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

Mr. Dorrell: There were two meetings excluding visits to Brussels and seven meetings of the Health Council and council working groups involving nine officials. Officials spent a total of 14 nights away from the United Kingdom.

Information on the number of other visits to EC countries by officials which may have involved discussions relating to EC business is not readily available.

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for himself, and for each of the Ministers at his Department, details of (a) the number of visits made in the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, (b) the number of visits made to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (c) the number of nights spent over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the EC ministerial Council meetings at which his Department has or will be represented during November and December.

Mr. Dorrell: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State attended the Health Ministers Council on 11 November 1991 and met informally a number of MEPs on 27 November. This involved spending one night in Brussels on each occasion.

There were no other visits by Ministers to European Community or other countries on official business related to the European Community.

Cholesterol Testing

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to be in a position to respond to the report of the standing medical advisory committee on blood cholesterol testing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We are considering the large number of responses to the report and intend to make an announcement as soon as possible.

Alcohol Consumption

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish figures showing the average alcohol consumption in units for men and for women each year since 1975.

Mr. Dorrell: Information is not available in the form requested. The following table shows the average numbers of units of alcohol consumed by men and women in 1987 and 1989 in England and Wales:

Average alcohol consumption in units, England and Wales by sex
England and Wales — Units of alcohol

Birth Statistics

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his reply of 10 June, Official Report, column 446, how many women delivered in England during the financial year 1990-91; and how many (a) complete and (b) incomplete delivery records have been included in the maternity hospital episode system data file for 1990-91.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The 1990-91 birth registration and the 1990-91 hospital episode statistics data have yet to be finalised.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the originating debt and its division between public dividend capital and interest-bearing debt for each of the second wave national health service trusts;

(2) what is the originating debt and its division between public dividend capital and interest-bearing debt for each of the first wave national health service trusts.

Mr. Dorrell: Interest charges for first wave NHS trusts have been calculated on the basis of estimated asset value. Detailed opening valuations will be published after they have been finalised. Opening valuations of second wave NHS trusts will not be available until after the next financial year.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent trusts within the national health service are required to comply with guidelines issued in department circulars.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 27 November 1991]: It is normally the responsibility of purchasing health authorities to ensure that all NHS providers observe departmental policy guidance. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State also has powers to direct NHS bodies, including NHS trusts, to implement particular guidance.

Immunisation

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on current NHS immunisation facilities for children; and what were the comparable facilities for 1978.

Mr. Dorrell: NHS facilities for childhood immunisation are provided in child health clinics and by general practitioners. It is for health authorities to decide how best those facilities should be provided. Since GPs were first invited to participate (in the mid-1970s) they have taken an increasing part in the immunisation programme. We introduced the target payment scheme from April 1990 to encourage them further in this activity.

Information on the rates of immunisation is shown in the table.

Percentage of children immunised (England)

	1978	[1]1991
Diptheria and Polio	78	92
Measles	48	[2]90
Whooping Cough	31	87

Scanning and Kidney Machines

Sir John Stanley To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to the number of (a) body scanning machines, (b) brain scanning machines and (c) kidney machines available to the NHS, and the number of patients benefiting from their use, in 1978 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: Complete information on the availability of scanners in the NHS is not collected centrally. However, we are aware of 15 whole-body scanners and 37 head-only scanners which were operating in the NHS in 1978. At present we believe that the NHS is using 293 whole-body scanners and one head-only scanner. It is estimated that in 1978 approximately 195,000 patients benefited from the scanners then in use, compared with approximately 1,040,000 patients in 1991. According to information provided by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association, the number of patients receiving haemodialysis in 1978 was 2,833, compared with 4,582 in 1990, the latest year for which information is available. The number of patients being treated through continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis has risen from 114 to 4,006 over the same period.

Nasogastric Feeding Tubes

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the resource and other implications of making nasogastric feeding tubes available on general practitioners' prescription first began to be considered.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The resource and other implications of making nasogastric feeding tubes available on prescription were considered in this year's public expenditure exercise.

Westwood Hospital

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what approval he is required to give in respect of a closure proposal for the Westwood hospital by the district health authority or the trust.

Mr. Dorrell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gives the final decision if a closure proposal is contested by the local community health council.

Cervical Smears

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cervical smears were taken under the NHS in 1978 and in the latest year for which figures are available; what is the level of NHS cervical smear facilities for women currently; and what was the level in 1978.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The number of cervical smears taken in England under the NHS were:

1978	2·470

[1] The latest year for which data are available.

GPs, practice nurses, hospitals and clinics take cervical smears as part of the normal provision of health care, both under the NHS cervical screening programme and for clinical purposes. No separate facilities are required.

Heart Operations

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) heart bypass and (b) heart transplant operations were carried out under the NHS in 1978 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: The number of coronary artery bypass grafts performed in the United Kingdom in 1978 was 3,190 (a) compared with an estimated 14,543 (b) in 1990-91, the latest year for which figures are available. According to information provided by the United Kingdom Transplant Support Service Authority, three heart transplants were carried out in 1979, the first year for which figures were collected, and 329 in 1990, the latest year for which figures are available.

(a) Figures provided by the Society of Cardiothoracic Surgeons.
(b) Figures based on outturn reports in England, Scotland and Wales for 1990-91 and in Northern Ireland for 1989-90.

Resettlement

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what resources in respect of resettlement are allocated to the Northern region; what is the figure expressed per capita; and what is the per capita average for other regions.

Mr. Dorrell: Resources for resettlement of patients into the community are not separately identified in health authorities' allocations.

Mammograms

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many mammograms were taken under the NHS in 1978 and in the latest year for which figures are available; what is the level of provision of mammogram facilities for women in the NHS currently; and what was the comparable level in 1978.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on the total number of mammograms taken in the NHS is not available. Data are now being collected centrally on the number of mammograms taken under the NHS screening programme, but these are not yet available for 1990-91. Initial figures collected by radiologists within the NHS breast screening programme suggest that more than 709,000 women had a mammogram under the screening programme in the United Kingdom in 1990-91.

The United Kingdom NHS breast screening programme was launched in 1987 and implemented over the three years to 1990. The aim is to screen all women aged 50 to 64 every three years; screening for older women will be available on request. In England, the screening programme is being provided through 82 new special screening units, to some of which mobile units are attached. Figures for mammogram facilities outside the screening programme are not collected centrally.

Kidney Transplants

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many kidney transplant operations were carried out under the NHS in 1978 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: According to information provided by the United Kingdom Transplant Support Service Authority the number of cadaveric kidney transplants carried out in the United Kingdom in 1978 was 849, compared with 1,730 in 1990, the latest year for which figures are available. This represents an increase of 104 per cent.

Cataract, Hip and Knee Operations

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) cataract operations, (b) hip replacements and (c) knee replacements were carried out under the NHS in 1978 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell: The table gives the number of operations for 1978 and the latest year for which figures are available.

Operation	[1] 1978	Latest year 1989-90 (provisional)	1990-91
Cataract	[2]35,270	—	[3]94,739

NORTHERN IRELAND

EC (Visits)

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list (i) the number of visits made by officials in his Department during the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, (ii) the number of visits made by officials in his Department to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (iii) the number of nights spent by officials in his Department over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is as follows:

	Number
Number of visits outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community	25
Number of visits to Brussels	10
Number of nights spent away from the United Kingdom	27

EC Meetings

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the EC ministerial Council meetings at which his Department has or will be represented during November and December.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department of Finance and Personnel was represented by one official at the informal meeting of European Community Ministers responsible for regional policy and physical planning at the Hague on 18 to 19 November 1991.

The Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland was represented by one official at a meeting of the Council of Agriculture Ministers on 18 to 19 November 1991. An official from the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland will also attend meetings of the Council of Agriculture Ministers to be held on 11 to 12 December 1991 and the Fisheries Council to be held on 17 to 18 December 1991.

There are no plans for the Northern Ireland Office or the Northern Ireland Departments to be represented at any other ministerial council meetings during November and December 1991.

Road Surfaces

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total surface area of roads treated to (a) bitumen macadam resurfacing, (b) asphalt resurfacing, (c) slurry sealing and ralumac, (d) grouting and (e) other surface dressing in each district council area in each year since 1985.

Mr. Needham: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Newry Bypass

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details on the progress towards constructing stages 2 and 3 of the Newry bypass.

Mr. Needham: A notice of intention to make a vesting order for stages 2 and 3 of the Newry bypass was published earlier this month. While it is currently planned that work should start in the 1992-93 financial year the implementation of the scheme is dependent upon the completion of the statutory process and, ultimately, the availability of finance.

Club (Registration)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful prosecutions brought under the Registration of Clubs (Northern Ireland) Order 1987.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is as follows:

	Prosecutions	Guilty	Not guilty
1988	23	19	4
1989	48	45	3
1990	29	26	3
[1]1991	—	—	—

[1] Figures not yet available.

Fergal Caraher

Mr. Mallin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make available the autopsy report on Fergal Caraher to his family.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 28 November 1991]: Under the Coroners (Practice and Procedures) Rules (N.I.) 1963, the decision whether, and if so when, to make available to properly interested persons a report of a post mortem examination of the body of a person whose death has been reported to a coroner, is entirely a matter for the coroner concerned. The coroner is an independent judicial officer.

Autopsy Reports

Mr. Mallin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will state the policy on the release to relations of autopsy reports on persons killed by the security forces; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 28 November 1991]: Rule 38 of the Coroners (Practices and Procedure) Rules (N.I.) 1963 provides that a coroner (who is an independent judicial officer) has a discretionary power to permit any person who, in his opinion, is a properly interested person to inspect the report of a post mortem examination. In addition, rule 37 confers a discretion on the coroner to provide a summary of a post mortem report to the deceased's medical practitioner.

I understand that many coroners in Northern Ireland make it their normal practice to release post mortem reports to relatives as soon as they become available. However, whether or not to allow access in a particular case is entirely a matter for the individual coroner concerned.

ENVIRONMENT

Environmental Assessments

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what reasons Her Majesty's Government gave powers to the EC to require environmental studies of the nature which lead to EC complaints concerning the M3 and channel tunnel; and when these powers were given.

Sir George Young: Directive 85/337/EEC on the assessment of the effects of certain public and private projects on the environment were unanimously adopted by the Council of Ministers on 27 June 1985. The directive, which came into force on 3 July 1988, sets out procedures for the environmental assessment of certain projects which are likely to have significant environmental effects. While the objectives of the directive were largely achieved in the United Kingdom by well-established legislation such as the Planning and Highways Acts, it is in the interests of both the environment and of industry and commerce that similar requirements should apply throughout the Community.

EC Meetings

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the European Community ministerial council meetings at which his Department has, or will be, represented during November and December.

Mr. Heseltine: A Minister from this Department will attend the Environment Council meeting on 12-13 December.

Coastal and Estuarial Waters

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the exact details of the criteria used to designate United Kingdom coastal and estuarial waters will be made public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: A consultation document on the criteria proposed for identifying sensitive areas under the urban Waste Water Treatment Directive and polluted waters under the Nitrate Directive will be issued in the new year.

Water Designation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when and how the designations given to United Kingdom coastal and estuarial waters under the European Community urban waste water directive will be made public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Identification of coastal and estuarial waters is required to be made by the end of 1993, and will be reported to the House.

Estate Action Funding

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when a decision will be reached on the bid for estate action funding, 1992-93, for improvements on Northfield house, Peckham Park road, Peckham, London, SE15; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Decisions on the schemes that will be invited to proceed will be made shortly.

Public Registers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of public registers of information on environmental pollution and potential ecological contamination since the system was introduced last year.

Mr. Baldry: Improved public access to information has been an important part of Government policies on the environment.

Part 1 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 establishes public registers of information about processes coming under the new integrated pollution control and local authority air pollution control systems, which took effect from 1 April 1991.

Public registers of prescribed information under Part II of the Act will be established in April 1993.

A new public register of information on genetically modified organisms will be set up in 1992 to coincide with the coming into effect of part VI of the Act and associated regulations on which consultations are currently in progress.

Section 143 of the Act, placing a duty on local authorities to compile and maintain registers of land which may be contaminated, is not yet in force. Regulations setting out detailed requirements for these registers will be laid early in 1992.

Registers maintained under other statutes cover subjects including the control of water pollution, water supply quality, industrial air pollution and licensed dumping at sea. In addition, the Government propose that Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will analyse the data it receives to produce from 1992 aggregate totals of releases by substance, by category of process and by location in an annual inventory.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning applications for wind farms and for small hydro-schemes have been placed; and how many have been granted planning permission in the current year.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not held centrally.

Council Tax

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, under the provisions of the Local Government (Finance) Bill, a married couple residing in a chargeable dwelling where one spouse is serving abroad or away from home with the armed forces, will be entitled to a council tax discount.

Mr. Key: There will be an entitlement to discount for service personnel serving away from home, whether abroad or elsewhere, if their sole or main residence is in the place where they are serving. This will be for the local authority to determine taking into account all the circumstances. I have placed in the Library of the House a copy of the Department's guidance to local authorities on this subject.

Tree Felling

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about water companies felling mature trees to carry out works under the Water Act 1989.

Mr. Baldry: None.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the amount of standard spending assessments distributed on the basis of the domestic and overseas visitor rights indicator in £ million for 1992-93 by authority; and if he will give his estimate of what the amounts of standard spending assessments would be if day visitors were included in his computations.

Mr. Key: A table showing the provisional amounts of standard spending assessment distributed on the basis of the domestic and overseas visitor nights indicator for 1992-93 has been placed in the Library. There is no information available about day visitors which is sufficiently reliable to be used within SSAs.

Community Charge

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance his Department is giving to East Anglian local authorities that have still not collected all the community charge for 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The Government strongly support local authorities' efforts to collect the community charge. The Audit Commission has recently issued a module on the community charge with advice on how to maximise collection. We warmly welcome this advice to authorities. An authority which is failing to collect the charge is merely passing the burden on to those who do pay. This cannot be right. Authorities must make every effort to ensure a high collection rate and must pursue non-payers vigorously.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many individuals failed to pay the total or part of their community charge for 1990-91 in the Waveney district council area; and what percentage this represents of the total number of charge payers in the Waveney district area;

(2) what was the total percentage amount of community charge paid in the Waveney district council area for 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The number of individuals in Waveney who failed to make any payment of community charge in 1990-91 was 5,677, 7 per cent. of all individuals liable in Waveney. Information on individuals making partial payments is not available.

The authority had received 93 per cent of its budgeted community charge income for 1990-91 by 31 March 1991.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will allow 100 per cent. rebates in appropriate cases for community charge in 1992-93.

Mr. Key: We do not propose to make any change in the existing basis of liability or the benefit arrangements for the remaining period of the community charge.

Government Grant

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the total level of Government grant per adult head of population for 1992-93 for (a) Wandsworth, (b) Westminster and (c) each of the district councils of Greater Manchester.

Mr. Key: Under my right hon. Friend's proposals, the total of revenue support grant and, where relevant, area protection grant and inner London education grant per head of adult population will be as follows:

Wandsworth	1,077
Westminster	1,293
Bolton	532
Bury	390
Manchester	998
Oldham	598
Rochdale	600
Salford	600
Stockport	377
Tameside	468
Trafford	442
Wigan	427

Civil Servants (Leeds)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many civil servants from the Leeds office are allocated to assist projects in Bradford such as the Bradford and Leeds city action team and the Bradford task force.

Mr. Key: The Leeds-Bradford city action team is the responsibility of the Secretary of State for the Environment. The team has a full-time secretariat of six drawn from three Government Departments. Regional directors, as CAT members, also contribute significantly towards projects and partnerships, as do their various staff employed on Departmental programmes relevant to Bradford. Bradford task force, with a staff of six, is the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Dog Register

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation for a dog register with provisions to ensure that local authority dog warden services provide advice and guidance on the care and control of dogs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: No. The Government have already secured the necessary legislation for the control of dogs, in the Environmental Protection Act 1990. We intend to bring the relevant sections into force on the 1 April 1992. A draft circular on the implementation of these provisions has been published.

Regional seminars entitled "Dogs in the Community" have recently been held to explain the new provisions to local authorities and other bodies. These form part of a general campaign I launched in August to promote responsible dog ownership and the proper care of dogs. This will also include a special campaign week next spring aimed at increasing public awareness on this topic.

Many local authorities already employ dog wardens and others will be recruiting before the new provisions come into force. Local authorities may well wish to ask their dog wardens to provide advice and guidance on the care and control of dogs.

Registration of Waste Carriers

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends centrally to collect information on registration of waste carriers when this measure becomes compulsory for local authorities; what information he currently has on how many local authorities have begun the process of registration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 29 November 1991]: Waste regulation authorities are responsible for the administration of waste carrier registration. Following discussion between the local authority associations, agreement has been reached on the establishment of a co-ordinated local authority database of waste carriers (CLADWAC). The database is held by the London Waste Regulation Authority and all participating authorities have access to it. In our view, the co-ordinated database will be help to ensure the efficient and effective operation of waste carrier registration and DOE circular 11/91 (paragraphs 8 and 9) commends authorities' participation in it.

With effect from 14 October 1991, all waste regulation authorities were placed under a duty to establish and maintain a register of waste carriers, and to accept and process applications for registration. Implementation of the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989 will be completed on 1 April 1992 when the offence provisions of sections 1 and 5 are brought into force.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Children Act 1989

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Attorney-General what information he has on the nature and extent of training or briefing organised for judges, by the Judicial Studies Board or otherwise, in connection with the introduction of the Children Act 1989.

The Attorney-General: Twenty one one-day seminars on the Children Act 1989, held in London and the large provincial centres, were attended by High Court judges, circuit judges, district judges, magistrates and justices' clerks. The speakers included paediatricians, child psychiatrists, directors of social services, guardians, court welfare officers and legal academics and the philosophy and new approach required by the Act were thoroughly explored. Residential seminars were attended by the designated family liaison judges and the nominated care judges. At further one-day seminars, district judges and justices' clerks worked out the local operation of the Act. A training pack was commissioned from the Open university for the use of those who train justices of the peace. A special seminar was arranged for the Law Lords and the judges of the Court of Appeal.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Attorney-General how many days of training have had to be undertaken by magistrates who serve on domestic benches in the current year both in respect of their normal duties and of their work in connection with the Children Act 1989.

The Attorney-General: Since training for magistrates is organised locally by magistrates courts committees and no records are kept centrally it is not possible to state how many days of training have been carried out. However, the Children Act training syllabus requires 13·5 hours, and an extra three hours for panel chairmen. How much other training magistrates undertake depends on local requirements.

ENERGY

Gas-Powered Generation

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of the power generated in the United Kingdom is derived from gas; what power stations now use gas and how much in each case; what increase in the use of gas for power generation is forecast over the years 1991 to 1995; and if he will make a statement on his policy towards the use of gas for this purpose.

Mr. Moynihan: Gas accounted for just over 1 per cent. of the total amount of fuel used for power generation in the United Kingdom in 1990. The total amount of gas used for power generation in the United Kingdom in 1990 was estimated to have been in the region of 400 million therms —"Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics 1991", table 53, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. The amount of gas used by individual stations is a commercial matter for the companies concerned.

Those stations currently operating in England and Wales with the capacity to use gas as a fuel for electricity generation of 50 MW or above, and that hold such consent under section 14 of the Energy Act 1976, are as follows:

Organisation	Location
Lakeland Power	Roosecote, Cumbria
London Transport Executive	Greenwich, London
London Transport Executive	Lots Road, Chelsea, London

Any increase in the use of gas in the period up to 1995 will depend upon commercial decisions taken by the companies currently in, or proposing to enter, the electricity generation market. My Department is currently aware of around two dozen projects for power stations intending to use gas as their fuel.

I refer my hon. Friend to my answer given to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 11 November, at column 768, which outlines my Department's policy towards the use of gas for power generation.

Renewable Energy Programme

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much his Department has spent on each form of renewable energy programme since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government are committed to the development of all sources of renewable energy which have the potential to be economically viable and environmentally acceptable. From 1 April 1979 up to 31 march 1991 over £174 million has been spent on renewables research and development. The budget for this year is a record £24 million.

Outturn expenditure from 1979-80 on my Department's renewable energy research, development and demonstration programme is set out, by technology, in the table.

Note: Up to 1986-87 total for R & D also includes expenditure on low head hydro and general studies to 1986-87. These are separately identified for 1987-88 and include work carried out by the Chief Scientist Group, ETSU.

Coal Task Force

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the final report of the coal task force is to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The report of the coal task force about the way forward for coal research development and demonstration in the United Kingdom was published in August as a consultation document. This has led to a substantial number of comments from United Kingdom industry and overseas organisations. The great majority of the comments we have received acknowledged the thoroughness of the work undertaken by the coal task force. The Department is in the process of reviewing the comments and in some cases we may need to seek further clarification concerning the technical issues raised by the consultation. The Department intends to publish the results of the consultation process and its response next year.

The completion of this review is not holding up the initiation of new coal R and D projects. In partnership with United Kingdom industry, British Coal and overseas agencies we have recently launched five new clean coal projects with a contract value of £20 million. A number of further projects are at the planning stage for which announcements will be made in due course.

On-site Generation

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to reach a decision under the terms of the pooling and settlement agreement about on-site generation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is fully seized of the importance of the issue and is concerned to find the most appropriate solution. He will announce his decision in due course.

Live Television Feed

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the locations of the television sets in his Department which can receive the live television feed from the Chamber, and the total cost to his Department of this service.

Mr. Wakeham: The only television set in my Department which can receive the live feed from the Chamber is in the press office. It is supplied by the Central Office of Information at a total cost of £15,427·25 for the 12 months to 30 November 1991.

"Ten Years Cold"

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consideration he has given to Dr. Brenda Boardman's study on behalf of Neighbourhood Energy Action entitled "Ten Years Cold", and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I received a copy of this report when I attended its launch on 12 November. I am studying it with interest. The Energy Efficiency Office's budget for the promotion of energy efficiency in low-income households for 1992-93 is some £40 million, an increase of 50 per cent. on this year's budget.

ENVIRONMENT

European Court of Justice

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all incidences where the United Kingdom Government have been reported to the European Court of Justice on the ground of failure to comply with an EC environmental directive; and what has been the adjudication of the court.

Mr. Baldry: The European Commission has to date made two applications to the European Court of Justice against the United Kingdom under article 169 of the treaty of Rome in connection with alleged infringements of EC environmental directives:

Case 337/89 concerns various aspects relating to the implementation of directive 80/778/EEC on the quality of water for human consumption.

Case 56/90 concerns implementation of directive 76/160/EEC on the quality of bathing water at Blackpool, Southport and Formby.

The court has not yet issued a judgment in either case.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the employment/unemployment aims and targets of the London Docklands development corporation.

Mr. Key: The 1990 corporate plan provides forecast outputs of 53,000 jobs within the urban development area by the end of 1990-91 and 65,600 by 1991-92. The corporation aims to improve the training and job opportunities available to local people and assist them to enter the employment market.

Probate Registry, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement concerning investigations by the Property Services Agency into the removal of historic fixtures and fittings from the Probate Registry in Cardiff road, Llandaff, Cardiff.

Mr. Yeo: The National Audit Office report claimed that considerable internal alterations some time ago had resulted in the removal of virtually all historic internal elements and little of much value remains within the Probate Registry in Llandaff.

It is clear that some of the early contents of this building, such as internal doors and fireplaces, were removed when part of it was converted into offices over 20 years ago—well before the building was listed. Much of the original interior still remains, however, including most of the ceilings, although these were hidden from the NAO inspector by false ceilings.

This property became the responsibility of Property Holdings on 1 April 1990 and during the financial year 1990-91 Property Holdings initiated masonry repairs, stonework cleaning and renewal of windows. In fact, previous masonry repairs using cement and stone dust have now been replaced with stonework closely matching the original Ashlar work and these high-standard repairs have been favourably commented upon by NAO in its report. The Lord Chancellor's Department, the occupant, accepted total maintenance responsibility for this property from 1 April 1991. It is, however, aware of the need to keep Property Holdings and the DOE conservation unit fully involved in any proposals to carry out future repairs or alterations.

Council House Sales

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by district authorities in Cumbria all capital receipts from the sale of council houses received each year since the introduction of the right to buy, together with totals to date.

Sir George Young: The total discounted values of all sales of houses and flats for each year from 1980-81, as reported by local authorities, are in the table. Actual cash receipts in any year will depend on the extent to which the sales were financed by loans from the authorities.

Local Government Finance, Cumbria

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total usable capital receipts held by each district authority in Cumbria, together with outstanding loans at the latest convenient date.

Sir George Young: The outstanding loan debt as at 31 March 1990 and the total accumulated usable capital receipts as at 1 April 1990 and also 1 April 1991, for all district authorities in Cumbria are in the table:

Power Stations (Pollution)

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he has made of the likely increases in emissions of vanadium and other heavy metals that would result from the conversion of Pembroke and other power stations to burning orimulsion, and the effect this would have on the United Kingdom's ability to meet its obligations under The Hague convention on discharges into the North sea.

Mr. Baldry: Power stations that are currently burning orimulsion or which are proposing to burn orimulsion will be required by HM pollution inspectorate to meet an emission limit for particulate material as tight or tighter than that required for heavy fuel oil. They will also be required to use adequate abatement equipment to meet this limit. An increase in the emission of vanadium and other heavy metals is not expected. This will not affect our obligations under The Hague convention.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been undertaken into the effectiveness of electrostatic precipitators in capturing vanadium and other heavy metals emitted from burning orimulsion in power stations and into whether wet flue gas desulphurisation systems in addition to electrostatic precipitators would be efficient in capturing these pollutants.

Mr. Baldry: The power station operators are assessing the effectiveness of electrostatic precipitators in capturing emissions of vanadium and other heavy metals from the burning of orimulsion. It is expected that they will be at least as effective as for other particulate matter. There is only limited experience of the effectiveness of wet flue gas desulphurisation in series with electrostatic precipitators, but, in any event, care will be taken to control emissions of heavy metals from power stations fitted with wet flue gas desulphurisation systems.

Retailers (Accommodation)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what consultations he has had with the promoters of the over-the-shop campaign about achieving better residential use of excess retail outlets accommodation;

(2) what guidance he has given to high-street retailers in relation to the alternative potential residential use of unused capacity in their premises;

(3) what guidance he has given local authorities to help them promote the use for residential accommodation of spare capacity in retailing outlets.

Mr. Yeo: We have invited local authorities to bid for £25 million over the next three years to bring flats over shops into residential use. Officials have had discussions with two organisations: Homes over the Shop and Living over the Shop. The latter receives grant from the Department and its director is on our steering group.

A guidance note for local authorities was sent out on 25 November. Similar information will be made available to retailers shortly.

Hedgerow Protection

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to bring forward legislation to secure the protection of outstanding hedgerows.

Mr. Baldry: We shall seek to introduce legislation to secure the protection of key hedgerows when parliamentary time permits. Meanwhile, we are taking steps to draw up our proposed scheme to provide new incentives for hedgerow management, and hope to make a further statement on the proposed new scheme early in the new year.

Housing Debt Repayment

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his current estimate of the total cost of paying back the debt on (a) a council house and (b) a housing association property over the full repayment period.

Mr. Yeo: I will write to the hon. Member.

Local Government Commission

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that the local government commission should complete its examination of the overall structure of local government before making decisions about individual local authority areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: We propose to ask the local government commission to review the structure of local government in the shire counties area by area. The Local Government Bill provides for orders to implement changes to be laid before both Houses of Parliament, following recommendations from the commission.

Homelessness

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what extra measures he intends to take this winter to provide help for homeless people sleeping rough in Coventry in snow or extreme cold; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: In the event of severe weather this winter, I would expect individual local authorities to make emergency provision for people sleeping rough in their areas. In 1991-92 the Government are already providing just under £6 million in grants to voluntary organisations throughout the United Kingdom for practical projects to prevent and relieve homelessness. Among those being funded are Coventry Cyrenians and the Coventry day centre.

Toxic Waste Disposal, Ewelme

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in relation to the toxic waste disposal site at Ewelme, Oxfordshire (a) what reports he has received of leakage and contamination of groundwater, (b) what is the extent of the contamination, (c) what measures are being taken to clear up the pollution and (d) whether he will call in the planning application to extend the site submitted by S. Grundans Ltd.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 2 December 1991]: I understand that routine monitoring of the waste disposal site at Ewelme by Oxfordshire county council, as the waste disposal authority, has identified chlorinated solvents in nearby groundwater. Mains supply drinking water is unaffected, but local environmental health officers are making urgent quality checks on water from nearby boreholes and wells. The site operator, S. Grundans, is also seeking consultants' advice on the extent of pollution and on possible remedial measures.

The county council, as planning authority, has the planning application under consideration and are presently consulting on a submitted environmental statement. When consultation is completed it will be in a position to consider the matter further in the light of local criteria. The Secretary of State would generally consider calling in the application only if planning issues of more than local importance were involved.

NATIONAL FINANCE

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what would be the revenue yield for (a) the first year and (b) in a full year, asssuming this is introduced at the beginning of 1991-92, and (c) in the first year and (d) in a full year, assuming this is introduced at the beginning of 1992-93, in Northern Ireland of national insurance contributions on unearned income at a rate of 9 per cent. for individuals under retirement age, subject to (i) a £3,000 exemption, (ii) a £3,500 exemption and (iii) a £4,000 exemption, respectively;

(2) what would be the revenue yield (a) in the first year and (b) in a full year, asssuming this is introduced at the beginning of 1991-92, and (c) in the first year and (d) in a full year, assuming this is introduced at the beginning of 1992-93, in Great Britain of national insurance contributions on unearned income at a rate of 9 per cent. for individuals under retirement age, subject to (i) a £3,000 exemption, (ii) a £3,500 exemption and (iii) a £4,000 exemption, respectively;

Mr. Maude: The yield in a full year at 1991-92 levels of income from a charge of 9 per cent. on investment income of individuals in the United Kingdom is estimated at:

Threshold £	Yield £ million
3,000	870
4,000	780

The amount of revenue collected in the first year would depend on the administrative arrangements for collecting such a charge.

The corresponding yield in 1992-93 would depend on the levels of investment income for that year.

I regret that it is not possible to provide separate information for Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

These estimates take no account of any possible behavioural changes following the introduction of such a charge.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many (a) basic rate and (b) higher-rate taxpayers in 1991-92, in Northern Ireland would be affected by the introduction of national insurance contributions on unearned income at a rate of 9 per cent. for individuals under retirement age, subject to a £3,000 exemption, giving the average annual charge per individual with gross incomes between (i) £10,000 and £20,000, (ii) £20,000 and £30,000, (iii) £30,000 and £40,000, (iv) £40,000 and £50,000 and (v) over £50,000, respectively;

(2) how many (a) basic rate and (b) higher-rate taxpayers in 1991-92, in Great Britain would be affected by the introduction of national insurance contributions on unearned income at a rate of 9 per cent. for individuals under retirement age, subject to a £3,000 exemption, giving the average annual charge per individual with gross incomes between (i) £10,000 and £20,000, (ii) £20,000 and £30,000, (iii) £30,000 and £40,000, (iv) £40,000 and £50,000 and (v) over £50,000, respectively.

Mr. Maude: Estimates for the United Kingdom are in the table.

Individuals aged under 65 with investment income over £3,000 in 1991-92

Individual total income (£ per annum)	Basic rate taxpayers[1] Numbers (000s)	Average[2] (£)	Higher rate taxpayers Numbers (000s)	Average[2] (£)
0-10,000	230	160	—	—
10,000-20,000	340	280	—	—
20,000-30,000	180	440	20	800
30,000-40,000	neg.	—	120	800
40,000-50,000	—	—	60	930
50,000 and over	—	—	160	2,990

[1]Liable at basic rate only.
[2]Average charge payable at a rate of 9 per cent.

I regret that it is not possible to provide information for Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

These estimates take no account of any possible behavioural changes following the introduction of such a charge.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of taxpayers who were liable in the latest financial year for which information is available, to capital gains tax in (a) Great Britain and (b) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Maude: The current estimate of the number of individuals and trusts liable to pay capital gains tax on gains realised in 1990-91 is 100,000. I regret that separate figures for Great Britain and Northern Ireland are not available.

Disabled Staff

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many disabled people are currently employed in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Treasury currently employs 33 registered disabled workers, four of them part time. We also employ disabled people who choose not to register.

The Treasury seeks to implement the relevant parts of the civil service code of practice on the employment of people with disabilities. We seek to provide a working environment that allows all colleagues, including the disabled, to compete equally, while respecting an individual's right not to be seen as seeking special treatment. £100,000 has been spent on a series of adaptions to the central Treasury office building in Whitehall to allow wheelchair-bound staff and visitors independent access to and use of most of the building. Further money has been spent making similar improvements to the five other Treasury office buildings and on other forms of support for people with different disabilities.

The Treasury has appointed a number of staff to offer advice and support in response to individual needs. Line managers across the whole Department have been sent a personal copy of the summary of the civil service code of practice. Work is in hand to draw together and publish a guide on the support available to disabled staff.

Excise Duty

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has concerning the extent to which other member countries of the European Community have adopted systems of lower levels of excise duties on the products of smaller brewers.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Beer produced by smaller brewers in Belgium, Denmark, Germany, Luxembourg and the Netherlands is subject to lower rates of excise duty. Their daily systems provide either a single reduced rate for brewers producing less than a certain annual quantity, or a number of lower rates which are applied as a sliding scale according to production levels.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to introduce into the United Kingdom a system of lower levels of excise duty on the products of smaller brewers.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have no present plans to introduce lower levels of excise duties on the products of smaller brewers.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has concerning the policy of the European Commission to the system of lower levels of excise duties on the products of smaller brewers which is adopted by other member countries of the European Community.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In framing its proposals concerning the harmonisation of beer duty, the Commission included an option for member states to apply a single reduced rate of duty on beer brewed by small brewers. At the Economic and Finance Council meeting on 24 June it was decided that this option would apply to brewers producing less than 200,000 hectolitres per annum —122,250 barrels—with the reduced rate set at not more than 50 per cent. below the standard national rate.

Live Television Feed

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the locations of the television sets in his Department which can receive the live television feed from the Chamber, and the total cost to his Department of this service.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The television sets in my Department which can receive the live television feed from the Chamber are located in the following Treasury offices in Whitehall:

Chancellor of the Exchequer
Chief Secretary
Financial Secretary
Minister of State
Economic Secretary
Permanent Secretary
Parliamentary Section
Information Division

The cost to the Department is £13,421·65, inclusive of VAT.

Large Goods Vehicle Licence

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether people required to have a medical examination to renew an LGV licence or on reaching the age of 46 years are able to claim the cost of the medical examination against income tax.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 2 December 1991]: The cost of a medical examination to renew an LGV licence is an allowable expense for income tax purposes.

THE ARTS

Disabled Staff

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many disabled people are currently employed in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: One member of staff in my Department is registered as disabled, but there may be others who have chosen not to register.

The Office of Arts and Libraries is committed to the implementation of the code of practice on the employment of people with disabilities in the civil service.

CIVIL SERVICE

Disabled Staff

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many disabled people are currently employed in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: There are 16 registered disabled staff currently working in my Department, and there may be others who have chosen not to register their disability. We are committed to the employment of disabled people and to the implementation of the code of practice on the employment of people with disabilities in the civil service.

DEFENCE

Environmental Measures

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of his departmental budget is earmarked for environmental restoration, environmental decontamination, and the publication of literature on his Department's environmental programme; and if he has any plans to increase expenditure on environmental matters.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Expenditure on environmental measures cannot be separately identified. Future expenditure on the environment will be funded through the normal process of resource allocation.

Almondbank Establishment

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration is currently being given to the closure of the MOD establishment at Almondbank, Perth.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the comments I made to the House on 27 November, Official Report, columns 1047-50.

"Options for Change"

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reassessment has taken place of the maintenance requirements for service helicopters as part of "Options for Change".

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Future arrangements for the maintenance of service helicopters are under consideration as part of our review of the support area.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the base closures or reorganisations that have been announced as part of the "Options for Change" study.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All significant base closures or reorganisations arising from the "Options for Change" study and which have been announced are as follows.

Other announcements have been made such as the closure of RAF Kemble, but these are not included as they do not form part of the "Options for Change" exercise.

Recklinghausen—Forward Vehicle Depot
Krefeld—232 Mobile Civilian Engineer Group
Viersen—Ordnance services and associated Supply Depot
Willich—40 Army Engineer Support Group
—64(RCZ) Workshop
Antwerp—Ordnance Depot and other units at Antwerp Station.

For information relating to regimental mergers and restructuring I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend) on 11 November at columns 338-40.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the bases that are currently being examined as part of the "Options for Change" study.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: "Options for Change" entails a major restructuring of the armed forces with implications across the whole range of defence activities and infrastructure. All establishments are considered as part of this work and any decisions will be announced in the usual way.

Civilian Staff (Redundancy)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many MOD civilian personnel have applied for voluntary redundancy; what are their grades; what plans exist to make MOD civilian personnel compulsorily redundant; whether further offers of voluntary redundancy will be made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Redundancies have been confined mainly to industrial and non-mobile, non-industrial grades. Volunteers in these grades who apply for redundancy are considered locally by the establishment concerned; details are not held centrally.

We have announced publicly that civilian numbers in MOD will reduce by around 20,000 posts over the period 1991-92 to 1996-97. This figure represents total job losses rather than anticipated redundancies.

It is our policy to restrict the number of compulsory redundancies to a minimum. This will be achieved by a number of measures including redeployment to other MOD establishments or Government Departments, and extending the availability of early retirement schemes; about 700 non-industrial staff across all grades have recently applied to retire under the approved early retirement category. Where redundancy becomes inevitable, volunteers will be given priority.

Ceremonial Uniforms

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any non-MOD organisations have ever contributed towards the cost of purchasing ceremonial uniforms.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is no indication that any such contributions have been made.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his Soviet counterpart regarding the non-proliferation of nuclear technology.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As two of the depositary powers to the non-proliferation treaty, the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union are represented at meetings to discuss nuclear non-proliferation. Our aim is to co-operate with our NPT partners in achieving the objectives of the treaty.

UN Peace-keeping Operations

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration his Department has given to participating in United Nations peace-keeping operations in (a) south-east Asia and (b) Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Secretary-General has asked us to provide three military observers for the United Nations advance mission in Cambodia—UNAMIC; we expect them to deploy shortly. The Secretary-General's special reprentative, Mr. Vance, is currently in Yugoslavia. He is expected to pursue his contacts with the Yugoslav parties as rapidly as possible so that the Secretary-General can present early recommendations to the Security Council, including any recommendation for the establishment of a United Nations peace-keeping operation in Yugoslavia.

Tactical Air-to-Surface Missiles

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 13 November, Official Report, column 615, when (a) the SRAM-T system and (b) the SLAT system are due to complete their development stage.

Mr. Alan Clark: Both are United States programmes whose timings are matters for the United States Government.

Arms Control

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 13 November, Official Report, column 615, if he will state the nature of the naval transparency measures that are currently being considered.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Ships above 850 tonnes will be included in the register of arms transfers which we expect soon to be initiated by the United Nations. Informal consultations have now started on the agenda for arms control following the review conference planned for Helsinki next spring. It is possible that information exchange for naval forces will also be considered in this context.

Future Equipment Deployment

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his assessment of how many (a) armoured personnel carriers, (b) armoured infantry fighting vehicles, (c) heavy armoured combat vehicles, (d) artillery pieces, (e) combat aircraft and (f) attack helicopters the United Kingdom will deploy by 1995.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Our plans envisage deployment of some 450 armoured infantry fighting vehicles, some 330 artillery pieces, some 400 combat aircraft and some 250 attack helicopters, as defined by the conventional forces in Europe treaty, within the Army and RAF. The exact quantity of armoured personnel carriers and heavy armoured combat vehicles to be deployed is still under review, but will be within the limits set in the CFE treaty.

Budget Holders

Mr. O'Neil: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the subordinate budget holders within each of the top level budget holder's chain of command, and the amount of money allocated to each of them, to which he referred in his answer of 25 July 1991, Official Report, columns 930-31.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate effort and cost.

Frigates

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on co-operation with France on a future frigate.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In a recent exchange of letters with the French Minister of Defence, M. Pierre Joxe, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and M. Joxe have agreed to begin exploratory work lasting about 18 months on a joint project for a future anti-air warfare frigate to enter service early in the next decade. The new frigate would be equipped with anti-air missiles of the FAMS programme. Its task would be escorting and protecting maritime forces in the Atlantic or elsewhere.

This bilateral initiative concludes a series of discussions initiated one year ago, and follows a joint statement of need by the two navies and a joint technical report on the feasibility of a co-operative programme.

Both countries recognise the potential benefits of co-operation through standardisation, rationalisation and interoperability of equipments. A number of difficult issues will need to be addressed in this next phase of work, but my right hon. Friend and M. Joxe are determined that every effort shall be made to resolve them. The outcome of this phase will enable a final decision on the development of the frigate to be taken in 1993.

The participation of the other nations co-operating on FAMS remains an option for any subsequent phase.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Missing Weapons

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions weapons, explosives or ammunition have been found missing at (a) police barracks, (b) Ulster Defence Regiment barracks and (c) other barracks or security installations in Northern Ireland in each year since 1988.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 28 November 1991]: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible and place a copy of that letter in the Library.

Police National Computer

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what computer links exist, or are planned, for the Royal Ulster Constabulary to the existing police national computer or PNII.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 29 November 1991]: The Royal Ulster Constabulary does not have direct access to the police national computer, but can obtain information from it indirectly by arrangement with police forces in Great Britain. It is anticipated that the RUC will become an on-line user of PNC II in the near future; in the meantime, a link has been established for training purposes.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

GCSE

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what assessment he has made of the value of target-setting techniques in the Suffolk science course in drawing up the assessment scheme for the GCSE in science;

(2) if he will allow periodic assessments to continue to be included in final assessments of GCSE achievement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend is currently considering advice from the School Examinations and Assessment Council about the future assessment arrangements of modular GCSE courses. He expects to announce his decisions, based on that advice, very shortly. It will then be for the GCSE examining groups to develop assessment arrangements consistent with those decisions.

Student Funding

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the average unit of resource per full-time equivalent student for each academic year between 1979-80 and 1991-92 (a) gross domestic product deflated and (b) university pay and prices index deflated, with both answers expressed in £ sterling.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Expenditure data for financial years 1979-80 to 1989-90 per full-time equivalent student in universities are given in the table.

Unit costs in universities, financial years[1] 1979-80 to 1989-90

[1] The unit of public funding for universities is estimated using the total of the University Funding Council recurrent grant (which is based on the financial year) and tuition fee income (excluding fees for overseas students) and the number of full-time equivalent students in the financial year. The recurrent grant figure includes UFC grant for research.

IQ Assessment

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer of 27 November, why his Department decided not to fund research into the validity of assessing children's IQ; and what plans he has to fund such research in the future.

Mr. Eggar: The Department has only a limited budget for the support of educational research work; priority has to be given to policy-related projects needed to guide policy decisions; improve the quality of the educational process in areas of policy concern; facilitate the implementation of policy decisions; or which evaluate the effects of the implementation of policy decisions. There are no plans at present to fund research into the validity of IQ as a measure in the light of these criteria.

Polytechnics

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the average polytechnic lecturer's salary adjusted for retail prices index, for each year from 1981 to 1991.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Average polytechnic lecturer salaries are not readily available for this period. The table for lecturers in further education generally may be helpful.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the staff/student ratio for polytechnics for each year from 1981 to 1991.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The available data are as follows:

Student: Staff Ratios

Higher Education (Cash Flow)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what evidence he has of exceptional cash flow problems in higher education resulting from a failure on the part of local education authorities of the prompt payment of grants for student fees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations 1991 require local education authorities to make fee payments promptly and in termly instalments. The first instalment is required to be paid on or before 30 November 1991 or within one month of the receipt of a valid request for payment from the academic authority, whichever is the later. These new arrangements are designed to minimise cash flow problems; it is too early to assess their impact.

Student Loans

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the criteria upon which a student is judged before being able to obtain a loan.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The conditions for eligibility are laid down in the Education (Student Loans) Regulations 1991, SI 1991/1299, and set out in a booklet entitled "Student Grants and Loans" published jointly by my Department and the Welsh Office. The main criteria relate to the student's course, age and residence status. In general, students taking full-time courses of higher education below post-graduate level which last at least one academic year will be eligible for a loan, if they are aged less than 50 when the course begins and have been ordinarily resident in the British islands for the three years before the start of the course. Applicants must also hold a bank or building society account capable of handling direct credits and debits; must not be in default on repayments on a previous loan under the Government's loans scheme; and must enter into a loan agreement by 31 July in the relevant academic year.

Sex Education

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many applications have been received, and from which education authorities for specific grant support for training programmes in relation to sex education for (a) teachers, (b) parents and (c) governors.

Mr. Atkins: All LEAs in England, with the exception of Isles of Scilly, applied for and are receiving support under the grants for education support and training programme for preventative health education; and all LEAs are receiving support for school governor training. It is for LEAs to decide whether and to what extent these resources should be used to fund training in relation to sex education.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to ensure that students with learning disabilities following courses of further education are not placed in classes with much younger pupils.

Mr. Eggar: The arrangements for grouping students in further education are a matter for local decision. The Government believe that all students, including those with disabilities, should be grouped in the light of their needs.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to ensure that students with special educational needs are enabled to choose between specialist and integrated courses of further education.

Mr. Eggar: The Further and Higher Education Bill currently before Parliament will ensure that a wide range of educational provision continues to be available for students with special educational needs. This includes both mainstream and special courses.

Children Act 1989

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he has given to local education authorities regarding their responsibilities in respect of the Children Act 1989.

Mr. Fallon: The Department has issued to local education authorities a document entitled "The Children Act 1989: A Guide for the Education Service", commissioned from the Open university. The document describes the scope and framework of the Act and its particular implications for local education authorities and schools. A copy has been placed in the Library. The Department has also collaborated with the Department of Health in the preparation and issue of detailed guidance on relevant aspects of the Children Act, which has gone to local education authorities. Advice of particular interest to LEAs is contained in the Department's circulars 2/91 and 3/91 about the approval of independent schools to admit children with statements of SEN and the approval of special schools; in the document "Family Support, Day Care and Educational Provision for Young Children"; and in guidance issued on the operation of education supervision orders.

Student Costs

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the average amount in real terms spent on a university, college and polytechnic student for each year since 1979.

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 2 December 1991]: Expenditure data for financial years 1979-80 to 1989-90 per full-time equivalent student are given in the table:

Unit costs in universities, polytechnics and colleges, financial years 1979-80 to 1989-90

	Universities[1]	Polytechnics[2]	Colleges[2]
1979-80	6,435	5,035	3,085

1986-87	6,555	4,000	3,065
1987-88	6,780	3,830	3,070
1989-90	6,410	—	[3]2,785

[1] The unit of public funding for universities is estimated using the total of the University Funding Council recurrent grant and tuition fee income (excluding fees for overseas students) and the number of home full-time equivalent students in the financial year. The recurrent grant figure includes UFC grant for research.

[2] Expenditure in polytechnics and colleges is derived from the local education authorities' returns of their spending to the Department of the Environment. The data cover net recurrent institutional expenditure and include overseas students' fees. Student enrolment data are taken from the FESR. The mode of attendance weights used to calculate the number of full-time equivalent students were changed in 1983-84 and in 1989-90. Source: CIPFA Handbook of unit costs, 1988-89. Up to 1988-89 the figure for colleges covers all LEA maintained HE and FE, other than in polytechnics. From 1989-90 onwards polytechnics and some colleges were incorporated into the PCFC and unit costs for polytechnics alone are not collected centrally. For 1989-90 the college figure covers all HE and FE in those establishments which remained with an LEA.

PRIME MINISTER

Visual Handicap

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister what response he has made to the Royal National Institute for the Blind survey on blind and partially sighted adults in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I wrote to the director general, Ian Bruce, congratulating the RNIB on the report which I believe will be a useful resource to agencies in the statutory and voluntary sectors in planning and developing services.

Unfair Competition

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister whether he will make it his policy to ensure that there is a level playing field in business and commerce, including the retail sector, and that observance of the law does not lead directly to a commercial penalty for law-abiding companies.

The Prime Minister: Law enforcement authorities required to act in the public interest are themselves responsible—not the Government—for determining what action is most appropriate and effective to uphold the law.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister whether he will make it his policy to protect small and family businesses in the retail trade from unfair competition.

The Prime Minister: Businesses of all sizes and in all trades are protected from unfair competition by the Fair Trading Act 1973 and the Competition Act 1980. The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and the Director General of Fair Trading, in conjunction with the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, ensure the effective application of the Acts.

Upholding the Law

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it the Government's policy to ensure that the law is upheld consistently by all Departments of state and agencies and organisations responsible to them.

The Prime Minister: All Departments of state and agencies and organisations responsible to them are aware of the need to uphold the law. In the case of law enforcement authorities required to act in the public interest, it is the responsibility of those authorities—not the Government—to determine what action is most appropriate and effective to uphold the law.

Clearance Procedures

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Prime Minister which grades of civil servants require clearance before taking up posts with outside organisations and companies; what are the procedures involved for such a clearance; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: All civil servants at grade 3 or above must obtain approval before taking any form of outside employment within two years of leaving Crown employment, unless it is unpaid employment in a non-commercial organisation.

The circumstances in which other civil servants must seek approval before taking up outside employment and the detailed procedures for dealing with applications, including the role of the independent Advisory Committee on Business Appointments, are set out in the rules on the acceptance of appointments by Crown servants. These are included in the 1989 statistical report "Acceptance of Outside Appointments by Crown Servants", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House of Commons.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Lockerbie Bombing

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the public offers made by representatives of the Libyan Administration to Her Majesty's Government to help resolve the issue of responsibility for the Lockerbie bombing.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The evidence that led to charges against two Libyan officials resulted from one of the most painstaking and exhaustive inquiries ever undertaken. A detailed statement of the facts has been passed to the Libyan authorities in support of our demand for the surrender of the two accused. The Lord Advocate's statement on 14 November, and our own joint statements with our United States and French partners on 27 November, made our position absolutely clear. The Libyans know what they are required to do. It is now up to them to respond.

European Community

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the subject matters which are within the competence of the Community and which are decided by the Council of Ministers by majority, qualified majority and unanimous voting; and if he will state those areas of policy on which there is co-operation and co-ordination although they lie outside Community treaty obligations.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The treaties define the areas of activity which fall within Community competence, and the voting provisions for them. There is intergovernmental co-operation on many subjects, bilaterally and among the Twelve, outside Community competence; in particular on foreign policy and aspects of judicial and home affairs.

Albania

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of negotiations with Albania on the gold issue, and on diplomatic representation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The last round of negotiations between the United Kingdom and Albania on the outstanding bilateral issues took place in Tirana in July. We have yet to take final decisions concerning the form of British diplomatic representation to Albania.

Officials Travel

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to which European countries officials of his Department are prohibited from travelling without obtaining special permission or with other qualifications; and when he next intends to review this list.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It has been long-standing practice to give advice to all staff on the problems they may face in travelling to certain countries, and to require them to give notice of such visits, particularly if they have access to classified information. On security grounds we do not publish the list of countries concerned, but it is kept regularly under review.

Nuclear Testing

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the contribution made by nuclear testing to global security.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The NATO summit reaffirmed that NATO's security depends on the possession of nuclear weapons. Nuclear testing maintains the effectiveness and safety of our nuclear deterrent.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Foreign Aid Grants

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the total amount of foreign aid grants in the current financial year.

Mrs. Chalker: I expect aid to developing countries this financial year to amount to £1,787 million, of which £1,720 million will be in the form of grants. The balance is made up of aid loans, Commonwealth Development Corporation loans and administrative costs.

Guyana

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the ODA has contributed either directly or indirectly to Demerara Woods Ltd. or the Guyanese National Timber Company of Guyana for aid purposes.

Mrs. Chalker: There have been no bilateral aid contributions.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to the answer of 20 November, Official Report, column 207, if he will request the World bank to withdraw loan facility and IDA funds provided for the Government of Guyana for the upper Demerara forestry project.

Mrs. Chalker: The World bank project was completed in August 1990.

Refugees

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution his Department has made towards European Community aid for Croatian refugees who have fled to southern Hungary.

Mrs. Chalker: The European Community has committed 615,000 ecu for Yugoslav refugees to Hungary. The British Government's share of this is £77,000.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funds have been given by his Department to help support refugees from Croatia who have fled to southern Hungary.

Mrs. Chalker: We have contributed through our share of EC action, but not bilaterally. We continue to monitor the situation of Yugoslav refugees in Hungary closely.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has regarding the amounts in sterling given by each EC member country towards the support of Croatian refugees who have fled to southern Hungary.

Mrs. Chalker: We do not have information regarding other EC member states' bilateral contributions, but understand none has contributed to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees or the International Committee of the Red Cross programmes in Hungary.

Iraq

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to allocate further funds to the Red Cross for further humanitarian aid workers in Iraq.

Mrs. Chalker: I announced on 17 October a Government contribution of £0·5 million to the British Red Cross Society for urgent medical supplies to be sent to Iraqi hospitals and clinics. This is part of the £44 million the Government have spent on aid for the Iraqi people since April. The British Red Cross Society has not requested further assistance, but we keep our aid policy to Iraq under review in close consultation with it.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Technological Innovations

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement listing the technological innovations which the United Kingdom telecommunications industry has been able to develop since the privatisation of British Telecom.

Mr. Redwood: A complete list of the many technological innovations that have been developed by the United Kingdom telecommunications industry since 1984 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, there have been more than 10,000 type approvals for new products since privatisation and applications to the British Approvals Board for Telecommunications are now running at 1,300 a year.

The continuing enhancement of the communications infrastructure in a liberalised, dynamic and highly competitive market and the industry's commitment to innovation have resulted in the introduction of new products and services at a rate comparable with that in the United States of America and Japan. The United Kingdom's world lead in the development of personal communication networks following the success of cellular mobile telephony is but one example. The United Kingdom has also developed a large number of new value-added services, pagers, message devices, new styles of telephone and switches.

The Government recognise innovation and involvement in the development of standards as being vital to this process. They will continue to encourage and support United Kingdom industry participation in European and national collaborative research programmes such as RACE, where the United Kingdom currently participates in 84 per cent. of the projects, LINK and EUREKA, and in the European Telecommunications Standards Institute where United Kingdom companies and organisations have the highest membership.

EC Meetings

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the EC Ministerial Council meetings at which his Department has or will be represented during November and December.

Mr. Lilley: This table lists the EC ministerial meetings at which my Department has or will be represented during November and December.

EC Ministerial Meetings November—December 1991

	November	December
Secretary of State	Nil	Possible meeting of Foreign Affairs Council on GATT round. Date to be arranged.

Self-regulating Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether there is any independent body to which complaints can be made about the conduct of the bodies recognised as RSBs under the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Redwood: All of the recognised supervisory bodies have made arrangements for complaints against them to be considered by independent persons.

Car Alarms

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the recent 18-nation talks in Prague held to discuss radio frequencies for car alarms.

Mr. Redwood: My officials are not aware of any major international talks held recently in Prague to discuss car alarms.

There was a meeting of the CEPT—conference of European posts and telecommunications administrations—frequency management working group held in Prague on 21 to 25 October and, of the 32 CEPT member countries, 18 were present at this meeting. However, while the meeting discussed such items as harmonisation of radio frequencies for low-power devices and frequencies for an automotive radiolocation system, radio car alarms were not specifically covered.

NHS Procurement Directorate

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the NHS procurement directorate's regulations governing the NHS regional supply centres with respect to the marginal costings of their operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I am aware of the guidelines issued by the NHS management executive to health authorities on the carrying out of any resale activities outside the NHS. My Department, the Department of Health and the Office of Fair Trading have found no evidence of anti-competitive practices arising from this trade, but we continue to keep this market under review.

WALES

National Health Service (Expenditure)

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much spending on the NHS in Wales increased from 1974 to 1979 and from 1979 to the latest available date in cash and in real terms.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State recently announced that planned net provision for the NHS in Wales in 1992-93 will be £1,877 million; an 11·1 per cent. increase on comparable expenditure plans for the current year. Expenditure for earlier years is given in the table:

National Health Service—Wales
Gross Expenditure

	1974-75 (outturn)	1979-80 (outturn)	1991-92 (planned provision)
	£ million	£ million	£ million
Cash	210	481	1,769
1991-92 prices	1,024	1,118	1,769

National Health Service—Wales
Per capita Expenditure

	£	£	£
1991-92 prices	368	398	614

Between 1974-75 and 1979-80 expenditure on the NHS in Wales increased by 9·2 per cent. in real terms. Since then expenditure has increased by almost 60 per cent. in real terms.

Training (Dwyfor)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many training opportunities have been provided for young unemployed people in the Dwyfor area this year to date; how many young unemployed people have been registered during this period in Dwyfor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Information about the number of training opportunities provided for young unemployed people in Dwyfor is not collected centrally. Between January and October this year, 700 people aged under 25 registered as unemployed in Dwyfor and 699 left the register.

Training and enterprise councils are under a contractual obligation to meet the Government's guarantees of training opportunities for the under-25s. I am satisfied that TARGED, the TEC for north-west Wales, has sufficient resources for this purpose.

Probate Registry, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the chairman of Cadw concerning the denudation of the probate registry, Cardiff road, Llandaf, Cardiff of its historic fixtures and their subsequent destination; and what assessment has been made of the chances of their recovery.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments is an executive agency within the Welsh Office and does not have a chairman. An inspection of the former Probate Registry in Llandaff by Cadw's professional staff and inquiries of Property Holdings reveal that works to the interior of the building were carried out some 20 years ago and before the building was listed.

General Practitioners

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average income of general practitioners in Wales, including incentive payments, before and after the introduction of the new general practitioners contract.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: General medical practitioners' remuneration is primarily determined by the doctors and dentists review body which makes recommendations each year as to the level of income the average GP should receive after meeting the expenses of running his practice.

The latest year for which actual earnings of general practitioners is known is 1988-89, at £28,979. The average intended net income determined by the review body for subsequent years is as follows:

1989-90	31,105
1990-91	[1]33,280
	[2]34,680
1991-92	[3]37,280
	[4]37,975

[1] (with effect 1 April 1990—implementation date of new contract)
[2] (with effect from 1 January 1991)
[3] (with effect from 1 April 1991)
[4] (with effect from 1 December 1991)

Separate Welsh figures are not maintained.

Treatment Contracts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance he issues to health authorities on the circumstances in which they can contract for treatment with private hospitals.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This is a matter for individual health authorities to determine in the light of their responsibilities to identify the health care needs of local residents, and then arrange for these needs to be met. Collaborative ventures between the NHS and private hospitals have always existed and advice has been issued on standard formats including health authority contracts with the private sector.

Oystermouth Development

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now announce the date of the public inquiry into the proposed development at Oystermouth, Swansea.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The applicant and the local planning authority have requested that the application should be held in abeyance to enable further discussions to be held. Arrangements for the public inquiry have therefore not yet been made.

Motorway Statistics

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many miles of motorway are (a) currently open, (b) currently under construction and (c) planned for future construction in Wales either (i) as completely new motorway or (ii) as existing motorway being widened; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Miles of motorway opened, under construction and planned are:

Open	Under construction	Planned
		New motorway	Widening
74	3	[1]7·5	7·8

[1] Does not include the proposed M4 alternative motorway around Newport: a decision on the line of the route has yet to be made.

A total of £79 million has been spent on motorway improvements since 1979. Expenditure on schemes in progress or planned including the alternative motorway around Newport will exceed £600 million.

Live Television Feed

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the locations of the television sets in his Department which can receive the live television feed from the Chamber, and the total cost to his Department of this service.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department has five monitors located in Gwydyr house, Whitehall that can receive this service. Installation costs were £20,000, annual line rental is expected to be approximately £12,000 a year.

Secure Units

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether a secure unit in Wales will be provided in addition to the two new secure units announced by the Minister for Health.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The Welsh Office completed a review of secure care in Wales, the final report on which was published on 14 August 1991 and a copy of which was sent to the hon. Gentleman at that time.

One of the recommendations of the review is for a new secure unit to be provided in Wales.

The report was published for consultation with a closing date of 8 November 1991 and the many representations received are currently being considered.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the units providing secure accommodation for young people from Wales and show how many young people from Wales were in each of the secure units in each month of 1989, 1990 and the current year.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The form in which information is available is not readily extractable. The information will be assembled and I will write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Care Places

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of the short-term care places for adults with learning difficulties it is his policy to provide in Wales (a) in the present financial year, (b) in the 1992-93 financial year and (c) by the year 2000.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Targets for the development of all aspects of care for people with mental handicaps are set out in annual county plans produced jointly by social services, health and education authorities, housing bodies and representatives of voluntary organisations, users and carers.

These plans indicate that by 31 March 1992 there should be 1,333 people receiving short-term care in the new patterns of service, compared with 34 in the year before the all-Wales mental handicap strategy was launched, as well as 377 in more traditional patterns of service. Targets for future years will be set by county teams in due course.

Appointments to Public Boards

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many members of public boards whom he has appointed serve as officers carrying out executive duties in the Conservative party in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Political affiliations are not a consideration in making public appointments. Such information is not, therefore, collected centrally.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his parliamentary answer of 28 November, what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency concerning the number of companies visited in Australia in the course of his recent inward investment mission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have frequent discussions with the chairman. I understand that during the visit to Australia meetings were held with seven individual companies.

EMPLOYMENT

Retraining

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the level of provision of retraining schemes for those in marketing who have lost their jobs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Figures are not available. Local management of Government-funded training is a matter for the training and enterprise councils which assess specific local needs and provide training to meet those needs.

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress by training and enterprise councils on the establishment of rural schemes for retraining those leaving farming; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Training and enterprise councils are implementing their plans to meet the training and enterprise needs of their local communities including the needs of rural areas where this is relevant. A number of TECs are now involved in specific rural initiatives and a consortium of around 20 TECs has been formed to share good practice and common goals in meeting the needs of rural areas.

Women's Earnings

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many women earned (a) less than £52 a week and (b) above £185 a week in the last year for which figures are available; and what is this figure as a percentage of (a) the female work force and (b) the total work force.

Mr. Forth: Estimates based on the April 1991 new earnings survey are given in the table.

Estimated	Women Earning (a) less than £52 a week	(b) more than £185 a week
Number of women employees in employment	1·2 million	3·8 million
Percentage of female employees in employment	11½	36½
Percentage of all employees in employment	5½	17½

Maternity Pay

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many women workers who earn more than £185 a week are covered by contractual maternity pay arrangements; and what is this figure as a percentage of (a) all women who earn more than £185 a week and (b) the total female work force.

Mr. Forth: We do not hold such information.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many women workers are covered by contractual maternity pay arrangements; and what is this figure as a percentage of the total female work force.

Mr. Forth: We do not hold information on the total number of women workers covered by contractual maternity pay arrangements. However, the recent Policy Studies Institute report on maternity rights in Britain found that of the 2,514 women employees surveyed, 360 —14 per cent.—received contractual maternity pay.

Live Television Feed

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the locations of the television sets in his Department which can receive the live television feed from the Chamber, and the total cost to his Department of this service.

Mr. Forth: There are four television sets in the Department's headquarters at Caxton house capable of receiving the Chamber live television feed. There is one in the Secretary of State's private office, one in my office, one in the parliamentary unit and one in the press office. The annual cost is £12,700.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what steps the Department of Employment redundancy payment office is taking to expedite payment of statutory redundancy payments to ex-BCCI staff;

(2) what response has been received from Touche Ross, the provisional liquidators of BCCI, in response to inquiries from his Department on form RP22 in respect of ex-staff members claiming statutory redundancy money; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The redundancy payments service has agreed with Touche Ross arrangements for processing RP22 forms relating to claims from ex-BCCI staff. I now expect claims to be paid shortly.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people are waiting for a place on the YTS in the Wakefield area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Department does not hold figures that would be sufficiently reliable for publication. However, Wakefield training and enterprise council and Wakefield careers service are co-operating to ensure that an adequate supply of places is available to meet likely demand.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has received from the Wakefield training and enterprise council on the difficulties in placing young people on the YTS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Wakefield training and enterprise council is co-operating with the local careers service and has advised that it will be able to meet demand for YT places in its area.

Unemployed Young People

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many 16 and 17-year-olds are unemployed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: In October 1991 the number of 16 and 17-year-old unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom was 5,982.

TRANSPORT

Bus Services, London

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he intends potential passengers to be able to obtain information about bus services in London after deregulation and privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: Clearly, it will be in bus operators best interests to publicise their services. Supplementing this, the London Bus Executive will have powers to provide information centrally, which it will exercise in co-operation with London Transport and British Rail.

Road Pricing

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the intention of road pricing in London would be to raise money or to restrict demand.

Mr. Chope: We have no plans to introduce road pricing. The research we are undertaking will assess the potential of road pricing to reduce congestion in London. Until the research is done we can make no estimate of the demand and revenue implications of seeking to meet this objective.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if effective parking controls, parking pricing and enforcement are included in the road pricing study for London.

Mr. Chope: Road pricing is one of a range of options for combating congestion in London. Parking policy forms part of a wider programme of research into urban traffic congestion.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what level of restraint on which roads or types of roads in London would be seen as a successful outcome to road pricing.

Mr. Chope: It is the role of the research to identify the different possible levels and structures of charges in London and to evaluate their effects. The final outcome of the research will not be prejudged.

Ashford International Station

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is yet able to authorise the construction of Ashford international passenger station.

Mr. Rifkind: The increase in British Rail's external finance limit for 1992-93 which I announced last month allowed for some £18 million of expenditure on an international passenger station at Ashford. I have asked the chairman of British Rail to give serious consideration to the possibility of building a simpler station at Ashford than the one proposed. I hope it can be in place in time for Ashford to be served by some international passenger trains once scheduled service through the channel tunnel commences.

Coastguards

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is now able to announce the outcome of the review of Her Majesty's coastguard's sector organisation.

Mr. McLoughlin: To ensure that Her Majesty's coastguard continues to provide the best possible search and rescue service in an efficient and cost-effective manner, a review of its present sector and auxiliary structure was undertaken. The review defined the coastguard's coastal commitments and reviewed the availability, readiness and training of coastguard personnel to met current requirements. During the course of the review there was extensive consultation with coastal local authorities, staff and the public.

The review concluded that present-day needs could be best met by establishing 68 additional auxiliary companies at new locations around the coast to improve the coastguard's intelligence-gathering and surveillance capability, while streamlining the size of companies so as to permit a reduction in the number of auxiliary coastguards and sector officers. The review also recommended improvements in the remuneration, equipment and training of the auxiliary coastguard service. In particular, the number of available pagers and portable radios should be doubled and extra uniform items made available to improve the public profile of the auxiliary coastguard.

The chief coastguard made a number of recommendations and I have accepted them all. The review also concluded that the need for fixed watchkeeping at lookout stations in the south-west should be re-examined. Elsewhere in the United Kingdom, such lookouts have since 1978 been replaced by mobile patrols.

I have agreed that fixed watchkeeping at Lizard should cease and be replaced by a mobile lookout undertaken by a coastguard response vehicle on a casualty watch basis. However, the present fixed lookout at St. Ives will continue for eight to 10 hours watchkeeping per day during the Easter to September period to cater for the special circumstances of that station.

I have not approved the closure of Gwennap Head, but because no operational case can be made for a 24-hour fixed lookout I have agreed to amend its watchkeeping to match that of St. Ives. The situation at Gwennap Head will be reviewed after the modified arrangements have been in force for a year.

I have further agreed to an extensive building programme to ensure that the coastguard is provided with modern bases from which to operate. New sector stations are planned to be built at Thurso, Buckie, Hartlepool, Port Pendennis and Burnham on Sea. In addition, suitable buildings will be leased or existing buildings rebuilt at 18 other locations.

New auxiliary stations will be provided in Orkney, Burnham on Crouch, Whitstable, St. Just, Penhale, Bridport and at Sutton Bridge.

This progressive programme is in addition to the six sector or auxiliary stations currently under construction and the three new large maritime co-ordination sub-centres under construction or at the planning stage at Bangor (Northern Ireland), Holyhead and Milford Haven.

The implementation of the review will be spread over four years.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether British Rail has yet advised him of the pattern of its proposals for passenger services to the north of London from the continent after the opening of the channel tunnel.

Mr. Freeman: I am aware that British Rail is having to consider some adjustments to its proposals, published in accordance with section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987, for channel tunnel passenger services north of London, but it is still discussing its plans with its continental railway partners and the manufacturers. I should expect BR to publish in due course any revisions to its "Section 40 plan".

Motorway Statistics

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of motorway are currently (a) open, (b) under construction and (c) planned in England either (i) as completely new motorway, or (ii) as existing motorway being widened; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: There are 1,650 miles of existing motorway in England, and four miles are under construction. The trunk road programme includes proposals to provide a further 58 miles of new motorway. We have also announced our intention to upgrade about 180 miles of the A1 to motorway between the M25 and Tyneside.

Over 20 miles of existing motorway are currently being widened, and the programme includes proposals to widen a further 605 miles.

The emphasis of the national road programme is on relieving congestion on the broad routes followed by the present motorways which have by far the heaviest traffic flows and are the backbone of Britain's road system.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) trunk road new construction contracts placed by his Department since the start of this financial year giving the name of the company to which the contract was awarded and the value of the contract and (b) trunk road new construction and improvement contracts which his Department expects to award by the end of the financial year.

Street Works

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received in support of his proposal to use the provisions of section 94 of the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991 to prevent local authority direct labour organisations from being able to tender for utility work.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 2 December 1991]: As the hon. Lady will recall, the vote in the House on 22 May 1991 produced 130 representations in favour, and only 38 against. Since then, I have received a small number of representations against the proposal.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he intends to consult on his proposals for the use of section 94 of the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991 to prevent local authority direct labour organisations from being able to tender for utility work;

(2) for what reasons he has decided not to monitor the implementation of part III of the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991, before considering whether to use his power under the provisions of section 94 to prevent local authority direct labour organisations from being able to tender for utility work;

(3) what evidence is available, to date, to enable him to assess the length of the transitional period after which the local authority direct labour organisations will be prevented by section 94 of the New Roads and Street Works Act from tendering for utility work.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 2 December 1991]: No decision has yet been taken on the timing of consultations about section 94.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what opinions the utilities have expressed in relation to his proposal to use the provisions of section 94 of the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991 to prevent local authority direct labour organisations from being able to tender for utility work.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 2 December 1991]: I have received a letter from the national joint utilities group expressing concern at the proposal, to which I have replied.

Blight Notices

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many dwellings he has acquired under blight notice provisions in connection with the widening of the M20 between junctions 3 and 5; at what total cost; and how many of those dwellings he intends to resell.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 2 December 1991]: A total of 227 dwellings have been acquired to date under the blight provisions at a total cost of £21·9 million. On the basis of our current design proposals, we expect to resell all these properties although a small number will lose part of their gardens for environmental works. A further 59 are in the process of acquisition following acceptance of blight notices.

Disabled Staff

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many disabled people are currently employed in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Of the Department's current staff of 15,837, a total of 191—1·2 per cent.—are registered as disabled. A further 188 staff, who have indicated that they have disabilities, have not registered their disability.

Smoke Hoods

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received a reply from the Civil Aviation Authority to his request to it to review the Parliamentary Advisory Council for Transport Safety submission querying the technical basis of their decision to reject the mandatory provision of smoke hoods in passenger aircraft.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Civil Aviation Authority, which has the statutory responsibility for the safety regulation of United Kingdom civil aviation, has advised me that it has completed the review of the material put forward by the Parliamentary Advisory Council for Transport Safety—PACTS. The authority has carefully considered the PACTS submission, but it concluded that it should maintain its previous decision not to make mandatory the provision of smoke hoods in British aircraft. In accordance with my previous undertaking, I have written to my hon. Friend outlining more fully the reasons behind the Civil Aviation Authority's conclusion.

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what strategies are available for use in the next three years which will offer protection to aircraft passengers against toxic fumes in aviation fire.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am advised by the Civil Aviation Authority that the main strategies to protect passengers from the effects of toxic fumes associated with aviation fire are speedily to evacuate passengers from the source of the fire and to prevent the fire from spreading. The authority recognises that a smoke hood meeting an aviation specification and correctly worn may provide some protection to an individual unfortunate enough to be in an aircraft fire. However, the authority takes the view that the speed at which such fires spread means that rapid evacuation is of overriding importance and that any delay caused by the donning of smoke hoods by passengers unfamiliar with the equipment could jeopardise speedy evacuation and consequently place lives at risk.

Live Television Feed

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the locations of the television sets in his Department which can receive the live television feed from the Chamber, and the total cost to his Department of this service.

Mr. McLoughlin: Sets are located in the Department's headquarters at 2 Marsham street. The annual cost is £13,321.

HEALTH

Waiting Times

12. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the maximum time a patient will have to wait under the patients charter from seeing a general practitioner and being referred to a consultant, until they are seen by the consultant.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The charter makes it clear that individual health authorities are required to set and publicise clear local standards for waiting times for first out-patient appointments.

13. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the present waiting times for (a) out-patient consultation and (b) in-patient admission for cataract surgery in the northern region.

Mr. Dorrell: Information on waiting times for specific procedures is not available centrally. In the 12 months to March 1991 the number of patients waiting over one year for in-patient and day-case ophthalmology treatment in the northern region fell by 47 per cent.

Community Services

14. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the latest figures for overall employment in the national health service of (a) community nurses, (b) community psychiatric nurses, (c) community midwives and (d) community occupational therapists; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There were, in whole-time equivalents, 3,600 community psychiatric nurses, 4,200 community midwives and 38,410 community nursing staff in post in England on 30 September 1990. The last figure includes both qualified and unqualified nursing staff.

Separate information relating to community occupational therapists is not collected centrally. At 30 September 1990, there were a total of 8,190 occupational therapists employed within the NHS, including occupational therapist helpers, and 1,260 employed in social services departments.

NHS Trusts

15. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on national health trust hospitals.

Mr. Waldegrave: The 57 NHS trusts established on 1 April 1991 are delivering significant benefits to patients. A further 99 NHS trusts will become operational on 1 April 1992, and the number of hospitals and other units now established clearly indicates the enthusiasm and commitment that managers and clinicians have shown for improving the NHS.

18. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reports he has received about the effectiveness of national health service hospital trusts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Apart from regular financial and activity returns, I receive regular reports about the performance of NHS trusts, which indicate that they are treating more patients than ever before and introducing a wide variety of innovative benefits to patients.

Family Health Service Authorities

16. Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to review the functions and membership of the family health service authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no present plans to do so.

Hospital Auxiliary Services

17. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the contracting out of hospital auxiliary services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond) earlier today.

Cancer, Bolsover

19. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will meet a deputation from Bolsover to discuss the question of dioxin and links with cancer in the Bolsover area.

Mr. Dorrell: The registrar in public health for the North Derbyshire health authority has informed the hon. Member of his willingness to answer further questions on this topic and to meet for a discussion. I hope that the hon. Member will take up this offer, if he has not already done so.

Female GPs

20. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the number of female general practitioners has changed since 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The number of female general practitioners—unrestricted principals—has risen by some 90 per cent., from 3,261 in October 1979 to 6,187 in April 1991. The proportion of female general practitioners has nearly doubled from around one in seven in 1979 to one in four in 1991.

Northern RHA

21. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the level of funding of the Northern regional health authority.

Mr. Dorrell: Between 1978-79 and 1990-91, Northern regional health authority's total revenue expenditure increased in real terms by 33·2 per cent. and their capital expenditure by 35·5 per cent. In 1991-92 Northern regional health authority's main revenue allocation increased by £91·5 million, or 10·24 per cent. cash, bringing the total allocation for their resident population to £985·3 million. Their main capital allocation rose by 19·1 per cent. cash to £77 million.

Waiting Lists, Leicestershire

22. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on waiting lists in Leicestershire.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Between March 1979 and March 1991 the number of patients waiting for in-patient admission has fallen by 15 per cent. from 10,834 to 9,236. Over the same period the number waiting over one year has fallen by 59 per cent. from 2,875 to 1,187.

Health Authorities

23. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to assure himself that all health authorities are providing services which meet all reasonable requirements.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: All national health service authorities are responsible for securing high-quality services to meet the health needs of their local populations.

They are accountable to the national health service management executive, which in turn reports to Ministers and the national health service policy board.

Personal Social Services

Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to issue new guidance to local authorities concerning the charges they may levy for personal social services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: From April 1993, local authorities will draw on the income support financial assessment rules when calculating how much to charge people needing residential care. Officials of the Department of Health and the Department of Social Security are discussing the details, including the guidance needed, with the local authority associations.

It is also our intention to produce guidance about the discretionary powers available to local authorities to make charges for domiciliary and day care services.

Private Medicine

26. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will now take steps to prohibit any NHS premises, or any staff employed by the NHS, from having any involvement with private practice medicine; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No.

Yorkshire Regional Health Authority

27. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the gross revenue expenditure in the area covered by the Yorkshire regional health authority in 1978-79; and what was the comparable figure for 1989-90.

Mr. Dorrell: The annual accounts of the health authorities comprising the Yorkshire region record total revenue expenditure of £313·5 million cash for 1978-79 and £971·6 million cash for 1989-90—an increase in real terms of 32·5 per cent.

Local Authority Social Services

28. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the provision of local authority social services under the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Pontefract and Castleford (Mr. Lofthouse) earlier today.

GP Remuneration

29. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the remuneration of general practitioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A number of representations have been received about the question of the 1990-91 overpayment. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler) on 7 November at columns 259-60.

Central Manchester Hospital Trust

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met representatives of the Central Manchester hospital trust to discuss its financial situation.

Mr. Dorrell: The chairman and chief executive of the Central Manchester hospital NHS trust met the deputy chief executive and director of finance of the NHS management executive on 10 September 1991 to discuss the financial performance of the trust. Officials remain in close and continuous contact with trust representatives.

Disabled People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he monitors the obligations of local authorities to provide a service to disabled people under section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 in the absence of any diminution of need; if the provision of a service under that section to meet assessed need takes precedence over the ability of the client to meet any charges for the service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We expect local authorities to be well aware of their legal responsibilities and to ensure that their policies and practices comply. We have powers to intervene in individual cases of alleged default. The social services inspectorate has responsibilities to monitor the quality of management and care provided by social services departments. We have made it clear that ability to pay does not and should not in any way influence decisions on the services to be provided. Assessment of financial means should follow assessment of need and decisions about service provision.

Fluoridation

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the cost of fluoridating the public water supply in England and Wales; and if he will make an estimate expressing the cost per thousand of the population.

Mr. Dorrell: The cost of fluoridating water is for negotiation locally between district health authorities and water undertakers. Costs fluctuate from area to area. The best estimate is as shown in table:

Population served by the water treatment works	Capital Cost (£000)	Recurrent cost (per 1,000 head of population) (£)
50,000—100,000	150—200	320
100,000—250,000	160—220	220
250,000—450,000	200—250	160

Young Psychiatric Patients

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue formal guidance to health authorities regarding the admission of young people to psychiatric care following the report on young people entering psychiatric care published by the Children's Society.

Mr. Dorrell: The NHS management executive recently issued guidance on the welfare of children and young people in hospital—HSG(91)1—a copy of which is available in the Library. This includes good practice on admissions and, in particular, commends the accommodation of children in designated children's units separate from adults, the involvement of parents and carers in the treatment of their children and recognition of the rights of children to information about their treatment. The guide explicitly states that these principles apply whenever a child is admitted to hospital. The code of practice issued under section 118 of the Mental Health Act 1983, a copy of which is also available in the Library, provides guidance on the application of that Act to patients under the age of 18, including admission procedures.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will conduct an investigation into the reasons why health authorities are failing to keep accurate records of the number of young people admitted to psychiatric care.

Mr. Dorrell: It is for district health authorities to maintain the statistics they require for the proper management of the services for which they are responsible. The Department is currently reviewing its information strategies in order to establish central requirements for data and will be seeking to identify any significant gaps in current data collection.

Eritrean Refugees

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many refugee children from Eritrea are currently in the care of London local authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to improve the ambulance service in the London area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government have worked closely with South West Thames regional health authority to establish a new management board and a new management structure, whose key aims are to make the best use of substantial new funds this year to bring into effect far more sophisticated and computerised emergency response procedures; improved training of emergency crews; purchase of new ambulances and increased management training within the service.

National Health Service Reforms

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response he intends to make to the report on NHS reforms and hospital costs by Professor Julian Le Grand and Dr. Will Bartlett from the school of advanced urban studies at Bristol university.

Mr. Dorrell: We understand that the report has not yet been published.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the population of the United Kingdom is of Indian, Pakistani, Turkish, Irish and Afro-Caribbean origin.

Mr. Dorrell: Comparable information for the whole of the United Kingdom is not available; but within Great Britain people describing themselves as being of Indian, Pakistani, African, and West Indian ethnic minority groups respectively formed 1·4, 0·8, 0·2 and 0·9 per cent. of the total. Estimates of persons of Turkish and Irish Republic ethnic origin are not made. However, the proportions themselves born in these two countries are estimated to be 0·03 and 1·1 per cent. respectively.

These proportions are estimates averaged over three years' labour force surveys—1987, 1988 and 1989—but are nevertheless still subject to sampling errors.

Live Television Feed

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the locations of the television sets in his Department which can receive the live television feed from the Chamber, and the total cost to his Department of this service.

Mr. Dorrell: There are five sets in the Department which can receive live broadcasts from the Chamber. They are situated in ministerial and press offices in Richmond house, Whitehall and cost approximately £6,000 a year.

Speech Therapy

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what obligations a district health authority has to provide speech therapists in their district;

(2) what ratio of speech therapists to children needing assistance is laid down by his Department;

(3) what means of redress are provided by his Department for parents where no provision for speech therapy for their children is available from a health authority;

(4) what provision is made for speech therapy to be provided on site in schools rather than the children having to attend special clinics out of educational time in school.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is the responsibility of health authorities to assess the health needs of their local population and to obtain appropriate services for them, including speech and language therapy services. We encourage the NHS to deploy qualified speech and language therapists as effectively and efficiently as possible and to make full use of speech therapists assistants. We expect those providing these services to schools to co-operate closely with local education authorities.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the provision of speech therapy in the Dewsbury district health authority area; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are his Department's guidelines for the training of speech therapists; and how his Department promotes this as a career.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Validation of courses for speech therapists is the responsibility of the academic board of the College of Speech Therapists. Information on speech therapy as a career is outlined in leaflet HSC20 which is available from Health Service Careers, PO Box 204, London, SE5 7ES.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many speech therapists are employed by the Yorkshire regional health authority; and what information he has on how these are allocated to districts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is given in the table:

[2] Total may not equal the sum of components, due to rounding.

[3] Nil or negligible.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific guidance his Department gives to health authorities in respect of the replacement of specialist staff such as speech therapists.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The recruitment of health authority staff, including speech therapists, is a matter for those health authorities.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total budget within his Department's expenditure programmes for the training of speech therapists; and how many are currently in training.

Mr. Dorrell: Funding of training courses for speech therapists is undertaken by the education sector which bears the full costs of mandatory awards and course provision. No budgets are held by the Department for these purposes. I understand that there are some 990 students currently training in England and Wales.

Mental Nursing

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received in favour of retaining the reference to mental nursing in the Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors Act 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received representations on this point from the Psychiatric Nurses Association. Under the existing legislation, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State may constitute standing committees of the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting to deal with specified matters, including in particular training, clinical nursing studies, mental nursing and occupational health nursing. Under the provisions of the Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors Bill my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be able to constitute standing committees of the council to deal with any matter, if the council requests him to do so.

Secure Units

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the Government grants provided for the two new secure units due to open soon will cover both revenue and construction costs.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Grants to local authorities under section 82(2) of the Children Act 1989 to meet the costs of providing secure accommodation are limited to the capital costs of the project, associated professional fees, and a contribution towards commissioning costs.

Kidney Patients

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are currently receiving dialysis treatment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dorrell: According to the latest information provided by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association, the number of people receiving dialysis in the United Kingdom as at 31 December 1990 was 8,857.

Hospital Finances

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the financial position of NHS hospitals.

Mr. Dorrell: Government revenue spending on the hospital and community health service is set to rise in real terms by 6·7 per cent. this year and by a further 5 per cent. next year, taking the total annual spend to £20 billion. The financial position of NHS hospitals is better than ever before.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

House of Commons Commission

Sir Geoffrey Howe: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will make a statement about the meeting of the House of Commons Commission held on Monday 18 November.

Mr. Beith: At its meeting on Monday 18 November the House of Commons Commission considered the recommendation in the Ibbs report that it should make its decisions more widely known. The Commission agreed that it would in future arrange for decisions which needed to be communicated to the House to be announced by means of a written answer shortly after the relevant meeting. In response to the same recommendation, the Commission instructed the Board of Management to draw up draft proposals for the form and content of annual reports from each Department of the House which will in future be appended to the annual report of the Commission.

At the same meeting, the Commission authorised Mr. Speaker to sign on its behalf a memorandum of understanding with the authorities of the House of Lords concerning the appointment of the Director of Works, the funding of his office, and the allocation of costs to the votes of the two Houses for the different types of work to be included in the parliamentary works programme.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Live Feed

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether the office of the Leader of the Opposition receives a live feed from the Chamber; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: No. As I indicated to the hon. Member in my reply of 22 October 1991, Official Report, column 582, the only Members currently authorised to receive a clean feed from the Chamber in their offices within the House are Mr. Speaker and the Chairman of Ways and Means.

SCOTLAND

Fish Farming Advisory Committee

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will instruct the Crown estate to make the minutes of the fish farming advisory committee and the chairman's report publicly available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The advisory committee is an independent body, is not under the direction of the Crown estate, and is free to decide its own procedures. Minutes of the committee's proceedings are circulated to the bodies represented on the committee and it is open to members of the committee to disseminate information regarding the committee hearings to interested parties. The Crown estate's decision as to whether to grant a site lease is made available to interested parties and others, on request.

However, I am drawing the hon. Member's suggestion to the attention of the chairman of the committee, who will write to him in due course.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the location, type of development, reasons for referral and date of all applications that have been referred to the Crown estate's fish farming advisory committee; and if he will include the committee's recommendations and the Crown estate's decision in each case.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

Applications considered by the Crown Estate's fish farm advisory committee

Date of application considered by Advisory Committee	Location	Type of development	Reason for referral	Committee recommendation	Crown Estate decision
24 August 1990	West Loch, Tarbert, Harris	Salmon farming	Visual amenity	Application be approved	Accepted Committee's recommendation
27 August 1991	Loch Melfort, by Oban	Salmon farming	Wildlife conservation	Application be approved	Accepted Committee's recommendation

Craigtoun Hospital

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is yet in a position to make a statement about the future of Craigtoun hospital.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Secretary of State has today approved Fife health board's proposal to close Craigtoun hospital, St. Andrews. The health board has upgraded St. Andrew's memorial hospital at a cost of £0·1 million in order to provide patients from Craigtoun with a better quality of care, including a higher standard of therapeutic and other services. The closure will release revenue of around £¼ million which will allow the board to make service improvements including developing community support to care for the elderly in north-east Fife.

Local Government

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce his proposals for the re-organisation of Scotland's local government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 25 November 1991]: My right hon. Friend's timetable for comments on the first consultation document, "The Structure of Local Government in Scotland", has been extended to 31 December 1991. Thereafter, further consultations will be undertaken to establish the details of the new structure and whether any organisational and management changes are necessary.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Data Protection

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effect of the EC directive on data protection on charitable giving.

Mrs. Rumbold: In discussion with their European Community partners, the Government are seeking to ensure that the directive makes proper allowance for the needs of charities and other data users.

Dangerous Dogs

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the further action he proposes to take to control dangerous dogs.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Bradford South (Mr. Cryer) on 14 November, at columns 629-30.

Shops (Thefts)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether the Metropolitan police are authorised to co-operate with retailers when thefts allegedly occur from their businesses while those businesses are at the time trading illegally;

(2) how many police officers have been involved in dealing with theft from retail and wholesale premises which themselves are trading in contravention of the law;

(3) what guidelines his Department has issued to police forces regarding their response to businesses who report alleged thefts from their premises, when those businesses are themselves open in contravention of the law.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No guidelines have been issued. The investigation of alleged criminal offences and the decision whether to initiate proceedings in a particular case are operational matters for the chief officer of the police force concerned. The Home Secretary has no authority to intervene.

Information about the number of police officers dealing with such incidents is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

It is the policy of the Metropolitan police service to investigate any allegation of crime, regardless of the legal status of the victim.

Police Funding

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to provide central Government funds to meet the costs of police activity for events other than those of a routine local nature.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. Central Government already meet a large proportion of policing costs, either directly through specific grant or indirectly through the revenue support grant system. It would be neither practicable nor desirable to extend further central funding in the way suggested.

Police Helicopters

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police forces have helicopters; how much approximately this costs; what arrangements there are for police helicopters to share RAF and Army bases, facilities and training; and if he will consider organising a police-led civilian helicopter fleet to assist fire and ambulance services as well as the police.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Some 16 police forces in England and Wales use helicopters, which are expected to cost about £7·5 million this year. Police helicopter operations are governed by Civil Aviation Authority regulations and meet civil rather than military training requirements. Forces may, however, make local arrangements to have access to military bases and facilities.

A study of police needs for air support, which was commissioned by the Home Office, has recommended that air support should be available to all forces. It concluded that the most effective and economic way of providing the service was by collaboration between police forces and with other emergency services. Discussions are in progress with the Association of Chief Police Officers, the local authority associations and with other emergency services on how best to take matters forward.

Metropolitan Police (Racial Discrimination)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many allegations of racial discrimination have been made against the Metropolitan police by serving or ex-police officers in each year since 1985; how many settlements or awards there were in respect of such allegations in each of those years; what the total amount of such settlements or awards were in each of those years; and whether the Commissioner intends to take disciplinary action against officers against whom any of these allegations were made.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that one allegation was made in 1986, one in 1987, two in 1990 and two in 1991. There have been two awards made in respect of the allegations: £20,000 in 1991, and £1,000 in 1990—this award was for victimisation, the original discrimination claim having been dismissed. Disciplinary investigations have either taken place, or are under way in respect of all the allegations; one officer has been disciplined under regulation 9 of the discipline code as a consequence.

Category A Prisoners (Escape)

Mr. Leadbitter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on the circumstances leading to the escape of category A prisoners Gerrard McAuley and Nessan Quinlivan, on the inquiry made by Judge Tumin and any consequential matters arising from his findings.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I announced on 5 August my acceptance of the recommendations in the report of Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons on the escape from Brixton prison on 7 July. Since then the inquiry conducted by Mr. Ralph Shuffrey and Mr. John Richardson on the disciplinary aspects has been completed and the action taken and its conclusions have been announced. I have received and am considering the report of the security audit conducted by Mr. Ronald Hadfield and Mr. Gordon Lakes. The chief constable of Staffordshire has invited the deputy chief constable of Nottinghamshire to investigate allegations made in the recent television programme "Thames Reports".

Broadcasting (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of air time on television and radio is devoted to broadcasting on subjects of particular interest to each of the Indian, Pakistani, Turkish, Irish and Afro-Caribbean communities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not available in the form requested. However material for ethnic minorities is produced by the BBC's Asian and Afro-Caribbean units and broadcast by BBC radio and television. Independent local radio stations in six areas cater specifically for ethnic minorities. Channel 4 includes programmes for minorities, and ITV companies must include material calculated to appeal specially to the tastes and outlook of persons they serve. Other broadcast material will be of particular interest to various groups, regardless of their ethnic origin.

Mrs. R. N. Ojimadu

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will give a definitive response to the letter dated 20 August in respect of Mrs. R. N. Ojimadu, sent to him by the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate and acknowledged under reference 19908/91.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My private secretary wrote to my hon. Friend on 24 September 1991. The decision in this case is a matter for the entry clearance officer in Lagos.

Young Offenders

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons under the age of 16 years are currently being held in young offender institutions; how many teenagers are being so held; and how many teenagers are being so held for non-violent offences.

Mrs. Rumbold [holding answer 26 November 1991]: The readily available information is given in the table.

Population[1] aged under 20 in young offender institutions in England and Wales on 30 June 1991 by age and offence

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answers of 18 November, Official Report, column 81, and 5 November, Official Report, column 92, if he will make inquiries to ascertain the number of districts currently paying social fund loans only where there is considered to be serious risk to health and safety.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants applied for grants or loans under the social fund during the financial year 1990-91 in each of the benefit offices dealing with the Sheffield, Heeley constituency; how many were turned down and for what reason; what was the average size of the grant, crisis loan or budgetary loan in the year; and if he will provide comparable figures for the first three months of 1991-92.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Benefits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing for each uprating date since 1970 (i) the supplementary benefit basic single non-householders scale rate, or income support, for an adult aged under 25 years, (ii) the percentage increase in (i) for each uprating date compared with the previous uprating date, (iii) the percentage increase in the average gross weekly earnings of all adult males between each uprating date and (iv) the actual movement in the retail prices index for all items between uprating dates.

Miss Widdecombe: The figures requested are in the table. The earnings and retail prices index—RPI—percentages quoted in columns D and E are for the period between upratings. However, the uprating percentage itself is based on different periods; for the percentage increase in earnings and RPI over these I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 3 June at columns 116-18.

Notes:

Column B—shows the Supplementary Benefit basic single non-householder scale rate for the years 1970-87. From April 1988 the figures are the Income Support basic personal allowance for a single person aged 18-24. No additions which might have been payable within Supplementary Benefit or Income Support premiums for special needs have been included. Nor has the non-householder addition paid to Supplementary Benefit claimants.

Column C—shows the percentage increase from one uprating date to the next. This will not necessarily reflect the uprating index for that year because of rounding. Also in the earlier years uprating was calculated by forecasting likely changes in the RPI and this sometimes meant that adjustments has to be made the following year.

Column D—gives the percentage increase in the average gross weekly earnings of all adult males from the New Earnings Survey.

Column E—shows the actual movement in the Retail Price Index for all items between uprating dates.

Income Support

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing for each uprating date since 1970 (i) the rate of supplementary benefit or income support for a householder couple each aged over 25 years with two children aged six and 11 years, (ii) the percentage increase in (i) between each uprating date, (iii) the percentage increase in the average gross weekly earnings of all adult males between each uprating date and (iv) the actual movement in the retail prices index for all items between uprating dates.

Miss Widdecombe: The figures requested are in the table. The percentages quoted in columns D and E refer to the period between upratings. However the uprating percentage itself is based on different periods; for the percentage increase in earnings and retail prices index over these I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 3 June at columns 116-18.

Column B—shows the Supplementary Benefit scale rate for a couple aged over 25 with two children aged 6 and 11, for the period from 1970 to 1987. From April 1988 the figures are the Income Support rates for the same family composition. No additions which might have been payable within Supplementary Benefit or Income Support premiums have been included (ie: the Income Support figures exclude Family Premium).

Column C—shows the percentage increase from one uprating date to the next. This will not necessarily reflect the uprating index for that year because of rounding. Also in the earlier years uprating was calculated by forecasting likely changes in the RPI and this sometimes meant that adjustments had to be made the following year.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the full financial year cost of providing severe disability premium to claimants who are prevented from claiming benefit under the recent change to regulation 3 of the Income Support (General) Regulations 1987.

Miss Widdecombe: It is not possible to estimate the number of people who might have tried to establish a commercial relationship with close relatives with whom they are living, and thereby gained entitlement to the premium, had the recent change referred to not been made. The unplanned expenditure avoided by the restoration of the policy intention of the premium through the amendment regulation is not therefore known.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners over 65 years claimed income support in (a) 1987 and (b) 1990.

Miss Widdecombe: It is estimated that in May 1987 there were 1·63 million pensioner claimants over 65 years in receipt of supplementary benefit and in May 1990 there were 1·41 million pensioner claimants over 65 in receipt of income support.

Disabled People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the purpose of attendance allowance; and what other help is provided towards the additional costs incurred by disabled people as a result of their disability.

Mr. Scott: The purpose of attendance allowance is to help meet the extra costs of care and supervision for severely disabled people. A wide range of further benefits is available to disabled people according to their circumstances, including mobility allowance which is intended to help meet the extra costs of disabled people with mobility problems. From April 1992 mobility allowance and, for those becoming entitled before age 65, attendance allowance, will be replaced and significantly extended by the introduction of disability living allowance. Attendance allowance will remain for the over-65s.

Mobility and Disability Allowances

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out tables indicating, for the last 12 months for which figures are available, for appeals involving each of mobility allowance and disability allowance (a) the number of adjudicating officials involved and their costs, (b) the number of consequent social security appeals tribunals held and their costs, (c) the number of medical practitioners retained by his Department and their total costs, (d) the total costs of the social security commissioners also engaged in these cases, (e) the total number of appeals heard, (f) the total number of appeals granted and (g) the total costs of the awards made.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is as follows:

(a) The Mobility Allowance (Mob. A) appeals unit has a staff of six who are involved in the preparation of appeals for both Medical and Social Security Appeal Tribunals.

For Severe Disablement Allowance (SDA) the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

(b) The information is in the following table.

(c) The Department retains a total of between 6,000-6,500 medical practitioners at any one time. Figures are not available to show the numbers who work solely on Mobility Allowance and Severe Disablement Allowance.

Information on the cost of using medical practitioners is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

(d) I understand from the Lord Chancellor's Department that the information requested is not available.

(e) The information is in the following table.

(f) The information is in the following table.

Benefits (Administrative Costs)

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing administrative costs, including advertising, as percentages of benefit expenditure for in each of: child benefit, family credit, national insurance retirement pension; national insurance invalidity benefits; national insurance unemployment benefit and income support.

Mr. Jack: The latest available information is in table 31 of the departmental report "Social Security—The Government's Expenditure Plans 1991-92 to 1993-94"—Cm 1514—a copy of which is available in the Library.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements have been made to make information about the disability living allowance and disability working allowance available to visually impaired people.

Mr. Scott: The Department is planning a carefully targeted and comprehensive publicity campaign for the two new benefits—disability living allowance and disability working allowance, with the help of disabled people and their organisations. Initial information about the new benefits has already been issued to organisations of and for disabled people, including those representing visually impaired people.

We are paying particular attention to the needs of visually impaired people in planning the information campaign. The leaflet "DS701 New Benefits for Disabled People" which was issued to disability organisations in November has already been transferred on to tape and we are also exploring the possibility of making both tape and braille versions available of the disability living allowance, attendance allowance and disability working allowance leaflets which will be issued next year to provide information about the qualifying conditions of the new benefits. We also intend that any broadcast material produced by the Department will provide full information aurally as well as visually.

The claim packs for the new benefits are being designed with visually impaired people in mind, featuring larger print sizes than normally used by the Department together with colours which enable people to read the text more clearly. In addition, the freephone benefit inquiry line for people with disabilities will provide versions of the claim forms in braille for blind people, and we are exploring with RNIB the possibility of producing an audio tape to assist partially sighted people with the completion of claim forms.

We shall continue to consult organisations representing visually impaired people to ensure that their information needs about the new benefits are met.

Resettlement Units

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will suspend the resettlement unit closure programme until regional review teams are reconstituted and the national advisory steering group is reconvened.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consultations he undertakes to assess what alternatives exist before approving the closure of a resettlement unit.

Miss Widdecombe: The resettlement unit disengagement programme has been built on advice from regional review teams which comprise of local people with an interest in, or experience of the problems of homelessness among single people without a settled way of life. They have identified facilities necessary to enable specific resettlement units to be replaced. Where units are closed the Government have to be satisfied that the proposed new hostels are suitable and that the number of replacement beds is at least the same as the number of beds in normal use in the resettlement unit.

Disability Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements have been made to enable visually impaired people to participate fully as lay members of disability appeal tribunals.

Mr. Scott: The Disability Living Allowance and Disability Working Allowance Act 1991 requires that every disability appeal tribunal must include one person who is experienced in dealing with the needs of disabled people, either in a professional or voluntary capacity, or because they are themselves disabled. The Act also provides that in considering the appointments to the panels from which disability appeal tribunal members are drawn, the president of the independent tribunal service shall have regard to the desirability of appointing disabled persons.

Responsibility for the administrative arrangements for disability appeal tribunals lies with the president of the independent tribunal service, His Honour Judge Holden, and the hon. Member may wish to contact his office direct to obtain further information.

Contaminated Blood

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to introduce special benefits for non-haemophiliacs who have received transfusions of blood contaminated with the HIV virus.

Mr. Scott: We have no such plans.

National Insurance

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the upper and lower earnings levels for national insurance contributions in each year since 1978, (a) at current prices, (b) at constant 1991 prices and (c) as percentages of average earnings; and if he will estimate the proportion of wage and salary earners who have to pay national insurance contributions under this system.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is in the table. It is estimated that 85 per cent. of employees pay national insurance contributions.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate has been made of the effect upon the unemployment and employment figures of the 1988 change in the definition of full-time work from 30 hours to 24 hours for benefit purposes.

Mr. Forth: It was estimated at the time that the net effect on the monthly claimant unemployment statistics would have been small. The definition of full-time work used in the employment series remains at 30 hours per week, as it has for the last 45 years and, therefore, the employment figures were unaffected.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate he has made of the change there will be to the unemployment figures as a result of the redefinition of full-time work for income support purposes from 24 hours to 16 hours; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The effect on the monthly claimant unemployment statistics is likely to be small, as those affected would have to be working for between 16 and 24 hours a week while signing on at an unemployment benefit office. Moreover, it does not necessarily follow that these people will cease to appear in the figures.

English Teaching

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what sums are available and projected for the current financial year, and the next two financial years, for the training, enterprise and education directorate; when it is proposed to release finance to fund student course fees and expenses for the current term for English for speakers of other languages; how many ESOL students there are in England and Wales for the current year; what are his projections for the following two years; what were the sums available and expended in each of the last two years; and how many students were assisted.

Mr. Forth: Total planned expenditure in Great Britain on programmes administered by the Department's training, enterprise and education directorate is £2·9 billion in 1991-92, £2·8 billion in 1992-93 and £2·8 billion in 1993-94.

Support for English for speakers of other languages —ESOL—is provided as an integral part of the Department's training and enterprise programmes. The planning and delivery of these programmes is now the responsibility of training and enterprise councils and is determined by local needs and priorities. Information on expenditure and numbers trained is not separately identified.

Self-employment

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are self-employed in (a) Sheffield and (b) the United Kingdom, giving figures from 1987 to date.

Mr. Forth: Self-employed figures are not available below standard region for the dates specified. Self-employed figures for the United Kingdom are as follows:

[1]The figures for June 1990 are carried forward for later dates pending the results of the 1991 Labour Force Survey.

Enterprise Allowance

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what types of business have been created by the enterprise allowance, broken down by standard industrial classification, or by manufacturing, construction, transport and distribution, retail, private services, and other, giving details for (a) Sheffield and (b) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Forth: Information on the numbers of new businesses started through the enterprise allowance scheme, broken down by the slightly modified standard industrial classification used for this scheme, is given in the following table.

The figures are for the year ending 31 March 1991 and cover Great Britain only. A similar scheme operates in Northern Ireland, but the Employment Department does not collect information on this. Separate information for the Sheffield area is not available.

Industrial classification of EAS businesses— 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991—United Kingdom

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of business start-ups the enterprise allowance constitutes for each year from 1987 to date, giving figures for (a) Sheffield and (b) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been on the enterprise allowance scheme each year from 1987 to date, giving figures for (a) Sheffield and (b) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Forth: The numbers of people joining the enterprise allowance scheme are recorded in financial years, as shown in the following table. The figures cover Great Britain only: a similar scheme operates in Northern Ireland, but the Employment Department does not collect information on this.

Enterprise allowance scheme participants 1987 to 1991

Year	Sheffield	Great Britain
1987-88	1,712	106,305
1988-89	1,686	98,522
1989-90	1,206	77,886
1990-91	770	60,307
1991-92	[1]438	[2]27,195

[1] Up to 4 November 1991.
[2] Up to 30 September 1991, which is the latest date for which comprehensive Great Britain information is available.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the success rates for businesses started on enterprise allowance for each year from 1987 to date, giving figures for (a) Sheffield and (b) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Forth: The table shows the proportion of enterprise allowance scheme businesses which completed a full year on the scheme. A 1988 survey of a sample of EAS businesses begun in March and April of 1987 showed that 76 per cent. of businesses in Great Britain were still trading six months after completing a full year on the scheme. Information specific to Sheffield is not available from this survey.

Enterprise allowance businesses completing a full year on the scheme

Year	[1]Great Britain percentage	[2]Sheffield/ Rotherham percentage
1987-88	83·44	n/a
1989-90	82·63	83·53

[1] The figures given are for Great Britain only: a similar scheme operates in Northern Ireland but the Employment Department does not collect information on this.
[2] Sheffield and Rotherham were covered by the same field office at this time and the figures cannot be separated out to give information on Sheffield only.

Success rates for businesses started in 1990-91 will not be known until the end of the 1991-92 financial year.

Bank Holidays

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to abolish the bank holiday at the beginning of May and replace it with a bank holiday on St. George's day; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has no such plans.

Skills Training Agency

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he intends to offer any financial assistance to former civil servants who were transferred to TICC Ltd. on the privatisation of the Skills Training Agency, and were unable to obtain redundancy payments due to them when the company went into liquidation.

Mr. Howard: When TICC purchased, in May 1990, the four skillcentres at St. Helens, Accrington, Cumbria and Ipswich, it undertook to ensure that the staff transferred to it from my Department maintained an entitlement, through their new contracts of employment, to redundancy payments at civil service rates. TICC is contractually bound to do this and I have no legal responsibility of any kind towards the company's staff. I recognise, however, that the collapse of the company without the financial resources to meet its contractual obligations has left its staff who transferred from the civil service with no more than statutory redundancy payments. Under these special circumstances I have decided to offer an ex-gratia payment to these former civil servants. The payments will be made as soon as possible. They will be the equivalent of the amount each member of staff would have received had they been made redundant at the time of the sale to TICC rather than transferred to that company, less what each person has already received by way of statutory payment from the national insurance fund.

WALES

Salmon (River Taff)

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made in re-introducing salmon to the River Taff; and if we will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The National Rivers Authority has been carrying out a programme, started in 1985 by the Welsh water authority, to reinstate salmon to the River Taff. This work has included the control of pollution, the construction of fish passes on weirs, the transfer of adult salmon to suitable spawning grounds, controlling illegal fishing and improving fish habitat. In addition the river has been stocked with over 100,000 juvenile salmon. The success of the programme is demonstrated by the numbers of adult salmon returning to the Taff. In 1990, 195 salmon were reported caught from the Taff, whereas prior to 1983 very few salmon had been recorded in the river this century.

Cancer Treatment, North Wales

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made on the implementation of the recommendations of the Deloitte, Haskins and Sells report on cancer treatment services in north Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I am currently considering the far-reaching implications of the Deloitte, Haskins and Sells report in the light of the responses to consultation. We hope to announce our decision on the further development of the service before too long.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of drugs prescribed by the NHS in Wales were tranquillisers; what was the cost; and what proportion that was of the total cost of drugs in (a) 1974, (b) 1979 and (c) at the latest available date.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Information on drugs which are solely tranquillisers could be obtained only at disproportionate cost for years succeeding 1974. The available information is given in the table.

	1974	1979	1989
Proportion of Total Prescriptions

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to respond to the request for the minutes to be made public of the meeting on 26 June 1991 at the Welsh Office, Cathyas Park building between his groundwater consultant and representatives of Cardiff Residents Against the Barrage.

Mr. David Hunt: I have already responded to the hon. Gentleman in my letter of 18 November indicating that no formal minutes of the meeting were kept for external circulation. That letter also offered a response on any specific query.

Mr. Gwylim Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his latest estimates of the investment by the Exchequer and by the free enterprise sector that has already been made and will be made in the future into the Cardiff bay barrage and the regeneration of south Cardiff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Government grant in aid to Cardiff Bay development corporation between April 1987 and March 1991 was £92·4 million, of which £43·8 million was for land acquisition. The subsequent sale of this land as fully serviced sites will realise far more than £43·8 million, thus reducing the total public sector input. A further £32·3 million is being made available this year. Total private sector investment under way or firmly committed between April 1987 and March 1991 was over £250 million.

The planning update and economic appraisal statement, prepared in January 1990, estimated that the total cost to the public sector of a development strategy including a barrage would be £335 million over a 15 or 20-year period. It also estimated that, over the same period, private sector investment would be nearly £1,600 million.

Water Rights (River Taff)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he anticipates concluding negotiations with the chairman of Cardiff Bay development corporation and Associated British Ports concerning a reassessment of Associated British Ports' abstraction rights to water from the River Taff at Blackweir; if he will place a copy of his correspondence thereon with the Wales division of the National Rivers Authority in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Any negotiations with Associated British Ports about its abstraction rights would be a commercial matter for Cardiff Bay development corporation. It would not be appropriate to publish any associated correspondence.

NHS Consultants

Mr. Gwylim Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average income of consultants with the health service in Wales, at the latest available date and for each of the last five years.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The average income of consultants with the health service in Wales, exclusive of any income which they may derive from private practice, was as follows:

1986-87	38,695
1987-88	41,729
1988-89	44,723
1989-90	46,962
1990-91[1]	50,945

Annual Medical and Dental Census.

Note: Includes Consultant Distinction Awards and Locums.

Mr. Gwylim Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how merit awards for consultants with the health service in Wales are determined.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: In October 1990, the Department, together with the Department of Health, produced a leaflet explaining how the NHS distinction and meritorious service awards scheme works. The scheme was established in 1948 following a recommendation that specialists should be able to feel that more than ordinary ability would be rewarded giving them the opportunity to earn incomes comparable with the highest that could be earned in other professions.

Distinction awards are made on the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on Distinction Awards. The committee approaches its regional network of committees, the royal college and faculties, the Public Health Laboratory Service, the Medical Research Council and regional specialist advisers for nominations. The chairman of the committee then visits each regional committee between May and September to discuss their recommendations and all the nominations received from other sources in order to draw up a provisional list for the consideration and final decision of the advisory committee.

There are four levels of awards: C, B, A and A+. There is a regional C awards committee in each region which is responsible for drawing up nominations for C awards and in Wales this is chaired by the director of NHS Wales.

The system has been modified over the years and while there are no formal criteria for awards the committee looks for certain qualities including clinical excellence, research, improvement to the service and teaching and training when drawing its conclusions.

I have placed a copy of the explanatory leaflet in the Library of the House for my hon. Friend's attention.

Employment Action

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales are engaged in employment action, given by each county.

Mr. David Hunt: Information on employment action participation is not yet available centrally.

Roadside Trees and Hedges

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will institute a survey by his highways and transportation department of the A5 trunk road with a view to ensuring the safety of roadside trees and hedges in relation to caravan transporters and other wide vehicles; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will institute a survey by his highways and transportation department of the A483 road with a view to ensuring the safety of roadside trees and hedges in relation to caravan transporters and other wide vehicles; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will institute a survey by his highways and transportation department of the A470 road with a view to ensuring the safety of roadside trees and hedges in relation to caravan transporters and other wide vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A study on the general condition of planting on these and other trunk roads in the Principality was put in hand earlier this year. The fieldwork has largely been completed, but the data collected have still to be fully analysed. The finished study will allow measures to be taken to ensure the future safety of roadside trees and hedges in relation to such vehicles.

Secure Unit

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether the new secure unit in Wales will attract full Government grant in respect of both capital and revenue costs.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The full capital cost of providing a new unit as recommended in the report on the review of secure care in Wales will be met by the Welsh Office.

The report recommends that costs should be met through charges incurred by placing agencies, including the Welsh Office, where young people given a custodial sentence are placed there.

Mental Handicap

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that the all-Wales strategy for mental handicap shall be pursued through a 10-year strategy with annual targets for the provision of health, housing and the support services for each county in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend published, on 1 August 1991, for a period of public consultation, his proposals for the future of the all-Wales strategy. Copies are available in the Library of the House. These make it clear that the strategy will continue for as long as it is needed, with the Welsh Office continuing to agree annual targets for service development with each county joint planning team.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Shops (Thefts)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been arrested in each of the last four years for theft from shops which at the time were themselves trading illegally.

Mr. John Patten: Information on arrests and convictions is not held centrally for shoplifting offences in these circumstances.

Exotic Birds

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on thefts of exotic bird species in the United Kingdom over the last 10 years.

Mr. John Patten: There is no information available centrally.

Disabled Staff

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many disabled people are currently employed in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Home Office currently employs 183 registered disabled persons, which represents some 0·4 per cent. of the total number of staff. No record is kept of staff with disabilities who have chosen not to register. Specific targets have been set in the last two years to increase the number of staff with disabilities employed in the Department.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make it his policy to accept the REST proposals as the basis for achieving consensus on rationalising Sunday trading legislation.

Mrs. Rumbold: As I said in my statement on 27 November at columns 919-927, it would not be sensible to settle policy on the merits of proposals to restrict trading in types of classes of goods until the compatibility of such measures with Community law has been determined. The REST proposals are in this category.

Police Station (Oakham)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on the progress of the building of the new police station at Oakham, Rutland.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Building work on the new police station at Oakham started in April this year at an approved cost of £1·125 million, and is scheduled to be completed and ready for occupation in November 1991.

Committal Proceedings

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the reasons committal proceedings involving alleged offences by police officers following miscarriages of justice are taken in Bow Street magistrates court when the alleged offences arise outside the Metropolitan area.

Mr. John Patten: Magistrates courts have jurisdiction to deal with committal proceedings for indictable offences wherever they are alleged to have occurred. In some instances, the case will be heard in London, for the convenience of all the parties. In those circumstances committal proceedings will usually take place at Bow Street magistrates court.

Brixton Prison

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether all postal packages for prisoners at Brixton prison are routinely checked by (a) X-ray detectors and (b) metal detectors.

Mrs. Rumbold: All postal packages are checked by X-ray and by metal detectors in appropriate cases. They are also opened and their contents are examined.

Domestic Rates

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many summonses, at 31 March and 30 September, in each year from 1984 to 1989 had been issued nationally for non-payment of domestic rates.

Mr. John Patten: The Home Office does not collect such information.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what have been the overtime budgets available to the Metropolitan police in the four quarters of 1990 and the first three quarters of 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner that the information is not available in the form requested, because overtime budgets are fixed on a financial year rather than a quarterly basis. However, the actual amounts of overtime incurred by the Metropolitan police for the periods in question are as follows:

	Police	Civil staff	Traffic wardens
1990
January—March	19,775,000	3,608,000	275,000
April—June	15,646,000	3,701,000	308,000
July—September	14,835,000	3,333,000	242,000
October—December	16,144,000	4,138,000	447,000
1991
January—March	18,262,000	4,129,000	358,000
April—June[1]	17,241,000	4,077,000	393,000
July—September[1]	16,813,000	4,339,000	460,000

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the numbers of persons (a) arrested and (b) charged by the Metropolitan police in 1989, 1990 and the first three quarters of 1991.

Mr. John Patten: The information available is for notifiable offences and is normally provided for 12-month periods only. It has been supplied by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis and is contained in the following table:

Number of persons arrested and charged in the Metropolitan Police District for notifiable offences

Period	Arrested	Charged
1989	111,420	85,323
1990	116,865	86,107
12 months to September 1991	115,788	84,974

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases in each police authority area were recharged by police following discharge by magistrates where the Crown prosecution service has been unable to provide sets of papers at the appropriate time.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not available.

Police Vehicle Accidents

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the number of fatal accidents involving motor vehicles driven by police in the course of their duties which have occurred since 1 January 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information for 1991 is not yet available centrally.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on disciplinary action taken against police officers involved in accidents caused by police vehicles in each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is not available and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Kevin Bardsley

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will refer the case involving the constituent of the hon. Member for Meriden, Mr. Kevin Bardsley, Home Office reference PDP B19156/8/1, previously of Frankland prison, to judicial review in view of concern about the accuracy of evidence and testimony.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 2 December 1991]: My right hon. Friend has the power, under section 17 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968, to refer a conviction to the Court of Appeal, but he would normally do so only if presented with new evidence or a consideration of substance which had not been before the courts and which appeared to cast doubt on the safety of the conviction. Representations about Mr. Bardsley's case have been considered on a number of occasions, but in the absence of anything new that appears to touch the safety of the conviction, so far we have not found any grounds to justify intervention.

ENERGY

Disabled Staff

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many disabled people are currently employed in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: At 1 June 1991, a total of 13 members of my Department's staff—1·36 per cent. were registered disabled persons.

My Department's staff also included at this date other people with disabilities who had chosen not to register. No separate records are kept of unregistered disabled people.

IAEA Safeguards

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when Her Majesty's Government received a copy of the latest annual safeguards implementation report prepared by the International Atomic Energy Agency; and whether the full report is available for public scrutiny in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My officials received a copy of the IAEA's safeguards implementation report in June. The IAEA concluded that the nuclear material under their safeguards in 1990 remained in peaceful nuclear activities. The detailed report is confidential; however, a summary of it is contained in the IAEA's 1990 annual report. A copy of the annual report has been placed in the Library of the House.

United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what external financing limit has been set for the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority for 1992-93.

Mr. Wakeham: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's external financing limit for 1992-93 will be £17·9 million.

Research Expenditure

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give for each year from 1979-80 to 1992-93 inclusive the spending or proposed spending on research funded by his Department into (a) coal technology, (b) nuclear power, (c) energy efficiency and (d) renewables expressing these figures in (i) money terms, (ii) 1991-92 real terms and (iii) as a percentage of his Department's total research expenditure.

Mr. Wakeham [holding answer 21 November 1991]: Figures for the years up to and including 1991-92 are as follows. Figures for 1992-93 are not yet available but will be published in the Department of Energy's departmental report in February 1992.

TRANSPORT

Waterways

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultation took place, before the Transport and Works Bill was presented to Parliament, with the Inland Waterways Association, Inland Waterways Amenities Advisory Council, and other waterways and canal users' organisations.

Mr. McLoughlin: No formal consultation has taken place, but we are ready to meet representatives of inland waterways' interest groups to discuss the Bill at any time. The main provisions are based on proposals set out in the Government's consultation document "Private Bills and New Procedures"—Cm. 1110—published in June last year.

Light Dues

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had about the compatibility of maintenance of shipping light dues levied on merchant ships with the United Kingdom's obligations under the treaty of Rome, articles 75(a) and 95; what conclusions he has reached; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: As a service charge light dues do not conflict with the treaty of Rome. My right hon. Friend has had no discussions on paragraph 1(a) of article 75 or on article 95 in relation to light dues, but the attention of the Transport Council and the Commission has been drawn to inconsistency in the application of the "user pays" principle within the Community. This principle is recognised and accepted in relation to civil aviation navigation systems, but is not yet generally applied to marine navigation systems.

Oil Tanker Spillage (The Minch)

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has assessed the environmental consequences of an oil tanker spillage in the Minch; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My Department's marine pollution control unit—MPCU—maintains a national contingency plan for dealing with marine pollution all round the United Kingdom coast. This plan reflects a continuously updated assessment of the economic and environmental consequences of oil spillages and other incidents and is supported by local authority plans, developed with help from the MPCU. The national contingency plan is exercised regularly and in 1990 the chosen area was the Minch.

In Scotland, the MPCU is advised by the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland on the effects of oil pollution incidents on wildlife and has arrangements to call it in when a spillage occurs which may affect wildlife. It is similarly advised on fisheries by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries, Scotland. To help with contingency planning, the MPCU commissioned the production of 77 maps identifying all sensitive wildlife areas—including the Minch and the western side of the Outer Hebrides—on the coast of Great Britain which are vulnerable to oil pollution.

I recently visited the Minch and I am very well aware of the economic and ecological importance of avoiding oil spillages there. The Minch is not heavily used by laden tankers. A deep-water route has been designated on the Atlantic side of the Hebrides and a notice to mariners asks that all laden tankers over 10,000 gross registered tonnes use it unless conditions make it unsafe to do so. The object of this arrangement is to keep large oil cargoes out of the Minch except when the environmental and safety risks of using the outer route are greater.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Knife amnesties

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General what recent discussions he has had with the Crown prosecution service on the operation of knife amnesties; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: For good administrative reasons the nature of my discussions with the Director of Public Prosecutions is confidential.

Domicile Law

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General when he intends to present a Bill on domicile following the recommendations of the Law Commission.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, North-East (Mr. Malins) on 17 October, Official Report, column 177.

Probate Registry, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has had concerning the removal of historic fixtures and fittings from the probate registry, Cardiff road, Llandaff, Cardiff; what steps he proposes to take to prevent repetition of such removal; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No representations have been received other than the comments made about the probate registry in the report by the Comptroller and Auditor General, "Upkeep of Historic Buildings on the Historic Estate" of November 1991. The Lord Chancellor's Department assumed responsibility for the upkeep of this building on 1 April 1991, from the Department of the Environment. It intends to follow the criteria for obtaining value for money in maintaining historic buildings set out in appendix 1 of the report. In particular, it will ensure that consultation procedures with the statutory conservation authorities are fully observed before the commencement of maintenance or improvement work of its historic buildings.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will list by crime category the number of cases in each of the last three years where cases have been discharged by magistrates courts as a result of the Crown prosecution service being unable to provide sets of papers at the appropriate time; and if he will give the total number of such cases in each year.

The Attorney-General: The monitoring of instances where inability to meet court deadlines results in discharge of the proceedings is a responsibility of local managers within the CPS. They liaise closely with the police service to ensure that such occurrences are kept to a minimum. Central records are not maintained. Implementation of the recommendations of the working group on pre-trial issues in accordance with my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) on 21 February 1991 should greatly improve the ability of the CPS to provide sets of papers at the appropriate time and reduce the incidence of cases being discharged by magistrates.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

The Gulf

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the medical and food stocks intended for the Gulf have since been distributed as humanitarian aid; what measures are taken to ensure that such aid reaches its intended recipients; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We are supporting the UN, British and Iraqi relief agencies in providing humanitarian aid, including medical and food supplies, to vulnerable groups in Iraq. We have spent some £44 million since April this year. We maintain regular contact with all these agencies, which monitor distribution within Iraq.

Third World Debt

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to press the World bank and the International Monetary Fund to ensure that debt reduction schemes negotiated under the Brady plan produce increased debt relief for debtor countries.

Mrs. Chalker: We welcome the increasing use of deals negotiated under the Brady intiative, which allows the IMF and World bank to devote some of their lending programme to facilitate commercial debt reduction. The amount of assistance given is decided on a case-by-case basis. Progress in negotiations between debtors and bank creditors is closely monitored by the relevant financial institution.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by his Department to the four main United Kingdom clearing banks concerning the implementation of the Brady plan.

Mrs. Chalker: Arrangements for dealing with commercial bank debt must be a matter for the banks and debtors to negotiate between themselves. Governments of creditor countries should not dictate to banks—not least because of the impact this could have on developing countries' prospects of future private sector financing, but we continue to urge comparability of treatment between official and commercial debt.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to press for the extension of the Toronto agreement on debt relief to cover very poor countries outside Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: Countries are considered for Toronto terms on a case-by-case basis. The criteria are poverty, degree of indebtedness and whether an IMF-approved economic reform programme is in place. An applicant's past track record on debt servicing is also taken into account. Geographical location is not considered and two countries outside Africa—Bolivia and Guyana—have already benefited from Toronto terms.

Brazil

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will supply (a) a list of the projects now approved under the memorandum on technical and scientific co-operation signed between Britain and Brazil in 1989, together with a list of project managers and institutes or consultancy organisations involved in each and (b) similar details for the projects currently under consideration by the British and Brazilian Governments, together with expected dates of approval.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the project budget on approved projects under the memorandum on technical and scientific co-operation between Britain and Brazil has been earmarked for consultancy fees to British-based institutions (a) in total and (b) for each project.

Mrs. Chalker: The information requested is as follows:

Proportion of project budget designated for consultancy fees

Project	Per cent.
1. Anglo-Brazilian Climate Observation Study	1·3
2. Caxiuana Research Station	1·9
3. Forestry Development of Aromatic Plants and Essential Oils	12·7

5. Tocantins Forestry and Rural Development Project	7·2
6. Demini Yanomami Health Care Project	Nil

Overall average	4·3

These figures are based on the fees for short-term consultancy inputs. The calculation does not include management charges, costs of long-term technical co-operation officers or travel and subsistence costs for consultants.

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the amount of aid and trade provision funds which are spent after allocation within the United Kingdom for every £1 allocated on British contracts under ATP.

Mrs. Chalker: Assuming that an ATP grant is associated with an export credit guaranteed by the Export Credits Guarantee Department in the ratio 35:65—the minimum level of concessionality allowed under international rules—each £1 of ATP expenditure would be associated with £2·85 worth of contracts for British exporters. This figure does not include any follow-up business.

Aid Programmes

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action is currently being undertaken by his Department to ensure that projects and adjustments supported by the World bank, the International Monetary Fund and aid programmes are beneficial to (a) the poorest people and (b) the environment.

Mrs. Chalker: I explained the Government's policy on "Aid and Poverty" in a speech under that title to the all-party group on overseas development on 15 May; a copy is in the Library of the House. The actions we have taken to ensure that our aid programme benefits the environment are set out in part II of the "The Common Inheritance: the First-year Report", Cm. 1655.

We support the World bank's strategy on poverty alleviation which is described in detail in its 1991 annual report—also in the Library. I am about to write to all right hon. and hon. Members about the bank's forest policy. We continue to encourage the International Monetary Fund to pay increasing attention to the needs of vulnerable groups and to environmental considerations when designing economic reform programmes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the present figure for official aid, the amount that would meet the United Nations target and the compound rate of growth needed, assuming no economic growth, to reach the target in (a) five or (b) 10 years.

Mrs. Chalker: Performance against the United Nations target for net official development assistance as a proportion of GNP is measured by calendar year. The latest such United Kingdom figure is £1,485 million for 1990. To have met the United Nations target, £3,798 million would have been required in 1990. Assuming our GNP for 1990 were to remain constant in cash terms, a compound rate of growth of 20·7 per cent. would be necessary to reach the United Nations target within five years, or 9·8 per cent. if it were to be reached in 10 years.

Simple Truth Appeal

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to how the money raised from the "Simple Truth" appeal that was channelled through United Nations agencies has actually been spent; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave on 11 November to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes).

PRIME MINISTER

Live Television Feed

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the locations of the television sets in his Department which can receive the live television feed from the Chamber and the total cost to his Department of this service.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 3 December 1991]: The cost of receiving live television feeds from the Chamber to 10 Downing street is £2,925.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Prime Minister if he will issue guidance to Ministers to ensure that any parliamentary question answered by an agency begins by quoting verbatim the parliamentary question asked.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 December 1991]: My right hon. Friend the Lord President of the Council recently announced the Government's proposal that replies from agency chief executives to written parliamentary questions should be published and that he would be pursuing the proposal with the House authorities—Official Report, 27 November, column 558. We hope that new arrangements can be implemented soon and at that point will issue guidance on the arrangements to Departments and agencies. In preparing such guidance, we shall certainly bear in mind the suggestion made by the hon. Member.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Benefit

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what would be (a) the first year and (b) the full-year costs of raising child benefit to £9·95 (i) in 1991-92 and (ii) 1992-93, including increases in linked, means-tested and national insurance benefits for Great Britain;

(2) what would be (a) the first year and (b) the full-year costs of raising child benefit to £10 (i) in 1991-92 and (ii) 1992-93, including increases in linked, means-tested and national insurance benefits for Great Britain.

Mr. Jack: The rates of child benefit from April 1991 were £8·25 for the eldest eligible child and £7·25 for each other child, and the rates increased to £9·25—£7·50 from October. On the basis of our latest estimates, the gross cost of increasing child benefit from those rates to £9·95 for each child throughout 1991-92 would be about £1,150 million. If the October rates had applied throughout 1991-92, the cost would reduce to around £940 million. The gross full-year cost in 1992-93 of paying £9·95 instead of the rates of £9·65—£7·80 which will be in payment from April 1992, would be about £720 million.

Raising child benefit on the same basis to £10 instead of £9·95 would increase the above costs by some £30 million to around £1,180 million, £970 million and £750 million respectively.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest information on the number of people who pay national insurance contributions at the contracted-out rate in Great Britain; and of these how many earn above (a) £15,000, (b) £20,000, (c) £25,000, (d) £30,000 and (e) £40,000, respectively.

Mr. Jack: The information is not available in the precise form requested. However, during 1989-90, the latest year for which provisional information is available, those employed earners who paid national insurance contributions at the contracted-out standard rate and the numbers of those who earned above that year's upper earnings limit for national insurance purposes are in the table.

Great Britain

Millions

	Total	With earnings above the UEL (£16,900)
At the standard contracted out rate	8·3	1·1
A mixture of contracted out and not contracted out rates	1·6	0·1
Total with some contracted out contributions	9·8	1·2

Note: Figures do not sum due to rounding of component parts.

SERPS

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate (a) the first year and (b) the full-year total cost to the national insurance fund in (i) 1991-92 and (ii) 1992-93, of allowing people to contract out of the state earnings-related pension scheme into a money purchase personal pension scheme giving figures separately for (1) people contracting out of the state earnings-related pension scheme in 1991-92 and (2) all schemes.

Mr. Jack: The information is not available in precisely the form requested. However such information as is available is contained in appendices 6 and 7 of the report by the Government Actuary on the drafts of the Social Security Benefits Uprating Order and the Social Security (Contributions) Rerating Order which was laid before the House earlier today.

Maternity Allowance

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women claimed maternity allowance in the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the table.

Year	Number of claims
1986-87	490,000
1987-88	147,000
1988-89	130,000
1989-90	120,000
1990-91	110,000

Notes:

1. Statutory Maternity Pay (SMP) replaced Maternity Allowance for most pregnant women from 6 April 1987.
2. Figures for 1990-91 are provisional.

Poll Tax

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table to show, for each month of this year, the number of cases, at each DSS office, of poll tax deductions from income support, and the totals.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not collected on a monthly basis. However, I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that quarterly figures are placed in the Library and the Public Information Office, and those for the last quarter will be placed there shortly.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Disabled Staff

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many disabled people are currently employed in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Department currently employs 70 staff who are registered as disabled. There are other staff in the Department with disabilities who have chosen not to register and who are not included in this figure.

Secondary School Streaming

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the effect of streaming in secondary schools on the motivation and achievement of pupils.

Mr. Eggar: It is for teachers to decide how best to cope with the challenge presented by the national curriculum to raise the levels of achievement of all pupils. I hope, however, that they will consider the advantages of teaching a subject to pupils in groups of similar, rather than very disparate, ability.

Anti-smoking Education

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he proposes to take to discourage 11 to 15-year-olds from smoking regularly, by (a) use of the national curriculum and (b) other efforts in schools.

Mr. Atkins: The statutory order for national curriculum science requires that pupils should know that tobacco is a harmful substance, and that its avoidance contributes to good health. The order also requires that pupils should have opportunities to consider the effects of tobacco on the human body. The National Curriculum Council has issued guidance to all maintained schools in England, offering advice on how schools might incorporate topics about the dangers of smoking into their wider programmes of health education. In addition, my Department provides support, under the grants for education support and training programme, for local initiatives in preventive health education.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Disabled Staff

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many disabled people are currently employed in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The FCO employs 48 registered disabled persons, 24 in the diplomatic wing and 24 in the ODA. Both wings employ other staff with disabilities who have chosen not to register.

Hong Kong

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in agreeing the court of final appeal for Hong Kong; and whether its composition will comply fully with the provisions of the joint declaration and the basic law as regards the court's own flexibility to invite as many or as few judges for other common law jurisdictions to sit in each case as required.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Agreement was reached with the Chinese side on the composition of the court of final appeal at the 20th meeting of the Sino-British joint liaison group on 24 to 26 September 1991. We have already made clear that the next task will be to draw up legislation in Hong Kong. The Hong Kong Legislative Council will be consulted on the draft bill in due course. We consider that the agreement reached on the joint liaison group is consistent with the provisions of the joint declaration and basic law.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will recommend that European Community observers be stationed in those republics within Yugoslavia in which fighting has not taken place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The monitors are currently stationed in those republics where there has been fighting and in Bosnia-Hercegovina where tension is particularly high. There are at present no plans to extend the operation.

Gibraltar

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he takes to monitor the law in Gibraltar to ensure that it complies with decisions of the European Court of Human Rights; and whether he will use his powers to ensure that those laws of Gibraltar which are in conflict with decisions of the court are amended.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Under the constitution of Gibraltar the assent of the governor of Gibraltar is required before any Bill passed by the legislature of Gibraltar can become law. The governor, who is responsible to, and appointed by, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, considers all such legislation carefully with advice from the Attorney-General of Gibraltar and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and other Government Departments as appropriate. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has the power to disallow any legislation to which the governor has given his assent. I am not aware that there are any laws in Gibraltar which conflict with decisions of the European Court.

HEALTH

Medway District Health Authority

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing comparable expenditure by the Medway district health authority on a year by year basis from 1975 to the current year.

Mr. Dorrell: Following is information derived from the annual accounts of the Medway health authority since its establishment on 1 April 1982.

Medway health authority—total revenue expenditure on hospital and community health services (HCHS)

	£000 (cash)	£000 (at 1991-92 prices)
1982-83	36,447	60,634
1983-84	39,775	63,248
1984-85	43,134	65,273
1985-86	45,252	64,939
1986-87	49,751	69,035
1987-88	53,776	70,763
1988-89	61,073	74,898
1989-90	66,983	77,227
1990-91[1]	75,357	80,632

[1]Provisional figure (as yet subject to audit).

Notes:

1. HCHS covers all services directly managed by the authority including hospital, community health, patient transport (i.e. ambulance) and other services.
2. The figures have been expressed at current (i.e. 1991-92) prices by the use of Gross Domestic Product deflators.
3. Prior to 1 April 1982 the authority's predecessor health district formed a part of a larger area health authority and in such cases figures on a district basis were not collected centrally.

Nebulisers

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to provide nebulisers free of charge except for prescription costs where they are prescribed by a medical practitioner.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Certain hand-held nebulisers may be prescribed by general practitioners under the drug tariff. Nebulisers may be provided free as part of the NHS treatment if prescribed by a hospital consultant in accordance with locally agreed policy.

Juvenile Macular Degeneration

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the latest available figures showing the total number of recorded cases of juvenile macular degeneration in England.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The causes of blindness and partial sight in children registered as blind or partially sighted with their local authorities between April 1987 and March 1990 were published in May 1991 in statistical bulletin 3(5)91, a copy of which is available in the Library. Juvenile macular degeneration is not separately identified.

Home Help Service

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the advice to local authorities in Department of Health and Social Security circular 53/71 concerning the disregard of attendance allowance when setting charges for the home help service is still his Department's policy.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The legislation on which this circular was based was replaced by section 17 of the Health and Social Services and Social Security Adjudications Act 1983. We propose to issue guidance to authorities about their discretionary powers under this section.

Hospitals, London

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will name the major hospital capital projects in Greater London, listing the date of ministerial approval, the cost in the initial announcement and the present estimate.

Mr. Dorrell: Major health building projects in Greater London which have ministerial approval are as follows:

	Date of approval	[1]Current estimate £ million
Westminster and Chelsea	December 1988	242
Goodmayes District General Hospital	December 1985	66
Guy's phase 3	August 1989	106
Great Ormond Street Redevelopment (Main Building)	July 1986	50
Regional Neurosciences Centre, Denmark Hill	April 1989	51

[1] The current estimated outturn costs include VAT, fees, equipment, local factors and inflation. These costs may be funded in part from sources other than capital allocation—for example, university grants, appeal funds, trustees.

No estimate of outturn cost was published for any of these projects at the time ministerial approval was announced.

Patients Charter

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost was of printing and distributing the patients charter for each of the district health authorities in Yorkshire.

Mr. Dorrell: The total cost of producing and distributing the patients charter and the summary of the charter was £1·6 million. It is not possible to break down these costs in the way the hon. Member requests.

Secure Accommodation

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all the establishments in England and Wales currently providing secure accommodation for young people and against each to show (a) the number of secure places, (b) the percentage of secure places within the overall number of places in that establishment and (c) the weekly cost of a secure place in that establishment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) on 14 June at columns 686-88. Information about the overall number of places in each such establishment, and weekly costs of secure places, is not collected centrally.

Information about secure accommodation in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which Government Departments will provide grants and what percentage of (a) capital costs and (b) revenue costs each will contribute for the two new secure units due to open soon.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Grants to local authorities for the provision of secure accommodation are made available by the Department under powers in section 82(2) of the Children Act 1989. Such grants are limited to the capital costs of the project, associated professional fees, and a contribution towards commissioning costs. Revenue costs are a matter for the providing local authority. A 100 per cent. grant has been made available to meet the capital costs, and associated fees, of each of the two new secure units in Birmingham and Humberside. In addition, a grant has been provided to Humberside to meet 50 per cent. of the capital cost of providing a gymnasium, which will be shared with the open part of the home.

Smoking

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will meet the chairman of the Northern regional health authority to discuss progress towards meeting anti-smoking targets in Northumberland.

Mr. Dorrell: We regularly meet the chairmen of all the regional health authorities to discuss a wide variety of topics.

Health promotion is a major objective of the Northern regional health authority, as can be seen from the 1990 report by the regional director of public health, a copy of which will be placed in the Library. In its business plan for 1992-93 Northumberland health authority includes an initiative aimed at preventing the incidence of smoking in the children. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Mr. Richard Harbottle, chairman of the Northumberland health authority, for details.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he proposes to take to reduce the cost of smoking-related diseases to the national health service in the light of the evidence on cost to the national health service published in the Health Education Authority's report "The Smoking Epidemic";

(2) what is the estimated current cost of smoking-related diseases to the national health service each year;

(3) what assessment he has made of the evidence published in the Health Education Authority's report "The Smoking Epidemic" on the number of deaths a year caused by smoking, and what steps he proposes to take to reduce this toll of smoking-related death and disease.

Mr. Dorrell: We have studied the methodology of the Health Education Authority and concluded that its estimates are the best which are currently available. The costs to the national health service are estimated to be £437 million annually. This figure is for hospital costs only and does not include the costs of the care given by general practitioners or at health clinics or other care in the community.

The Government are currently considering the representations offered in response to the Green Paper "The Health of the Nation", which identified smoking as a key issue. It proposed targets for reducing the proportion of smokers to 22 per cent. in men and 21 per cent. in women by the year 2000. These targets were widely welcomed.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he proposes to take to reduce the number of 11 to 15-year-olds who smoke regularly.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government have funded the Health Education Authority's teenage smoking programme which costs £2 million a year over five years. This is the second full year of the programme. The last budget increased the price of tobacco above the rate of inflation. Price increases are known to have a particularly large impact on children's consumption. The Children and Young Persons (Protection from Tobacco) Act 1991, which tightens up the law on sales to children, received Royal Assent in June, and will be implemented shortly. The new voluntary agreement on tobacco advertising, concluded and published on 9 September, contains a range of further measures designed to protect children.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of 11 to 15-year-olds smoke regularly.

Mr. Dorrell: "Smoking among secondary school children in 1990"—an inquiry carried out by the Social Survey Division of OPCS on behalf of the Health Departments, ISBN 0–11–691355–X, 1991—reported that 10 per cent. of 11 to 15-year-olds in England smoked regularly, defined as usually smoking one or more cigarettes a week. A copy of this report is available in the Library.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he proposes to take about the number of working days lost each year due to smoking-induced diseases.

Mr. Dorrell: The Health Education Authority is actively promoting health in the workplace. To date more than 500 employers have signed the Look After Your Heart charter, undertaking to promote health, including discouraging smoking in the workplace. This scheme covers nearly 4 million employees and has the backing of both the TUC and CBI. In addition, many employers, encouraged by the Health and Safety Executive, are developing and implementing smoking policies to suit their particular workplace. More generally, the Government are currently considering the representations offered in response to the Green Paper "The Health of the Nation", which identified smoking as a key issue.

Quest Cancer Test

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on which dates his Department received letters from Quest Cancer Test requesting a reassessment of its application for funding following publication of the new test's methodology and its underlying chemistry.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Quest Cancer Test wrote on 1 February this year enclosing a copy of an article setting out details of the methodology of the test.

CIVIL SERVICE

Director of Public Prosecutions

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many applications he has received to date for the post of Director of Public Prosecutions.

Mr. Renton: It is not the practice of the Civil Service Commissioners to give details of a competition while it is in progress. Any relevant information is published in their annual report.

NATIONAL FINANCE

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) assuming a 10 per cent. interest rate, what would be the yield of introducing national insurance contributions on unearned income at a rate of 9 per cent. for individuals below retirement age, with an exemption of £3,000 in Great Britain for the full year 1991-92;

(2) assuming a 10 per cent. interest rate, what would be the yield of introducing national insurance contributions on unearned income at a rate of 9 per cent. for individuals below retirement age, with an exemption of £3,000 in Northern Ireland for the full year 1991-92.

Mr. Maude: The effect on revenue of a change in the average interest rate would depend on the resulting changes on other components of the income base. An analysis of these effects would require a full macro-economic simulation and could be carried out only at disproportionate cost.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the 1991-92 full-year revenue gain if the inheritance tax seven-year rule were not in existence in (a) Great Britain and (b) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Maude: I regret that this information is not available.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost in a full year, in 1991-92, of an increase in the inheritance tax threshold from £140,000 to (a) £200,000, (b) £300,000 and (c) £500,000 in Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Maude: The estimated costs in a full year at 1991-92 levels of an increase in the inheritance tax threshold are:

Threshold	Revenue cost £ million
£200,000	400
£300,000	700
£500,000	950

Separate estimates are not available for Great Britain and for Northern Ireland.

Income Tax

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of taxpayers who have taxable incomes below (a) £3,500 a year, (b) £4,000 a year, (c) £4,500 a year, (d) £5,000 a year and (e) £5,500 a year, giving figures separately for individuals and married couples, in (i) Great Britain and (ii) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Maude: The latest available information on a regional basis relates to 1988-89. The available estimates are shown in the table. The numbers shown for Great Britain include members of Her Majesty's forces, the Merchant Navy, civil servants serving overseas and a small number of other taxpayers without an indentifiable region of residence.

Number of taxpayers (thousands)

Taxable income (£)	Great Britain		Northern Ireland
	Single people	Married couples	Single people	Married couples
Below 3,500	4,100	2,440	148	68
Below 4,000	4,590	2,800	[1]	[1]
Below 4,500	5,090	3,160	[1]	[1]
Below 5,000	5,540	3,530	[1]	[1]
Below 5,500	6,060	3,920	187	101

[1] The available sample of Northern Ireland residents is too small to support further subdivision of the numbers with taxable income below £5,500.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for each year since 1979 what is the number of people and percentage of all taxpayers in (i) Great Britain and (ii) Northern Ireland paying the top rate of income tax.

Mr. Maude: The table provides estimates of the number of taxpayers in the United Kingdom liable to income tax at a higher rate—that is, any rate above the basic rate. Prior to the introduction of independent taxation in 1990-91, married couples are counted as one unit. The available information does not enable the Northern Ireland component to be reliably distinguished for each of these years separately. However, for the years when Northern Ireland residents can be readily identified, 1980-81 to 1988-89, the number of higher rate taxpayers averaged about 20,000, about 4½ per cent. of taxpayers.

Taxpayers[1] liable at higher rate

1978-79	763	3·6
1979-80	674	3·1
1980-81	796	3·8
1981-82	1,090	5·2
1982-83	983	4·7
1983-84	860	4·2
1984-85	930	4·6
1985-86	950	4·7
1986-87	1,120	5·5
1987-88	1,190	5·7
1988-89	1,350	6·4
1989-90	1,500	7·0
1990-91[2]	1,660	6·5
1991-92[2]	1,620	6·5

[1] Single people and married couples for years up to and including 1989-90, individuals from 1990-91.
[2] Provisional estimates projected from the 1989-90 Survey of Personal Incomes.

Passenger Transport Executives

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what the capital gains tax yield was from passenger transport executives for each year since 1985;

(2) what was the corporation tax yield from passenger transport executives for each year since 1985.

Mr. Maude: I regret that providing the figures requested would be a breach of taxpayers' confidentiality.

Estate Values

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for the latest year for which information is available what was the number of estates valued at (a) over £140,000, (b) £200,000, (c) over £300,000 and (d) over £500,000 in (i) Great Britain and (ii) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Maude: The numbers of estates passing on death in 1991-92 for which grants of representation will be sought are estimated to be:

Net estate value	Number
over £140,000	35,000
over £200,000	20,000
over £300,000	9,500
over £500,000	3,500

Of the 35,000 estates over £140,000, it is estimated that about 22,000 will pay inheritance tax. Separate estimates are not available for Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he has given to the proposals set out by Her Majesty's Government's Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment regarding the use of the tax system to enhance the protection of the environment.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend will take the committee's proposals into account in framing his Budget next year.

VAT (Horses)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review the requirement that VAT is paid on the sale and purchase of horses; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The VAT rate for horses in the United Kingdom is 17·5 per cent. Under the normal VAT rules it is not possible to remove the requirement that VAT is paid on the sale and purchase of horses. Under both current EC law and the agreement reached by the Council of Ministers of 24 June, member states are not able to introduce new zero rates.

However, in an effort to achieve a fair competitive climate within the Community and to prevent the potential distortion of competition which could arise because of a disparity in VAT rates on horses between the United Kingdom, Ireland and France, the Government have authorised discussions between officials and industry representatives about the possible introduction in the United Kingdom of an agricultural flat rate scheme as provided in the sixth VAT directive. This scheme could put farmers/breeders of horses on a more level playing field with their competitors in other member states where such schemes operate and include the breeding and rearing of horses.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make representations to the European Community Council of Ministers for VAT not to be payable on the sale and purchase of horses; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Apart from our inability under EC law to introduce zero rates, the Government do not see any justification for zero-rating the sale and purchase of horses. Zero rates are intended to be exceptional and to meet a social need: this would not apply in the case of supplies of horses.

Civil Service Relocation

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil service jobs have now been moved out of London; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 2 December 1991]: Between March 1988 and June 1991 Government Departments, including executive agencies, reviewed the location of some 45,200—20 per cent.—of civil service posts in London and the south-east. As a result decisions have been taken to relocate or create 30,000 civil service jobs outside the south-east—around 80 per cent. of them to assisted and urban programme areas. Some 12,000 posts had already been moved since the beginning of 1988.

These posts are being located as follows:

Region	Posts
South West	5,090
West Midlands	2,150
East Midlands	4,520
North-West	5,710
Northern	2,700
Yorkshire and Humberside	3,870
East Anglia	130
Scotland	2,360
Wales	2,180
Northern Ireland	1,290
Total	30,000

Analysed by Department, the main moves away from London and the south-east are as follows:

Department	No. of Posts	Main destination
Inland Revenue	8,575	5,140 to Repayment offices; 1,600 to PAYE offices, both to various locations; 1,800 HQ posts to Nottingham.
Social Security	5,600	Including 2,500 to Child Support Agency offices in various locations and 650 Contributions Agency posts to Newcastle.
MOD	4,200	Various locations.
Home Office	2,085	Including 1,700 Prison service HQ posts to Derby.
Land Registry	1,900	Various locations
Customs and Excise	1,755	Liverpool and Manchester.
Employment Group	1,440	Including 615 to Runcorn and 635 to Sheffield.
DTI	1,200	Including 985 Patent Office posts to Newport.
Health	1,200	NHS Management Executive to Leeds.
MAFF	485	Including 395 to York.
Intervention Board	350	Newcastle.
OPCS	230	Southport.
Other Departments	980	Various locations.
Total	30,000

Decisions have been taken not to move 15,200 posts. The remainder—24,000—are still under review.

This rapid progress on relocation has been achieved under the relocation guidelines announced by the then Paymaster General on 31 March 1988, at columns 610-11. Under this approach, Departments and agencies are required to review the location of their work regularly and systematically with a view to finding sites offering better value for money and increased operating efficiency. These guidelines have recently been updated. They now cover for the first time non-departmental public bodies as well as Government Departments and agencies. I am placing a copy of the revised guidelines in the House of Commons Library.

Currency Transactions

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what fees or commissions are payable by the United Kingdom to the Deutsche Bundesbank when it buys the £ sterling at British request; and what arrangements exist for buying back the £ sterling.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 2 December 1991]: As members of the exchange rate mechanism, the United Kingdom and Germany have access to the very short-term facility—VSTF—of the European monetary system, under which credit is automatically available, in unlimited amounts to finance obligatory intervention against any other currency in the system. The VSTF can also be made available for non-obligatory intervention, but not automatically. VSTF credits have to be repaid within a period of about three months. Operations under the VSTF attract interest, but no commission or fees are paid. The resulting credits and debits are held in accounts with the European Monetary Co-operation Fund. The interest rates are a weighted average of the representative domestic money market rates in those countries whose currencies make up the ecu basket.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Water Extraction

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his considerations as to whether to take steps for further printing of his Department's leaflet, "Good Irrigation—Make Every Drop Count", with particular reference to water extraction by companies from streams and rivers.

Mr. Curry: Discussions with the National Rivers Authority and other interests indicate that the early warning system and the good irrigation practice leaflet, which apply only to abstraction for spray irrigation, have been well received in East Anglia. We are now considering further printing of the leaflet.

Consumers Committee for Great Britain

Mr. Turner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how often the Consumers Committee for Great Britain, set up under the Agricultural Marketing Act 1958, met in 1990 and 1991; when was its last meeting; and when it will next meet.

Mr. Curry: The committee met, concurrently with the Consumers Committee for England and Wales, seven times in 1990 and three times in 1991. The last meeting was on 11 September 1991: the next meeting is to be arranged early in the new year.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Biffen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the established and estimated amount of fraud in the application of the common agricultural policy for the latest available three years.

Mr. Curry: It is not possible to estimate the extent of fraud in the common agriculture policy since, by definition, undetected fraud cannot be measured. The following table gives details of the number of cases of EAGGF guarantee funded irregularity—the definition of which goes wider than fraud—which were reported by member states to the European Commission in the years 1988, 1989 and 1990.

	No. of cases	Value (£m)	Percentage of CAP expenditure
1988	386	103	0·53
1989	745	100	0·56
1990	819	98	0·49

Exmoor

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the precise area that will be included in the Exmoor environmentally sensitive area; and whether he is consulting interested bodies on these boundaries.

Mr. Curry: The precise area to be included will be decided after detailed local study and consultations.

BNFL Springfields Works

Mr. Carr: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that the population groups most at risk from the BNFL Springfields works are correctly identified; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: We review regularly our assessment of the population groups exposed to the highest radiation doses from BNFL's Springfields works. These assessments show that houseboat dwellers on the Ribble are subject to the highest dose. Anglers who use river banks near Preston incur a somewhat lower dose. The exposure time of children playing on river banks and beds is much less than these two groups and the dose over a year is accordingly smaller. Even for the houseboat dwellers, the maximum predicted dose under the terms of the new authorisation for Springfields will be less than one fifth of the internationally recognised limit and a small proportion of the dose to the public from natural background radioactivity.

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken to detect fraudulent applications for a five-year set-aside scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The administrative instructions on set-aside include procedures for checking at each stage of an application. In addition to the office checks, the aim is to carry out a field inspection at least once during the five-year commitment period. The Sunday Times on 1 December carried a report headed "Ministry is fooled by fictitious farm" which said that,

"the Ministry promised us annual payment of £248·64 or nearly £1,250 over five years".

The facts of the matter are as follows:

Dr. N. Rufford, who claimed to be engaged in agriculture and the owner of 1·2 hectares of agricultural land, applied for and was allocated an agricultural holding number. He was not the owner of the land and he gave a fictitious name for the alleged previous owner. The agricultural holding number does not confer any eligibility for payment of grant under the set-aside scheme.

On 6 September signed registration and application forms for the five-year set-aside scheme were received from Dr. Rufford. The application form had to be returned twice to Dr. Rufford before he answered the question confirming that he had been farming the greater part of the holding since 1 October 1990. The documents and associated map included what are clearly fictitious details of previous and current cropping. Dr. Rufford signed declarations that he had given correct answers. These were false.

Officials were suspicious of the application and decided that a physical inspection should be undertaken to verify the details. Dr. Rufford said that it was essential for him to accompany the inspector but could not find a convenient time. This was the position last Sunday when The Sunday Times article was published.

Dr. Rufford telephoned the Ministry's office at Ipswich on Wednesday 27 November claiming to be trying to arrange a date for the field inspection. He asked to be sent a copy of the approval document. He was told that an approval document had not been issued as his application had not been approved.

Later that afternoon, at a time that he had been told the officer dealing with his case would not be available, Dr. Rufford telephoned again. He claimed to have mislaid his acceptance letter. So that he could reconstruct his correspondence he asked a clerk to fax him a copy. An undated, unsigned draft letter on plain paper was faxed to him. That letter was reproduced in The Sunday Times report under a faked Ministry letterhead.

The Sunday Times story was, therefore, fabricated. The application from Dr. Rufford was not approved. The inspection of the land would have revealed that the application was fraudulent. Dr. Rufford gave false information on the ownership and cropping of the land. He obtained a draft letter by deceiving a junior officer. The Sunday Times then published that letter with a faked letterhead.

I want to commend the staff concerned who were put under pressure by the journalist and responded in a careful and sensible way. There was never any question of the false application being approved or a payment authorised.

I have written to the editor of The Sunday Times asking him to publish this reply in full together with a retraction of this misleading and inaccurate report.

SCOTLAND

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the capital expenditure on further education in cash and constant prices in every year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Capital expenditure by local authorities on further education is as follows:

Year	Cash Prices £ million	Constant Prices £ million
1978-79	3·189	8·085
1979-80	5·328	11·577

1981-82	3·879	6·495
1982-83	5·781	9·037
1983-84	7·415	11·078
1984-85	5·709	8·122
1985-86	4·417	5·955
1986-87	4·372	5·707
1987-88	9·738	12·057
1988-89	11·124	12·850
1989-90	10·793	11·708
1990-91	7·015	7·015

Squirrels

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when was the most recent survey and map of the presence of red and grey squirrels carried out by the Forestry Commission on its land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Forestry Commission carries out an annual survey of the distribution of squirrels and associated aspects. A copy of the most recent survey report, for 1990, which includes maps recording the presence of red and grey squirrels, has been placed in the Library.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce a citizens charter of environmental rights.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to do so, but is reviewing all his responsibilities to assess whether there might be areas where further charters might be appropriate.

Live Television Feed

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the locations of the television sets in his Department which can receive the live television feed from the Chamber and the total cost to his Department of this service.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 3 December 1991]: Dover house, Whitehall is the only Scottish Office building which receives the live television feed. The total annual cost is £13,421·65 including VAT.

Motorway Statistics

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many miles of motorway are currently (a) open, (b) under construction and (c) planned in Scotland either (i) as completely new motorway or (ii) as existing motorway being widened; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 December 1991]: In Scotland, 153 miles of trunk road motorway are currently open to traffic; nine miles are presently under construction and 67 miles of new motorway are planned. There are no motorway widening proposals in our trunk road programme at present.

Legal Aid

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration was given to the question of legal aid in the preparation of the justice charter for Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 December 1991]: The Government are currently undertaking a comprehensive review of eligibility for legal aid and for this reason no specific reference was made to legal aid in either the citizens charter or the justice charter for Scotland. The Scottish Legal Aid Board, which administers legal aid, will be expected to meet the standards of service set out in the citizens charter.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes there have been to the entitlement to legal aid since 1979; and what effect these have had on the number or proportion of persons able to claim legal aid.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 December 1991]: Financial eligibility limits for entitlement to legal aid are regularly uprated to ensure that those most in need continue to receive free legal aid. Determination of applications for legal aid is subject to a number of criteria, including financial eligibility, and it is not possible accurately to estimate the numbers within the population who are likely to be eligible at any particular time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many statutory instruments or regulations were debated on the floor of the House or in a Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments in each year from 1980, and in the current year to the most recent practicable date; and what percentage this represented out of the total affirmative and negative instruments considered by the Joint Committee on Statutory Instruments and the Select Committee on Statutory Instruments.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 26 November 1991]: The figures for each Session from 1979-80 to 1990-91 are as follows:

A Session	B	C	D	E
1979-80	131	126	1,330	19·3
1980-81	62	109	923	18·6

E. B and C as a percentage of D.

ENVIRONMENT

Broadwater Farm Estate

14. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to visit the Broadwater Farm housing estate to discuss housing renovations.

Sir George Young: I have accepted an invitation from the Broadwater Farm Council of Community Organisations to visit the estate.

Housing Improvements (North-east)

19. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance his Department is giving to improve housing in Stockton-on-Tees and Middlesbrough.

Sir George Young: In the past five years my Department has provided housing assistance of £37 million to Stockton-on-Tees and £45 million to Middlesbrough through funding from the housing investment programme, estate action, the urban programme and the Housing Corporation.

In addition, Middlesbrough was successful this year in the competition for city challenge funds. This will provide a further £35 million for the authority in the next five years, a substantial proportion of which will be spent on housing-related projects.

Stockton, although not successful this year, will be invited to bid in the city challenge competition for 1992-93.

Council Tax

20. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the projected costs of the collection of the council tax.

Mr. Portillo: English local authorities budgeted to spend almost £500 million on community charge collection this year. I would expect the council tax to cost no more than half as much to collect.

30. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the implementation by local authorities of the council tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Many of the 800 representations we received in response to the consultation paper "A New Tax for Local Government" refer to the implementation of the council tax. My Department is discussing detailed implementation issues with the local authority associations.

Local Government Finance

21. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to revise the present arrangements for capping local authorities' expenditure.

Mr. Portillo: The provisional capping criteria which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 26 November represent our firm intentions for 1992-93, but before taking our capping decisions we shall take account of all appropriate considerations.

Non-metropolitan District Councils (Housing)

22. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he has now introduced to assist non-metropolitan district councils to fulfil their role as the facilitators of housing.

Mr. Heseltine: Local authorities should assess housing needs in their areas and work with housing associations and the private sector in their role as enablers to help ensure that those needs are met. They have powers, subject to the consent of the Secretary of State, to sell land below market value to provide low-cost housing for sale (including shared ownership sale) and for rent, commonly in return for nomination rights. They may also give grants to private landlords and they may sponsor housing association schemes which then receive grant from the Housing Corporation. We have also encouraged them to use their planning powers to encourage developers to include a proportion of low-cost housing in new developments.

Wild Birds

23. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the work of English Nature in respect of wild bird habitat.

Mr. Baldry: English Nature continue to make satisfactory progress in the conservation of wild bird habitat primarily through the notification of SSSIs and, where appropriate, through their subsequent management.

Housing Estates

24. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on Government policy towards outer-city housing estates.

Mr. Yeo: In common with other housing estates, those in outer city areas can benefit from the increased emphasis on performance and proposals in the allocation of housing investment programme resources and the major programmes we now have in place under estate action, housing action trusts and city challenge.

Carlisle Council Housing

25. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses were built by Carlisle city council in the financial year 1990-91.

Mr. Yeo: None. The building of new social housing is now mainly the responsibility of housing associations, and the role of the local authority should be to assess the housing needs of the area and work with housing associations and the private sector to ensure that these needs are met. Carlisle city council is well aware of its enabling role and has secured an increase in Housing Corporation funding for housing association schemes over the next three years.

Green Belt

26. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many acres within the former Greater London council area are designated as green belt; what was the figure in May 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The Metropolitan green belt has grown from just over 750,000 acres in 1979 to 1·2 million acres now. Figures for the former GLC area would need to be obtained from the individual local authorities.

Local Authorities (Privatisations)

27. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 10 local authorities who have made the greatest savings through privatisation of services over the last 10 years; and the bottom 10.

Mr. Key: My Department does not collect this information.

Water Regulation

28. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the regulatory regime for the water industry in delivering quality of service in the long term.

Mr. Baldry: Quality of service is a central concern of the Director General of Water Services, and the Competition and Service (Utilities) Bill will lead to a further strengthening of his powers.

The National Rivers Authority and the drinking water inspectorate are dealing effectively with, respectively, environmental quality and the quality of drinking water.

County Hall, London

29. Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the London residuary body to discuss county hall.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to meet Sir Godfrey Taylor. Ministers meet Sir Godfrey to discuss London residuary body business as and when the need arises.

Planning and Compensation Act 1991

31. Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans there are to implement the enforcement procedures contained in the Planning and Compensation Act 1991.

35. Sir George Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken to implement the enforcement provisions contained in the Planning and Compensation Act 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for South Hams (Mr. Steen).

Poll Tax

32. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the level of poll tax payments outstanding since its introduction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Up to 30 September 1991 local authorities in England had collected £9·7 billion in community charges for the financial year 1990-91 leaving £500 million of the income they budgeted to receive for 1990-91 yet to be collected. An additional £400 million of community charges bills have been issued against which authorities had already made provision for non-payment.

36. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to abolish the poll tax 20 per cent. contribution rule for 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: I do not propose to make any change in the existing basis of liability or the benefit arrangements for the remaining period of the community charge.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will call for a report from each local authority as to the position on 31 March 1991 and 30 September 1991, as to how many liability orders for poll tax recovery have been passed to bailiffs; of these, how many liability orders were enforced by (a) payment agreements and (b) distraints exercised; and of these how many bailiff visits were unsuccessful because the poll tax non-payer had moved away.

Mr. Key: No.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will call for a report from each local authority, as at 31 March 1991 and 30 September 1991, as to how many attachment-of-earnings orders are in place to recover poll tax arrears.

Mr. Key: No.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will call for a report from each local authority to show how many summonses for poll tax non-payment for 1990-91 were issued at 31 March 1991 and 30 September 1991, and of those between 31 March 1991 and 30 September 1991, how many were also for 1991-92 non-payment.

Mr. Key: No. The Home Office collects statistics by individual magistrates court which are not analagous to local authority areas. These show that in 1990-91 the courts issued over 4·7 million summonses to authorities and so far in 1991-92 nearly 3·3 million have been issued. However, these figures relate to the date on which the summonses were granted and not to the year of the charge.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will call for a report from local authorities to show, at 31 March 1991 and 30 September 1991, what percentage of information requests sent to poll tax non-payers served with a liability order were returned.

Mr. Key: No.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines he issues for the use by local authorities of bailiffs for poll tax enforcement.

Mr. Key: My Department issued a practice note to all charging authorities advising them to check the reputation, qualifications and expertise of private firms of bailiffs and to issue guidelines to them on procedures. The Institute of Revenues, Rating and Valuation have incorporated and expanded this advice in a revised practice note.

River Quality

33. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on river water quality.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams) earlier today.

Urban Protection

34. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to strengthen the powers available to local authorities and civic bodies in protecting the character and environment of urban areas.

Mr. Portillo: The Government have given local authorities substantially enhanced powers to protect the character and environment of their urban areas and do not see any need at the moment to add to those powers.

Incinerators

37. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce the date of the publication of the report of the public inquiry into the application to build two incinerators in Tyne and Tees areas.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend expects to receive the inspector's report on the three linked incinerator inquiries on Tyneside and Teesside before Christmas. The reports will be published, along with his decision on the applications, as soon as it is practicable to do so.

Homelessness

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans the Government have to assist homeless people in cities other than London over the Christmas holiday period.

Mr. Yeo: In 1991-92, the Government are providing just under £6 million in grants to voluntary organisations throughout the United Kingdom for practical projects to prevent and relieve homelessness. The concentrations of rough sleepers in individual local authority areas throughout the United Kingdom are comparatively small and in the event of severe weather this winter, I would expect individual local authorities to make emergency provision for people sleeping out in their areas.

EC (Visits)

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for himself, and for each of the Ministers at his Department, details of (a) the number of visits made in the past month to destinations outside the United Kingdom but within the European Community on official business related to the European Community, (b) the number of visits made to Brussels within the past month on official business related to the European Community and (c) the number of nights spent over the past month away from the United Kingdom on official European Community business.

Mr. Heseltine: For the month ending 24 November the information is as follows:

(i) 51 visits
(ii) 40 visits
(iii) 77 nights.

London Residuary Body

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the level of capital receipts enjoyed by the London residuary body since its inception.

Mr. Key: Since its inception LRB has distributed more than £520 million in capital receipts among the London boroughs.

Global Warming

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of the advertisement which appeared in The Sunday Times entitled "Global Warming —We Have Been Warned", on 10 November; in how many other newspapers it appeared; and what was the cost in each case.

Mr. Heseltine: All advertising rates obtained are commercial in confidence. The advertisement entitled "Global Warming—We Have Been Warned" appeared in The Times, The Guardian, The Independent, The Daily Telegraph, The Observer, The Independent on Sunday as well as The Sunday Times.

School Cleaning

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the standard of cleaning in schools since the contracting out of school cleaning services.

Mr. Key: The Department does not collect information on the standard of cleaning in schools following competition for cleaning work. The Local Government Act 1988 requires local authorities to prepare a detailed specification setting out the standards required, and further requires the in-house direct service organisation to comply with this specification in carrying out the work; a private contractor would be similarly so obliged under the terms of his contract with the authority. Under the Education Reform Act 1988, schools with delegated budgets may determine the standard of cleaning they require and their wishes must be reflected in the specification. Research commissioned by the Department from the Institute of Local Government Studies at the university of Birmingham indicates that one effect of competition has been that authorities have paid greater attention to the clear definition of service standards.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the responses he received to his consultation paper "A New Tax for Local Government", were in favour of retaining the uniform business rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Although the consultation paper included no proposals for changes to the uniform business rate, we received representations from eight local authorities, and a number of other organisations and individuals, in favour of its retention.

Copies of all responses were placed in the Library on 14 October.

Air Pollution

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what meetings he, departmental Ministers or officials have had with representatives of (a) the foundries industry, (b) paintmakers (c) chipboard manufacturers and (d) the castings industry in regard to difficulties posed by the air pollution requirements imposed under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990; and what matters have (i) been resolved and (ii) remain to be resolved.

Mr. Baldry: Officials met representatives of the industries listed in working parties convened to assist the preparation of guidance notes on BATNEEC (best available techniques not entailing excessive cost) standards to be met by industrial operators becoming subject to local authority air pollution control under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The number of meetings were as follows:

foundries and castings industry—6 meetings on note no. PG2/4 chipboard manufactuers—10 meetings on noe no. PG6/4 paintmakers—10 meetings on note no. PG6/10 plus 30 meetings on other paint-related guidance notes. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met representatives of the Paintmakers Association in May.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has already published process guidance on iron, steel and non-ferrous metal foundry processes (PG2/4) and on processes for the manufacture of particleboard and fibreboard (PG6/4). The remaining guidance on coating manufacture and sectors using coatings will be published early next year in advance of these processes coming into the new controls from 1 April 1992. Trade associations, together with a wide range of other bodies, have been given the opportunity to comment on the final drafts of guidance notes and these comments are considered when the guidance is finalised for publication.

Environmental Assessment

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has obtained for his departmental library a copy of the recent report, "Environmental Assessment: Experience to Date" produced by the Institute of Environmental Assessment.

Mr. Yeo: I have arranged for a copy of the papers for the conference on advances in environmental assessment held at the Royal Lancaster hotel, London, from 28 to 29 October 1991—in which this article by Dr. Tim Coles appeared—to be placed in my Department's library.

British Nuclear Fuels

Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make it his policy to require BNFL to publish its criteria for assessing best available technology not entailing excessive cost; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what criteria are used to assess best available techniques not entailing excessive cost with reference to the BNFL Springfields works; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: BATNEEC relates to a requirement placed upon operators of processes that fall under the regulation of part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. Regulation of nuclear site operators falls under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 which requires operators to use the best practicable means (BPM) to reduce radioactive discharges. An explanation of BPM and how it applies to discharges from BNFL's Springfield works is set out in an explanatory memorandum from the recent public consultation exercise concerning proposals to revise Springfield's liquid discharge authorisation. I have arranged for a copy of this document to be placed in the Library of the House. Information on BPM in BNFL's application for revision of the Springfield's liquid authorisation was classified commercially sensitive, and as such cannot be published under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, as amended by part V of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Heveningham Hall

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his policy towards Heveningham hall.

Mr. Heseltine: My concern is to ensure that this outstanding house is fully restored and properly cared for. I will announce my decision on pre-emption very shortly.

Flood Damage (Calderdale)

Mr. Donald Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will be making payments of grant to Calderdale metropolitan borough council to compensate it for emergency work undertaken in the light of flood damage on 19 and 20 May 1989.

Mr. Key: Yes. In the light of information provided by the council in December 1990, my right hon. Friend is satisfied that special financial assistance would be justified in the case. Accordingly the Secretary of State has decided, with the consent of the Treasury, to establish a scheme of assistance under section 155 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 in respect of expenditure relating to damage caused by flash floods in Calderdale in 1989. Grants will be paid to reimburse local authorities in the area of the Metropolitan borough of Calderdale for 75 per cent. of eligible costs above a threshold.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the progress towards implementing his policy of privatising Property Services Agency projects; which consultants are handling the negotiations; how many specific bids have been obtained; when they will be evaluated; and when he expects the matter to be concluded.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 3 December 1991]: Preparations for the sale of Property Services Agency projects are continuing following the decision, announced in July, to offer the business for sale as early as possible next year, subject to progress and market sentiment. The sale process itself including evaluation of bids could take some six months. My financial advisers are Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte. Bids have not yet been invited.

Live Television Feed

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the locations of the television sets in his Department which can receive the live television feed from the Chamber, and the total cost to his Department of this service.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 3 December 1991]: My Department has 12 television sets equipped to receive the live television feed from the Chamber, all of which are located within 2 Marsham street, London SW1P 3EB. The total cost to date of this service is £13,795·67.

Environmental Protection Regulations

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer of 27 November, Official Report, column 503, precisely where in the Environmental Protection (Prescribed Processes and Substances) Regulations 1991 the specific terms "same location" and "same person", appearing, respectively, in lines one and two of paragraph 2 of schedule 2 thereof, are unambiguously defined; and what is the Minister's intended meaning of those specific phrases.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 3 December 1991]: These terms are not defined specifically in the regulations but have the normal meaning attributed to them. Their exact definition is a matter for interpretation by the courts.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

House of Fraser

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to fulfil the undertaking given by his predecessor to the Select Committee on Trade and Industry to report to the House on how all the regulations concerned with the takeover of the House of Fraser have carried out their duties.

Mr. Redwood: When further relevant information is provided by regulators.

Disabled Staff

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many disabled people are currently employed in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The Department employs 184 people who are known to be disabled. This figure includes both registered and unregistered disabled officers.

The Department has taken steps to try to increase the number of disabled recruits and aims to ensure that disabled staff receive equal treatment. It fully accepts the responsibilities laid down by the civil service code of practice on the employment of disabled people.

EC Funds

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he envisages a conclusion to the discussions with the European Commission on additionality in order to allow the unfreezing of EC regional development funds to the United Kingdom, in particular RECHAR and RENAVAL.

Mr. Leigh: I hope that the Commission will release the RECHAR grants, applied for in July 1990, without further delay. RENAVAL grants are not being affected by these discussions.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many visits have been carried out by Ministers of his Department to factories and businesses involved in the manufacturing sector during each of the last five years.

Mr. Lilley: Ministers of this Department have extensive contacts with the manufacturing sector, including frequent visits to companies. However, a record of the number of such visits is not kept.

RENAVAL Programme

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the implementation in the United Kingdom to date of the EC's RENAVAL programme.

Mr. Leigh: Programmes of RENAVAL grants are currently in operation in Tyne and Wear—which has received over £23 million of European regional development fund grant—Plymouth—over £11 million—and Middlesbrough and Langbaurgh—over £4 million. Programmes for Strathclyde, Fife, and the districts of Wirral and Sefton on Merseyside have been applied for and are expected to be approved by the Commission to start soon.

Telephone Service (Premium Rate)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce further measures to prevent abuses of telephone premium rate services involving the offering of bogus prizes to lure telephone users into using the service.

Mr. Leigh: The independent committee for the supervision of standards of telephone information services —ICSTIS—the body responsible for regulating premium rate telephone services, is in the process of amending and strengthening the code of practice regulating premium rate services. The new code, which ICSTIS expects to have in place next month, contains further provisions specifically regulating competitions and similar services.

Telephone Statistics

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the percentage of households with telephones installed in (a) the constituency of Neath, (b) the constituency of Wokingham and (c) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 3 December 1991]: There is no information available on the percentage of households with the telephones installed for individual parliamentary constituencies. Around 88 per cent. of households in Great Britain had a telephone in 1990, compared to 72 per cent. in 1980.

DHL and Federal Express

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what discussions have taken place with DHL and Federal Express about the privatisation of the post and parcel service;

(2) what discussions have taken place with DHL and Federal Express on breaking the Post Office's letter monopoly.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 3 December 1991]: None.

Telecommunications

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the technological innovations developed by the United Kingdom telecommunications industry since 1984.

Mr. Redwood: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 3 December, Official Report, columns 97-98.

The following is a list of some of the areas where there have been innovations by United Kingdom industry in products and services since the privatisation of British Telecom:

Multi-function telephones
Cellular and wireless telephony
Integrated Services Digital Network (ISDN)
Packet switching
Slow-scan video
Wide area radiopaging
Electronic funds transfer at point of sale (EFTPOS)
Video-conferencing
Payphones on aircraft and trains
Electronic mail
Voice messaging
Centrex services

DEFENCE

Bowman Combat Net Radio

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the Bowman combat net radio programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: Project Bowman will provide the new combat radio system for the armed services to replace the current CLANSMAN family of radios. Bowman will link with computerised command and control systems and the Ptarmigan trunk communication network to provide a flexible battlefield communications system stretching from individual soldier to senior commander.

An invitation to tender for the competitive project Definition phase was issued on 31 October. Bowman is a major opportunity for the defence electronics industry and could be worth in excess of £1 billion.

NATO

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what implications there are for the structure of British forces as a result of the Rome declaration of the NATO countries.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The future structure of our armed forces was developed in the light of the work in NATO on new force structures. It is in line with the new strategic concept agreed in Rome last month and with the declaration issued following that meeting. Our plans are outlined in the 1991 Statement on the Defence Estimates and in the subsequent paper, "Britain's Army for the 90s".

Hercules II

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the acquisition by the RAF of the Hercules II aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is our intention to procure off-the-shelf replacement aircraft for the RAF transport fleet around the turn of the century. The Hercules II aircraft would be a possible contender in the competition.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Tottenham Three

Mr. Corbyn To ask the Attorney-General if he will state the cost to the Law Officers of prosecution and subsequent appeals of Winston Silcott, Mark Braithwaite and Engin Raghip.

The Attorney-General: The prosecuting authorities have incurred costs in connection with this case from the institution of proceedings in 1985. For that reason, information concerning the total costs of the prosecution is not readily available and will take some time to collate. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as the information is to hand.

ENVIRONMENT

Government Offices (Refurbishment)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what work of restoration and refurbishment is being done for Government offices in London; and if he will specify the sites and current proposed purposes.

Mr. Yeo: The property holdings directorate of the Department of the Environment is responsible for expenditure in central London on restoration and refurbishment currently being carried out in the following Government offices housed in listed buildings:—

1. Government offices Great George street SW1
Refurbishment of a section of the basement offices to permit more efficient use.
2. Government offices Great George street SW1
Refurbishment of a second section of the basement to bring into use vacant space to permit the surrender of leased property.
3. Old Admiralty building SW1
Programme of major internal and external works to restore a grade 1 listed building.
4. Somerset house WC2
Renewal of east wing roof to maintain the integrity of a grade 1 listed building.
5. 70-72 Whitehall SW1
External stone cleaning and redecoration to restore the exterior of a grade 1 listed building.

Expenditure on other projects involving restoration or refurbishment is the responsibility of the Department which occupies, or intends to occupy, the listed building.

English Heritage

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek an early meeting with the chairman of English Heritage to discuss the reasons it decided to replace the roof of 6-7 Grosvenor place with material imported from the United States rather than traditional Lakeland slate which is already in use.

Mr. Yeo: It would not be appropriate for my right hon. Friend to discuss this case with English Heritage given the possibility of a subsequent appeal against refusal of listed building consent. The Government's general policy is that alterations to listed buildings should be in character with the building, and that care should be taken to use appropriate materials, but choice of materials is a matter for the owners of a building, having regard to expert advice and to the terms of any listed building consent. I understand that no decision has yet been made in this case.

Developments (EC Directive)

Mr. Benton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action is being taken by Her Majesty's Government to implement EC directive 85/337 in situations where developments which do not require planning permission bring serious problems of dust, noise and traffic.

Mr. Yeo: I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Red Squirrels

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology to publish the atlas of red squirrel distribution in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I understand that the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology expects to publish its mammal atlas in late spring or early summer next year.

Disabled Staff

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many disabled people are currently employed in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: The Department employs 73 staff who are known to be registered disabled and a further 58 who are known to have a disability without being registered. This is some 2 per cent. of the total non-industrial work force.

Broadmead Estate, Redbridge

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is in a position to announce the result of Redbridge borough council's application for estate action support for the Broadmead estate.

Mr. Yeo: I am please to announce that I have today appproved this estate action scheme.

Wild Birds

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will raise the subject of the trade in caught wild birds at the EC Environment Council on 9 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 1 November 1991, Official Report, column 391. The EC Environment Council meeting has now been deferred until 12 and 13 December.

Hanover Square, Bradford

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what public financial assistance has been made available to date, for the restoration of Hanover square in Bradford; to whom assistance has been paid; and what assistance remains outstanding.

Mr. Yeo: In each of the three financial years 1983-84 to 1985-86 £28,000 was provided from Urban Programme funds for management of the project. In 1988-89 the Department provided the city of Bradford metropolitan council through the urban programme with a contribution of £9,000 towards the purchase and conversion of two of the Hanover Square properties for non-housing purposes. In 1989-90, £80,000, was provided towards the costs of a feasibility study for phase 1 of the restoration scheme; in 1990-91 a further £70,000 was provided for phase 2. In 1991-92 £120,000 was provided for environmental improvements to the square itself. English Heritage has provided grants of £365,000, including £2,000 for a feasibility study, to the British Historic Buildings Trust and £51,000 to various developers and private individuals. No grant offers remain to be paid.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much public financial assistance has been paid, in each of the last three years, to the British Historic Buildings Trust; and how much public financial assistance has been paid to the trust, to the latest available date, related to the restoration of Hanover square in Bradford.

Mr. Yeo: Total English Heritage Grants paid to the British Historic Buildings Trust over the past three financial years are:

1989-90	41,356
1990-91	346,529
1991-92	302,394
of which, for Hanover square:
1989-90	0
1990-91	218,000

Of the total of £365,000, £363,000 was for restoration works and £2,000 for a feasibility study.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange for an independent valuation of properties for sale in Hanover square, Bradford, which have received public financial assistance for renovation, including those being offered to former owners; and if he will arrange for an independent audit of the expenditure incurred, to date, on the restoration of houses in Hanover square.

Mr. Yeo: It would not be appropriate for my Department to intervene in the valuation of the properties being offered for sale in Hanover square, Bradford. It is open to the prospective purchasers to arrange for an independent valuation of the property they seek to purchase. Indeed, it is advice regularly given to prospective purchasers. Those public bodies that have provided financial support for the restoration of properties in Hanover square are subject to regular audit as is the charitable British Historic Buildings Trust. It is for these bodies to ensure that good value for money is achieved for the funds expended.

Parish Councils

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to give extra powers and resources to parish councils.

Mr. Key: We are considering the role of parish councils in the light of responses to our consultation paper "The Structure of Local Government in England".

Greater Manchester Councils (Capital Receipts)

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the capital receipts currently held by each district authority in Greater Manchester; and what are the amounts for which re-use is disallowed.

Mr. Key: The table shows the total capital receipts held by each district authority in Greater Manchester at 31 March 1991, together with the amount of those receipts which have been reserved for debt redemption.

	Total receipts held at 31 March 1991	Reserved receipts held at 31 March 1991

Government Grants

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the total level of Government grant per head of adult population for 1992-93 for (a) Bradford, (b) Craven and (c) Harrogate.

Mr. Key: Under my right hon. Friend's proposals the total of revenue support grant and, in Bradford's case, area protection grant per head of adult population will be as follows:

Bradford	736
Craven	300
Harrogate	295

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make available financial assistance to complete the restoration of Hanover square in Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The restoration of the properties in Hanover square has attracted financial support primarily from English Heritage and the City of Bradford metropolitan council. It is for those bodies to consider whether further support would be necessary or justified. My Department has not directly funded the scheme and it would be inappropriate for it to do so.

Housing Associations

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the performance of the housing associations active in rural areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: None.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue guidance to local planning authorities about renewable energy; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: A draft planning guidance note, with an accompanying draft annex on wind energy, is being issued for public consultation today. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The draft guidance describes the different forms of renewable energy and explains the part they might play in tackling greenhouse gas emissions; explains Government policy on renewable energy installations, including the non-fossil fuel obligation; outlines the relevant environmental protection legislation; shows how local planning authorities can include renewable energy policies in development plans and advises them to consider what contribution their area may make; sets out the considerations which should apply when renewable energy installations are proposed in designated areas; explains when environmental assessment may be required; and notes the environmental implications of such installations.

The draft annex gives authorities detailed information about the technology of wind energy and its planning implications. Information is also given on how to assess the environmental aspects of wind powered developments. Further annexes on other forms of renewable energy are in preparation and will be issued in due course.

This new draft guidance demonstrates the Government's commitment to renewable energy and to tackling global warming, whilst continuing to recognise the fundamental importance of its policies to protect the landscape and wildlife.

Poll Tax

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average collection level of the poll tax at 30 September 1990, at 31 March 1991 and at 30 September 1991 for (a) shire districts, (b) metropolitan authorities, (c) outer-London boroughs, (d) inner-London boroughs, (i) excluding and (ii) including the provision in local authority budgets for non-collection; and what poll tax income was (1) collected and (2) uncollected at 30 September 1990, 31 March 1991 and 30 September 1991.

Mr. Key [holding answer 4 December 1991]: The available information is as follows:

	by 30 September 1990 Percentage	by 31 March 1991 Percentage	by 30 September 1991 Percentage

ENERGY

Energy Labelling Scheme

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of fridge-freezer, fridge and freezer models have so far been rated under the Energy Efficiency Office energy labelling scheme; whether all major manufacturers are co-operating with the scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: All the major retailers, manufacturers and importers of refrigerators and freezers have been given details of the rating method which enables all models to be rated. The rating is obtained from the standard energy consumption information by a simple calculation explained in a technical leaflet which is freely available from my Energy Efficiency Office. A copy of the technical leaflet and the explanatory customer leaflet is available in the Library of the House. The regional electricity companies have themselves calculated ratings for about 300 models which they carry, and have labels showing those ratings on models on display in their shops which sell about 27 per cent. of all refrigerators and freezers in the United Kingdom.

All major manufacturers publish the standard energy consumption information required for the energy efficiency labels in brochures and technical leaflets provided with new appliances.

Sellafield

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy on how many occasions since the Windscale reprocessing works at Sellafield was opened for full safeguards inspection in 1986 have Euratom nuclear inspectors visited the B-205 Magnox reprocessing plant; what information they conveyed to his safeguards division following each inspection; and whether the details of the safeguards reports are available for public scrutiny.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Euratom inspectors have access to all civil nuclear material at Sellafield on a continuing basis. Typically, three Euratom officials are involved in inspection work at Sellafield at any one time. They divide their time between the various plants according to their assessment of the inspection needs. Detailed reports are prepared by these officials for the Euratom inspectorate and their findings are confidential to it. As appropriate, Euratom hold discussions with the safeguards office of my Department and with the operator: such discussions are confidential.

From time to time, Euratom publishes summaries of its inspection activities; the most recent is the "Report on the Operations of Euratom Safeguards" dated 19 March 1990, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Semi-conductor Materials

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what work is sponsored by his Department's energy technology research unit on the use of semi-conductor growth technologies in solar cell development.

Mr. Moynihan: On 8 May I announced that the Government are to fund a £250,000 programme of research into the use of solar power for electricity production. We believe that photovoltaics is a renewable technology which has considerable potential, particularly when incorporated into the fabric of a building. It is towards this area, rather than fundamental research into cell development, that the Department's programme has been focused.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much coal has been produced from opencast operations in Great Britain in each of the last seven years.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Total opencast coal output from British Coal and the licensed sector in each of the last seven years was as follows:

	output (million tonnes)
1984-85	14·6
1985-86	15·3
1986-87	14·6
1987-88	16·3
1988-89	18·0
1989-90	18·6
1990-91	18·3

TRANSPORT

Bus Companies

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has made of bus companies franchising their routes.

Mr. Freeman: The Departmnt has not undertaken any studies of bus companies franchising their routes. However, bus route tendering in London has provided valuable experience for bus operators and the Department in preparation for the deregulation of the London bus market. We are now ready to bring the benefits of deregulation to London's bus passengers, and hope to deposit a Bill to that end at an early opportunity in the new Parliament.

Airports (Credit Approvals)

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now announce the 1992-93 supplementry credit approvals for public airport companies and local authority airports.

Mr. McLoughlin: Supplementary credit approvals totalling £72 million will be available for public airport companies and local authority airports for 1992-93. These credit approvals, together with other resources which public airport companies expect at this stage to invest, will assist the airports concerned to provide facilities which they estimate could cost some £122 million in 1992-93.

As announced today by my noble Friend in another place, we have agreed to supplementary credit approvals totalling £59 million at this stage. The major projects concerned include the continuation of work on phase 1 of terminal 2 at Manchester airport and joint venture projects with the private sector at Birmingham airport. Formal supplementary credit approvals for these and other projects will be issued to the local authorities shortly.

The £72 million total of credit approvals for 1992-93, following the £87 million for 1991-92, represents a substantial commitment to the development of regional airports. But, as I indicated in my answer to my hon. friend in connection with the 1991-92 settlement—Official Report 19 December 1990, column 169—investment allocations will reduce in scale as phase 1 of terminal 2 at Manchester airport is completed and as the pressure on public sector spending continues. Local authority airports will have to look increasingly to the private sector to share in the successes and the risks associated with continued expansion.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements are being made to carry forward work on the Government's preferred route for the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Rifkind: I announced on 14 October the Government's preference for a route which terminates at King's Cross and which approaches from the east, via Stratford. I also invited British Rail to undertake such refinement of the route as is necessary to enable me to safeguard it.

Work on the route is now under way. British Rail should have created a new mapping base for the easterly section of the route by the end of the year. Work on defining the line and engineering it in sufficient detail for publication, consultation and environmental assessment should then begin in the new year. Officials from my Department, the Department of the Environment and the Treasury are closely involved and are already discussing parameters for the work, such as the freight role of a new line. The consultants appointed by the Department of the Environment to undertake the study of the development potential of the east Thames corridor will be kept in close touch. Ove Arup, which originally conceived the easterly approach via Stratford, is being invited by British Rail to join its team of consultants.

It is the Government's intention that the rail link should be taken forward by the private sector. I shall therefore be appointing a merchant bank early in the new year to advise the Government both about private sector interests whilst the line is refined and on the best way in which to hand over the project to the private sector in due course. The merchant bank will act as my Department's point of contact for developers and other private sector interests with a potential interest in funding and developing the rail link.

It is still too early to say when public consultations can begin, but it is important that the local authorities are involved at an early stage. I am still considering how this might best be organised but again I would expect arrangements for a consultative forum to be in place early in the new year.

Parking

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to seek to require local authorities to establish additional designated parking areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: No. The designation of parking places on the highway under the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 is a matter for the relevant highway authority. We do however plan to issue further guidance to London authorities under the Road Traffic Act 1991 on the designation of on-street parking spaces.

A10 Improvement

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will now take steps to acquire at a full market valuation properties in Cheshunt affected by the proposed A10 improvement;

(2) how many representations he has received concerning the effect on properties in Cheshunt of the proposed A10 improvement;

(3) when he expects to give a substantive reply to the letters from the hon. Member for Broxbourne dated 1 July, 29 August, 12 November and 13 November 1991 concerning the possible effect on properties of his Department's proposals to improve the A10 through Cheshunt;

(4) further to his answer to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Sir J. Stanley), Official Report, column 235, when guidelines for the new discretionary power to acquire property seriously affected by his Department's road schemes will be announced.

Mr. Chope: The Department has already purchased 36 properties under the statutory blight provisions in the Town and Country Planning Act 1990, as amended. It is also committed to acquiring 49 others, while a further 37 are under consideration.

There have been a large number of enquiries about the road proposals and about property blight—both written and by telephone.

The specific correspondence which my hon. Friend mentions is concerned with the application of the new power given by the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 to acquire properties which in the opinion of the Secretary of State will be seriously affected by the road scheme. When the criteria by which this discretionary power will be exercised have been decided, I shall write further to my hon. Friend.

St. Pancras-Sheffield Railway

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met leaders of local authorities of areas with railway stations on the midland main line, to discuss electrification from St. Pancras to Sheffield.

Mr. Freeman: I met the midland main line consortium of local authorities on 4 November. I have written to my hon. Friend following that meeting.

CIVIL SERVICE

Opposition Parties (Consultation)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what current guidance exists for the conduct of those civil servants who may participate in the consultation with Opposition parties six months prior to an election; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The guidance was summarised in my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 27 November, at columns 527-28.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Economic Models

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many models of the economy are funded in whole or part by Government.

Mr. Maples: The Treasury and the Bank of England both maintain models of the United Kingdom economy. Research on the London business school and the National Institute of Economic and Social Research models of the United Kingdom economy and on their GEM model of the world economy is partly funded by the Economic and Social Research Council Macroeconomic modelling consortium. The consortium is also funding research on a model currently being developed at Strathclyde university.

Tobacco Tax

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide an estimate of the extra revenue if taxation on cigarettes were raised by the amount necessary to increase the retail price by 25 pence.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: This would raise £1·1 billion in 1992-93 and £1·25 billion in 1993-94.

Government Stocks

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money remains unclaimed upon Government stocks having matured in the six years to 1 April 1991.

Mr. Maples: An aggregate of £7·3 million of unclaimed moneys remains outstanding in respect of Government stocks maturing on the Bank of England's registers during the six years to 1 April 1991. This total is comprised of £1·4 million dividends and £5·9 million redemption monies and represents less than 0·02 per cent. of the total amount of these stocks issued to the public.

Tax Allowances and Reliefs

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be (a) the first year and (b) the full-year revenue effect, if all tax allowances and reliefs except the single person's allowance were restricted to the basic rate (i) in 1991-92, and (ii) in 1992-93, in (1) Great Britain, (2) Northern Ireland and (3) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maude: It is estimated that, at 1991-92 levels of income, the yield in a full year from restricting all tax allowances and reliefs—except the personal allowance—to the basic rate of tax would be about £900 million. The corresponding figure for 1992-93 is £950 million.

The effect on receipts in the first year would depend on the administrative arrangements for such a change. I regret it is not possible to provide separate estimates for Northern Ireland.

Currency Matters

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet his EC counterparts to discuss currency matters.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 28 November 1991]: My right hon. Friend will be attending the European Council which meets in Maastricht on 9 December. There are no plans for this meeting to discuss current exchange rates.

VAT (Horses)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much VAT was collected as a result of the sale and purchase of horses in each of the years 1983 to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 4 December 1991]: I regret that information on VAT collected from the sale and purchase of horses is not available.

PRIME MINISTER

Dalai Lama

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Prime Minister what subjects were discussed at his meeting with the Dalai Lama; what was the outcome of the discussions; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) on 3 December at column 141.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 5 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Maastricht Conference

Mr. Favell: To ask the Prime Minister what consideration he has given to his policies on the United Kingdom's position in the European Community in the event of the United Kingdom not signing any treaty agreed upon at Maastricht by other European Community member states.

The Prime Minister: The Government's objective is to reach an agreement at Maastricht on terms that I can commend to the House. Amendment of the treaty of Rome requires the approval of all the member states and all Twelve would have to consider the implications if no agreement were reached at Maastricht.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on extending the level of involvement of Parliament in the decision-making process running up to Maastricht.

The Prime Minister: Parliament has been kept fully informed of the progress in the intergovernmental conferences. A statement is made following every ministerial session. Parliament has also had the fullest possible opportunity to debate all the issues for discussion at Maastricht. Any agreement reached at Maastricht will be put to the House for approval.

Civil Servants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister, (1) if he will include in the definition of civil servants he is prepared to authorise to meet Opposition parties, six months prior to an election, the chief executives and senior officers of the agencies;

(2) if he will list the grades of civil servant which he will agree to authorise to consult Opposition parties on policy matters six months prior to an election.

The Prime Minister: I do not intend to specify grades or positions.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister, further to his reply of 27 November, Official Report, column 527, on Opposition parties consulting civil servants on organisational changes resulting from Opposition policies, if he is now prepared to supply information on the current organisation of Departments.

The Prime Minister: Such information is already in the public domain.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister on what basis Her Majesty's Government's Cabinet Secretary met the shadow Cabinet last week; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The meeting was held in confidence and with my authority to provide a briefing on civil service matters.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what are the conventions and guidance whereby civil service departments brief and induct Ministers on their first day in office.

The Prime Minister: There are no specific conventions or guidance.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to his answer of 27 November, Official Report, column 527-28, to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris), he will give the dates prior to the 1983 and 1987 general elections when Opposition parties were authorised to have contacts with senior civil servants; when the convention on Opposition parties consulting the civil service six months prior to an election was last used; and if he will make a statement on the procedure.

The Prime Minister: As these elections were called more than six months before the five-year term of Parliament would have expired, no question of authorisation before the election period arose. A statement on the procedure was made to the House by the then Prime Minister on 21 April 1970. The statement referred to meetings in July 1964. The convention has been operated only in or immediately before subsequent election periods.

Operation Scotcheck

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on Operation Scotcheck on 13 November; and if he will give details of the involvement of each of the Scottish police forces, the Health and Safety Executive, Her Majesty's Custom and Excise, the Department of Trade and Industry, the Department of Transport and the Department of Social Security.

The Prime Minister: Operation Scotcheck was a joint police and Health and Safety Executive initiative mirroring similar operations previously held in England. The purpose was to check that vehicles carrying hazardous substances were doing so in accordance with the relevant regulations. All eight police forces in Scotland took part in the operation. In addition a number of Government Departments were invited by the police to take part in the exercise for their particular interests and to be present at the various checkpoints. This is a cost-effective way of checking compliance with the law in a range of different areas.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Prime Minister how many joint initiatives have been mounted by the Department of Employment and the Benefits Agency on benefit fraud protection under the terms of the liaison agreement; and if he will make a statement concerning the exchange of any information between Departments obtained from such initiatives.

The Prime Minister: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mr. Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

WALES

Disabled Staff

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many disabled people are currently employed in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department employs 36 people who are registered disabled and acts as host organisation for a further five on the sheltered placement scheme. Initiatives in the last year have produced a 20 per cent. increase.

In addition, the Department employs a number of other staff who are disabled but not registered.

Valleys Programmes

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the cost of the valleys programme from its inception to the latest available date.

Mr. David Hunt: A total of £421·94 million was spent on a range of central Government programmes in the valleys between June 1988 and June 1991.

Consultants

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he is taking to examine and validate the waiting lists of consultants in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: All health authorities in Wales are required to ensure that waiting lists are validated. This is being undertaken at hospital, specialty and individual consultant level as appropriate. The importance of validating lists as part of good management practice has been stressed to the health authorities. I am asking for a report of what procedures each has in place.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he is taking to publicise the lengths of consultants' waiting lists in Wales and to assist patients to choose the shortest waiting times for their operations.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The patients charter requires that from 1 April 1992, all district health authorities in Wales should publish waiting times for out-patient, day care and in-patient treatment by hospital, specialty and individual consultant.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the total expenditure to date by central and local government agencies on administration and collection of the poll tax; and how this sum is broken down into its component parts.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Administration and collection of the community charge is a local government responsibility. The available information on local authority expenditure is given in the table:

Local authority current expenditure on community charge preparation, collection and benefit administration[1]

	1989-90 £ million	1990-91[2] £ million	1991-92[3] £ million
Community charge preparation	[4]10·7	—	—
Community charge collection	—	22·1	24·5
Community charge benefit administration	—	7·9	8·7
TOTAL	10·7	30·0	33·2

[1] Expenditure on employees and running expenses, less sales, fees, charges, internal recharges and other non-grant income, but gross of specific government grants and certain interest receipts. Excludes net expenditure by local authorities on community charge benefit.
[2] Provisional.
[3] Local authority budgets.
[4] Additionally, gross capital expenditure of £3·9 million was recorded by local authorities.

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the cumulative amount and the amount for last year of poll tax arrears in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on 17 October 1991.

Supported Homes

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the target date by which he intends that the proportion of adults with learning difficulties who need a supported home of their own and who actually have such a home shall exceed 50 per cent.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Targets are proposed annually by county joint planning teams and agreed annually by the Welsh Office. Provisional targets for 1991-92 indicate that there should be 1,194 places for adults living in ordinary housing outside the family home by 31 March 1992, compared to 166 places in the year before the all-Wales mental handicap strategy was launched.

Children (Secure Accommodation)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children from each county in Wales were held in secure accommodation in each month in 1989, 1990 and the current year.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The number of admissions from each county in Wales to Welsh secure units in each month is shown in table 1. Fewer individual children were involved, since some were admitted for short periods on several occasions.

Table 2 gives the available annual figures for children placed by Welsh authorities in English secure units; monthly figures are not available.

In addition, on behalf of the Home Office, the Welsh Office place children found guilty of "grave crimes", in secure accommodation, currently all in England. Two such placements were made in 1989, seven in 1990, and 10 this year to date. Table 3 shows the county of origin.

Hospital Patients (Travelling)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated cost per annum arising from Welsh patients travelling to England for treatment.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: For those services that are now subject to cross-charging arrangements, the cost of treating Welsh patients in England is, on the basis of Welsh health authorities' own estimates, anticipated to be in the region of £46 million in the current financial year.

The Welsh Office does not have information on the further cost of services provided in England to Welsh patients which are not subject to the new cross-charging arrangements, notably those in respect of supra-regional services and those provided by special health authorities and which are still funded by the Department of Health.

Llay Junior School

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit Llay junior CP school, Clwyd, and meet (a) the parent-teachers association, (b) the governors and (c) the staff.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have any plans at present to do so.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give a breakdown of the planned expenditure on (a) new construction and improvement, (b) structural maintenance and (c) current maintenance on trunk roads by his Department for the years 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95, respectively.

Sir Wyn Roberts [holding answer 21 November 1991]: Planned net expenditure in 1992-93 on the roads and transport programme in Wales is about £195 million; this includes £135 million for new construction and improvements, £36 million for structural renewals and £21 million for current maintenance. The comparable figures for 1993-94 and 1994-95 will be announced in due course.

HEALTH

Kidney Transplants

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many kidney transplant operations have taken place in the Northern general hospital in Sheffield in the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Renal transplant services, provided initially at the Royal Hallamshire hospital, Sheffield, were transferred to the Northern general hospital, Sheffield in 1990.

According to information supplied by the United Kingdom Support Service Authority, the number of cadaveric kidney transplants performed in those hospitals for the years requested is as follows:

	Number
1988	24
1989	51
1990	28
1991	[1]29

[1] This figure is provisional and is for the period 1 January to 28 November.

Availability of donor organs is the key factor in the number of transplant operations performed.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current cost of implementing the Children Act 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Central Government do not specify in detail how local authorities should allocate the overall resources available to them but rather indicate their view of appropriate spending through standard spending control totals. For the first full year of the Children Act in 1992-93, standard spending for children in England will be £1,654 million—over 27 per cent. higher than in 1990-91 or up nearly 14 per cent. in real terms. This includes the full revenue consequences of the £5·7 million new guardian ad litem specific grant for 1992-93.

Disabled Staff

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many disabled people are currently employed in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: As at 1 June 1991, 34·5 whole-time equivalent members of staff were registered disabled. A survey earlier this year identified 61 additional members of staff with a disability who were not registered as disabled. The Department of Health is an equal opportunity employer and observes the code of practice issued by the Cabinet Office for the employment of people with a disability. All job advertisements carry the recognised disability symbol which signifies that posts are open to suitably qualified disabled applicants.

Cold Weather

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the Government have to publicise the dangers of hypothermia in the winter months; and what plans the Government have to publicise the "Winter Warmth" line which gives advice to older people about keeping warm in winter.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government's fifth annual "Keep Warm, Keep Well" campaign was launched on 16 October. The purpose of the campaign, which is run jointly with Help the Aged, Neighbourhood Energy Action and Age Concern, is to advise vulnerable people of the steps they can take to minimise the risks from cold weather and to inform them of the help that is available. The campaign is publicised widely through radio and television. A free booklet in English and nine ethnic languages is also available from amongst others doctors, dentists, libraries and citizens advice bureaux. The winter warmth line is one component part of the "Keep Warm, Keep Well" campaign and is given wide publicity by the participating agencies.

Regional Health Authorities (Revenue Allocation)

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will announce regional health authorities' revenue allocations for 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: In 1992-93 regional health authorities' allocations for resident population will increase in real terms by an average of 4·8 per cent. All get substantial real terms increases. The variations are based on the size, age and health of the resident population. No region will get less than 3·5 per cent. extra in real terms and the four Thames regions will get a minimum of 4 per cent. to enable those regions to ensure stability during the period of Sir Bernard Tomlinson's study on London health services.

In addition, there will be increased support for initiatives such as AIDS services and prevention, Project 2000 training for nurses and measures to reduce the hours worked by junior doctors.

The table shows the revenue allocations for each regional health authority.

Region	1992-93 allocations for resident population £ million	Percentage cash increase per cent.	Real terms percentage increase per cent.

Notes:
1. Regional cash limits will differ from the sums shown as they exclude allocations for items such as the Service Increment for Teaching and Research and Joint Finance, etc.
2. Figures may not sum due to roundings.

Dentists (Overpayment)

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about any outstanding overpayment to dentists.

Mr. Waldegrave: In 1988-89, net payments to general dental practitioners averaged some £4,874 per dentist in excess of the intended level. I have considered carefully the various factors which led to this overpayment in the light of the concerns expressed by the profession about the size and circumstances of the overpayment.

The principal reasons for the overpayment were that the calculation of the 1988 dental fee scale was based on forecasts which over-estimated dentists' practice expenses and underestimated the volume of treatment to be undertaken by dentists. Some degree of forecasting error in both these areas is inevitable and is corrected under the normal balancing arrangements. In fact, an initial instalment of £598 was recovered in respect of the 1988-89 overpayment in the normal manner in the 1991-92 fee settlement.

A third factor was a large-scale increase in 1988-89 in the rate of processing at the Dental Practice Board which processes dentists' claims for payment. I have decided that this special factor, which was exceptional and once and for all, should be excluded from the sum to be recovered.

I have therefore decided to waive £1,529 of the 1988-89 overpayment per dentist because of this exceptional factor —a sum equivalent to £23 million for Great Britain. The normal conventions of the balancing mechanism will be applied to the balance.

I believe that this represents a constructive and substantial response to the profession's concerns. We shall be reviewing procedures with a view to avoiding such large scale variations in processing rates in the future and to insulate the dentists' pay system from these. I am also inviting the profession to discuss with us the remuneration system more generally in the light of the Government's policy on performance pay set out in the citizens charter.

Medway Hospital

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to make budgetary provision for the Medway hospital phase IIIC.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government have just announced the biggest-ever level of capital investment for the NHS in 1992-93. The share of that for South East Thames regional health authority, along with all regional health authorities, will be announced shortly. Provision for Medway hospital phase IIIC is a matter for the region, which will shortly complete its review of priorities for investment over the next decade. These will be made public at its next meeting.

Incontinence Pads

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, further to his answer of 14 November, Official Report, column 657, what statutory provisions allow local health authorities to charge for incontinence pads to those who are not in-patients, neither in course of treatment nor in nursing homes.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 19 November 1991]: Health authorities have no powers to charge people for incontinence pads they provide as part of any national health service in-patient or community health services.

Guy's Hospital

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff were employed in each category at Guy's hospital in each quarter of the financial year 1990-91 and the first two quarters of the financial year 1991-92.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 21 November 1991]: Prior to 1 April 1991, reliable staffing information District level was not centrally available. The provisional information held centrally, since that date, for Guy's and Lewisham Trust is given in the table.

Guy's and Lewisham hospitals NHS Trust
Directly employed staff in post—1991

	Whole-time equivalents as at: 30 June	30 September
Medical staff	450	450
Non-medical staff	5,150	5,120

Source: Department of Health (SMI4) QM06 return.
Note: All figures are independently rounded to the nearest ten (10) whole-time equivalent.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are waiting for (a) in-patient care and (b) out-patient appointments in each specialty at Guy's hospital for each quarter for the financial year 1990-91 and for the first two quarters of the financial year 1991-92.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 21 November 1991]: Information was not collected centrally on waiting lists at Guy's and Lewisham hospitals before 1 April 1991. Provisional data reported by the trust shows that the number of patients, including day cases, waiting for admission in the current year was as follows:

	Numbers
June 1991	8,500
September 1991	8,000

I understand that Guy's and Lewisham Hospital NHS Trust estimate that its waiting list for in-patients and day-case treatment fell by 14·8 per cent. over the 12 months to September 1991.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were (a) seen as outpatients or (b) treated as in-patients by each specialty at Guy's hospital in each quarter of the financial year 1990-91 and the first two quarters of the financial year 1991-92.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 21 November 1991]: Information was not collected centrally on activity at Guy's and Lewisham hospitals before 1 April 1991. However, I understand that Guy's and Lewisham Hospitals NHS Trust estimate that activity in the six months April 1991 to September 1991 was greater than in the corresponding period in 1990 and that the trust expects full-year increases in activity of at least 9 per cent.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the current financial situation for both capital and revenue at Guy's hospital.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 21 November 1991]: For the period 1 April to 30 September 1991 the Guy's and Lewisham Trust reported a deficit of £1·3 million—1·5 per cent. of total turnover. The trust has plans to eliminate this by the year end. Capital expenditure is controlled by the trust's external financing limit. The trust has operated within its limit for the first half of the year and plans to remain within it for the remainder of the year.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times, and on each occasion for what length of time (a) elective and (b) emergency admissions have been (i) reduced and (ii) stopped at Guy's hospital in each quarter of the financial year 1990-91 and the first two quarters of the financial year 1991-92.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 21 November 1991]: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Phillip Harris, chairman of the Guy's and Lewisham Hospitals NHS Trust, for details.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the average, maximum and minimum numbers of beds (a) available and (b) occupied for each specialty at Guy's hospital in each quarter of the financial year 1990-91 and the first two quarters of the financial year 1991-92.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 21 November 1991]: Up to 1990-91 data on available beds were collected at hospital site level by type of ward rather than specialty. Data for 1990-91 will be published early in 1992 in "Summary of Bed Availability, England, Financial year 1990-91". From 1991-92 data on available beds will be collected at directly managed unit and trust level. The 1991-92 statistics will be published by early 1993.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) elective operations, (b) scheduled operating sessions and (c) non-scheduled operating sessions were cancelled in each specialty at Guy's hospital in each quarter of the financial year 1990-91 and the first two quarters of the financial year 1991-91.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 21 November 1991]: Statistics on operating theatre sessions are collected annually, after the end of the financial year. Data for 1991-92 in respect of the Guy's and Lewisham NHS Hospitals Trust will be published early in 1993. Data about operating theatre sessions in 1990-91 in hospitals managed by Lewisham and North Southwark DHA will be published early in 1992, in "NHS Operating Theatres Availability and Use, England, Financial year 1990-91".

Dental Service

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement after the meeting of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Baroness Hooper, with dentists from Dorset, about the suspension of the national health service dental service for children;

(2) what steps he intends to take to ensure the continuation of national health service dental services for children in Dorset.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1991, c. 333]: I regret there was an error in the information provided. The answer stated that Dorset has the second highest level of children registered with a dentist in England; the correct level is the fifth highest.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Arab States (Trade Balance)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the balance of trade between the United Kingdom and the Arab states taken as a whole; and what is that balance between the European Community and the Arab states.

Mr. Lilley: In 1990 the United Kingdom's balance of trade in visible goods with the Arab states was in surplus by £2·4 billion. The European Community had a deficit of £2·6 billion.

Consultants

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what legislation or regulation controls or supervises the use of the term insurance consultant or financial consultant; and what agency is responsible for conducting this supervision.

Mr. Redwood: There is no legislation governing use of these terms. Rules made by the self-regulatory organisations under the Financial Services Act and by the Association of British Insurers code of practice for non-registered general insurance intermediaries require those who use such terms to make their status clear.

Telephone Standardisation

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from industries and commercial companies about the additional costs arising from the 1994 telephone standardisation programme.

Mr. Redwood: The Director General of Telecommunications is responsible for numbering. Over the past two years he has undertaken extensive research and consultation on a new numbering plan. Users who responded to the consultation exercise gave overwhelming support to a 10-digit scheme of the kind that has now been approved by the director general.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will extend the proposed period for the completion of the 1994 telephone standardisation programme.

Mr. Redwood: The new national numbering plan is the responsibility of the Director General of Telecommunications. He consulted widely on its proposed completion date. The plan is expected to be implemented over the Easter weekend of 1994, which should give telecommunications users adequate time to prepare for the change.

ECGD Insurance Services Group

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his best estimate of the net receipts to Her Majesty's Government from the sale of the Insurance Services Group of the Export Credits Guarantee Department to NCM of Amsterdam; and what arrangements he has made concerning the commutation of pension entitlement for civil servants transferred to NCM.

Mr. Lilley: The gross cost to NCM is £70 million made up as follows:

£50 million to capitalise the company, relieving the Exchequer of the equivalent responsibility;
£20 million for goodwill.

Net of Government's current estimate of costs this leaves net receipts to Government of £12 million of which £5 million—indexed to maintain its present value—is payable by NCM in 1996 subject to the outturn in the first two years of the company's operation in the private sector. NCM (UK) Holding is providing a pension scheme for established ECGD staff transferring from the principal civil service pension scheme—PCSPS—which is closely similar to the PCSPS. These transferees will be able to take across to the new scheme, on a year-for-year basis, their accrued benefits in the PCSPS. They will have three months to decide on this.

Cumbria Action Team

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the cost to his Department of setting up and administering the Cumbria action team.

Mr. Leigh: The Cumbria action team was set up as part of the Special measures for Cumbria announced by the Secretary of State in June. A special fund of up to £1 million was allocated to the team in order to support local initiatives in the area. The special fund is solely for programme expenditure. All administrative costs are included in the overall running costs of the DTI's north-west regional office. Three officials are currently working full-time on Cumbria issues, with support from others in the regional office.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the projects in Copeland which have received financial assistance from the Cumbria action team.

Mr. Leigh: The £1 million special fund will complement the £15 million English Estates building programme, which is due to commence in January.

The Cumbria action team has been working with Copeland local authority, the West Cumbria development agency and other bodies locally, to identify suitable projects for support under the special fund.

A number of projects are now under active consideration and I hope to announce a number of approvals shortly.

Consumer Credit

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has for improving standards in the marketing of consumer credit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The Government are today sending out a consultative document about its proposals for legislation on credit marketing.

The proposals in the December 1990 consultative document have been revised to take account of the views expressed by consultees. The main aim continues to be to alert consumers more effectively to the costs and risks involved in credit agreements before they commit themselves to enter into agreements or make greater use of existing facilities. However, the proposals have been modified to ensure that the new requirements do not inconvenience the majority of consumers who use credit responsibly nor add unnecessarily to the burdens of business.

While most of the proposals are substantially the same as those on which consultation has already been completed, there are many changes of detail. The main purpose of a second consultation is to obtain views on the detail and in particular on the draft implementing legislation. However, views on any aspect of the proposals will, of course, be considered.

Most of the proposals can be implemented by regulation made under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 and it is intended to make these regulations early in 1992. The main changes to be made by regulations are that health warnings and additional information be included in credit advertisements, quotations and agreements; stopping inertia selling in connection with credit; and banning unsolicited increases in credit limits other than to adjust for inflation.

The proposals to extend cancellation rights and to limit the defences available for breaching the prohibition on sending credit circulars to minors will require primary legislation to amend the Act. As soon as legislative time is available the Government intend to introduce a Bill to make these amendments as well as making the deregulatory changes announced in the 1988 White Paper "Releasing Enterprise".

Copies of the consultative document have been placed in the Library, and copies will be available from the Vote Office.

Timeshare

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce a compulsory cooling-off period for all prospective purchasers of timeshare accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 28 November 1991]: My hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) has tabled a Bill which would introduce a compulsory cooling-off period for prospective purchasers of timeshare accommodation. This Bill has my full support.

Live Television Feed

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the locations of the television sets in his Department which can receive the live television feed from the Chamber, and the total cost to his Department of this service.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 3 December 1991]: There are an estimated 18 television sets capable of receiving the live feed. These are installed in each of the five Minister's offices and offices of the permanent secretary and three deputy secretaries. In addition sets in the press office, parliamentary branch and two other offices can also receive the link.

The cost of installation was about £14,000 and the rental for the current year is estimated also about £14,000.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Suckler Cow Premium

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications for payment of the annual suckler cow premium have been lodged with the Carlisle office of his Department; what proportion of those applicants have received their payment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: A total of 1,239 applications for 1991 suckler cow premium have been received at Carlisle divisional office. Of these, 947 have been processed for payment. Payments of premium to producers commenced on 25 November following the coming into force of the Suckler Cow Premium Regulations 1991 on 22 November.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to press for an indefinite European Commission moratorium on the use of the artificial milk-boosting hormone bovine somatotropin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: If BST were shown fully to meet the criteria of safety, quality and efficacy—which is not our current scientific advice—farmers should be free to decide, in the light of their vets' advice and their customers' requirements, whether or not they wish to use it, as for other products meeting the licensing criteria. This would not be possible if there were an indefinite moratorium.

Pets (Carcases)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take measures to ensure that carcases of domestic pets are not reprocessed to manufacture fertiliser or animal feeding stuff.

Mr. Maclean: I have been assured by representatives of the rendering industry that steps have been taken to ensure that such carcases are not used for the production of meat and bone meal or tallow.

Fallen Livestock

Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline the Government's response to the fourth report of the Agriculture Committee of 1990-91, House of Commons Paper No. 493, on the disposal of fallen livestock.

Mr. Gummer: The response, which is published today, acknowledges that the Committee and the Government are in agreement about the market forces which have led to the changed economic circumstances facing the livestock industry in disposing of carcase waste.

However, the Government do not agree that the traditional methods of disposal of fallen livestock have collapsed. Although there may be some problems in certain areas, knackers and hunt kennels continue generally to provide a service in disposing of large numbers of fallen stock.

The Government have taken action in a number of ways to help the industry, including the provision of advice to farmers on alternative and safe methods of disposal, measures to make it easier for those wishing to install incineration facilities, supporting research and assisting in the search for alternative uses for some rendered products and identifying the recycling of animal by-products as a priority area for European Community grants.

Although this range of assistance is being provided, the Government believe that it is fundamentally for the livestock sector, as with other industries, to find ways of properly handling its own waste. They do not, therefore, agree with the Committee's recommendation that subsidies should be given to renderers so that they can take knackers' waste free of charge. Subsidies of this sort would distort the economics of a whole range of disposal systems that are presently being used or are being explored, and the Government believe that the industry is in fact already successfully making the readjustments that are necessary to cope with the changed economic circumstances.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Semi-conducting Materials

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research is currently sponsored by (a) his Department or (b) research councils, on the basic science of semi-conducting materials for (i) telecommunications, (ii) energy systems transfers.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department of Education and Science does not sponsor such research directly.

The Science and Engineering Research Council supports a number of research programmes in basic semi-conducting materials science.

Much of this research has potential application for telecommunications and a number of projects are specifically aimed at developments in this field. These include high-frequency devices for satellite and portable communications and the development of new semiconductor lasers for use with optical fibre systems.

Projects involving potential applications in the energy industry include research into solar cells, new power devices and drive systems, power conversion and power supply systems.

Open University

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will inaugurate discussions with the Open university on the possibilities presented by recent developments in east and central Europe for the use of its particular skills and experience in the field of distance learning; if he will consider providing seedcorn funding to the university to investigate such possibilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Open university has been quick to seize the opportunities presented by recent developments in east and central Europe. Since 1989 the university's open business school has been working with a Hungarian consortium to bring its management training courses, in translation, to managers in Hungary. The Government welcomed this initiative which I was pleased to have an opportunity to observe at first hand last year and provided financial support from the British Council and the know-how fund. A similar scheme is under way in Czechoslovakia, also with support from the know-how fund. This year, 20 Russian students began to study the university's "The Effective Manager" course in Moscow. I do from time to time discuss these matters with the Open university.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress there has been in the development of environmental education programmes by the Open university; and what part his Department has played in carrying matters forward.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Open university has offered courses on environmental subjects since 1972 with 33 of its courses, ranging from management to environmental chemistry, including environmental themes. More than 12,000 Open university undergraduates are currently enrolled on such courses. In 1991 a new interdisciplinary course called "Environment" was introduced into the undergraduate programme.

The Government do not provide a specific element of funding for environmental education, but support all undergraduate courses through recurrent grant. I was pleased to announce in June that the university would be enabled to recruit an additional 3,000 undergraduate students in 1992.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he received the report on the review of the Open university; what the main conclusions of the review were; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I received the report of the review of the Open university in March and copies were placed in the Library in July. The main conclusions of the review were that the Open university is the major United Kingdom provider of part-time degree level study at a distance, and that it is providing highly valued opportunities in higher education for substantial and increasing numbers of people. In recognition of this the Government have funded 3,000 additional undergraduate places at the university in 1992.

Schools Inspectorate

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many people are employed in Her Majesty's inspectorate for schools in England; and what increase or decrease is being proposed.

Mr. Eggar: There are currently around 470 HMI. That number will be reduced over time to up to 175 to fulfill the functions set out in the Education (Schools) Bill.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Belfast International Airport

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much public money has gone into the development of Belfast international airport during the past 10 years.

Mr. Needham: During the 10-year period ending 31 March 1991 Belfast international airport received revenue and capital grants from Government totalling £5·5 million and £5·6 million respectively.

Contractors

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether Northern Ireland Government Departments seek confirmation of the financial security of main contractors prior to awarding contracts.

Dr. Mawhinney: Procedures for checking a contractor's financial and economic standing as part of an approved list system or, in the absence of approved lists, prior to the award of contracts are followed by all NI Departments. The extent of such checks is dependent on the value of the contract, the risks associated with it and the Department's prior knowledge of the contractor, but may include, for example, an examination of bankers' statements, balance sheets, statements of overall turnover and on construction works for three previous years, and proof of enrolment in a professional or trade register.

Under EC works directive 89/440 Departments are required to treat all tenderers in a fair and equal manner using objective criteria in selecting participants and awarding contracts.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many scientific procedures establishments there were in Northern Ireland in 1990.

Mr. Hanley: Sixteen.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many personal licences were granted under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 in 1990 in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: Eighty-six.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many procedures on living vertebrate animals were started in Northern Ireland in 1990.

Mr. Hanley: A total of 14,684.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many holders of project licences under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 reported scientific procedures in Northern Ireland in 1990.

Mr. Hanley: Eighty-one.

Deer Farming

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the legislation covering deer farming in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: The following legislation applies:

Agricultural Act (Northern Ireland) 1949
Agricultural Development Operational Programme Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1991
Farm and Conservation Grant Scheme (Northern Ireland) 1989
Farm and Conservation Grant Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1991
Welfare of Animals Act (Northern Ireland) 1972
Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985.

Clenbuterol

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have been convicted in Northern Ireland for (a) using and (b) being in possession of clenbuterol; and what penalties have been imposed up to the latest available date.

Mr. Hanley: To date three people have been convicted for the illegal administration of clenbuterol hydrochloride. One fine of £2,250 with £290 costs and two fines of £250 with £144 costs were imposed.

Two people have been convicted for the illegal importation of clenbuterol hydrochloride. Fines of £800 with £5 costs and £500 with £183 costs were imposed.

Terrorists (Compensation Claims)

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if it is Northern Ireland Office practice to settle out-of-court those claims for compensation made by terrorists or their families; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Northern Ireland Office considers all claims for compensation on their merits, bearing in mind the facts of the case, any relevant statutory provisions and, if appropriate, legal advice.

RUC Recruits

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what additional expenditure has been made available to the Northern Ireland Exchequer in order that the Police Authority can pay for the 441 new RUC recuits.

Dr. Mawhinney: Total public expenditure in Northern Ireland will increase by £576 million in 1992-93 compared to 1991-92; £44 million of this increase is being allocated to the police authority to meet a number of requirements including the resources needed to begin recruitment of the extra 441 officers.

Housing Executive

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the budgetary allocation to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive will be in 1992-93 financial year; what it was in the previous five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The allocations of public expenditure resources to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in 1992-93 and the five previous financial years are shown in the table:

Year	£ million
1987-88	332
1988-89	298
1989-90	222
1990-91	215
1991-92	225
1992-93	216

The figures from 1987-88 to 1989-90 are affected by the write-off of some of the executive's loans and by other technical reductions in the loan charges payable by the executive. When loan charges are excluded and account is taken of the executive's capital receipts and rental income, the executive has had the following sums available:

Year	£ million
1987-88	310
1988-89	308
1989-90	306
1990-91	298
1991-92	[1]293
1992-93	[1]296

Airports

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what operating profits have been made by Northern Ireland Airports Ltd. for each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Northern Ireland Airports Ltd. has made an operating profit in each of the last 10 years as follows:

1981-82	764
1982-83	1,194
1983-84	1,131
1984-85	1,099
1985-86	1,886
1986-87	3,422
1987-88	4,667
1988-89	4,676
1989-90	4,046
1990-91	3,316

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recommendations were made to him by Hambros Bank Ltd. regarding the privatisation of Northern Ireland Airports Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Hambros Bank Ltd. was appointed to advise the Government on the feasibility of privatising Northern Ireland Airports Ltd. Its principal conclusion was that the airport company is a viable and valuable business which could be sold. It also recommended that the most appropriate method of privatisation would be by a trade sale. The Government propose to act on this advice.

Missing Weapons and Explosives

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) on how many occasions members of (a) the police, (b) the Ulster Defence Regiment or (c) other security personnel were (i) questioned and (ii) charged by the Royal Ulster Constabulary in relation to the theft or loss of weapons, ammunition or explosives in each year since 1989;

(2) on how many occasions the Royal Ulster Constabulary has investigated the theft of weapons, explosives or ammunition from security installations in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 28 November 1991]: There has been no theft or loss of explosives from security force bases in Northern Ireland since 1989. Information relating to the investigation of the theft or loss of weapons and ammunition could be obtained only by a manual search of individual records and would incur disproportionate cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crime Initiatives

11. Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new initiatives he is planning to prevent rises in crime.

Mr. John Patten: We shall continue to take vigorous action to combat crime and protect the public, by providing the police with the people and money they need; making sure they and the courts have the necessary powers to deal effectively with offenders; and by enhancing our substantial programme of crime prevention measures. But reducing crime is not only the responsibility of the Government, police and courts, families, schools, churches and many others have a role to play. We are exploring what more might be done to influence individuals, particularly the young, to respect each other, each other's property and the law of the land.

22. Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he proposes to take to tackle the roots of crime.

Mr. John Patten: We shall continue to pursue our wide-ranging policies to combat crime and protect the public. We are exploring what more could be done to influence people—particularly the young—to have consideration for others and respect for the law. We hope soon to be able to make known our proposals for taking this forward.

Police Civilianisation

12. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the number of police officers returned to operational duties by the policy of civilianisation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Over the last eight years, some 5,300 police officers have been redeployed through civilianisation of posts which do not require the powers or skills of a police officer.

Police Manpower

13. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current number of police in England; and what was the comparable position in 1987.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: At the end of September 1991 there were 118,748 police officers in England, compared to 115,592 in September 1987, an increase of 3,156. There were 44,646 civilian support staff in September 1991 in England, compared to 39,484 in September 1987, an increase of 5,162.

Prisoners (HIV Infection)

14. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further steps he proposes to take to combat the spread of HIV infection in prisons; and if he will make a statement.

25. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice he has issued to prison governors with respect to the spread of HIV in Her Majesty's prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Prevention is one of the main aims of prisons HIV/AIDS policy. This was reaffirmed in fresh guidelines recently issued to prison governors. Among the preventive measures advocated are careful screening of prisoners on first reception, clinical investigation including the offer of a blood test in appropriate circumstances, and education and counselling, including preventive counselling for prisoners who are known to be infected or have been at risk. A valuable recent addition to our education programme is a booklet for prisoners produced by the Terrence Higgins Trust. This is being issued to all prisoners currently in custody and to new prisoners.

Prison Security

15. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Director of the Prison Service to discuss prison security.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend meets the director general frequently to discuss prison security and other matters. His last meeting with him to discuss prison security was on 21 November.

Concessionary TV Licences

16. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to modify the criteria governing eligibility for the concessionary television licence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The concessionary TV licence scheme was thoroughly reviewed prior to the introduction of new regulations in 1988 which defined more closely the type of accommodation which could qualify. The "communal facility" requirement was dropped from consolidating regulations issued earlier this year since the term was not precise and the scheme could be properly controlled by relying on the other conditions, which remain in force. We have no plans to make any further changes to the scheme.

Bail Offenders

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the number of offences committed by people while on bail.

Mr. John Patten: We are examining carefully the evidence from recent studies by the police and others of the extent of offending on bail and will announce our conclusions soon.

Football Arrests

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the arrest and ejection rate at Football League matches in England and Wales for the season 1990-91; and what was the arrest rate for society over the same period.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There were 22 arrests and 27 ejections per 100,000 of the people attending football league matches in England and Wales last season. In the period from August 1990 to May 1991, the number of arrests made by forces excluding the Metropolitan police district were 2,965 per 100,000 of the population. Arrests for notifiable offences in the Metropolitan police district were 1,350 per 100,000 of the population.

Franchise

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on plans to extend the franchise in the United Kingdom to all EC citizens.

Mrs. Rumbold: Proposals to grant EC nationals the right to vote, and to stand for election, at local and European parliamentary elections in their member state of residence form part of the chapter on citizenship in the draft treaty on political union. These proposals will be considered as part of the treaty as a whole at the Maastricht European Council meeting this month.

Burglaries

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the proportion of domestic burglaries which do not involve forced entry.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In 1990 about 25 per cent. of domestic burglaries in the Metropolitan police district involved no forced entry. Comparable figures for the whole of England and Wales are not available, but 18 per cent. of burglary victims interviewed for the 1988 British crime survey said that their homes had not been left secure when they went out.

Community Service Orders

21. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the use being made of community service orders.

Mr. John Patten: The courts are making good use of the community service order. In 1990, following the introduction of national standards, the number of orders rose by 10 per cent., from 34,040 in 1989 to 37,490 in 1990.

Primates (Laboratory Research)

23. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will be making a formal response to the report prepared by Advocates for Animals on the use of primates in laboratory research.

Mrs. Rumbold: We shall reply to Advocates for Animals when the report has been fully considered.

Prison Service (Expenditure)

24. Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current annual expenditure on the prison service; and what it was in 1979 in current prices.

Mrs. Rumbold: Total expenditure on the prison service in 1990-91 was £1,342 million compared with £665 million in 1979-80 in 1990-91 prices. This represents an increase of nearly 102 per cent.

Shops Act 1950

26. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the progress of his discussions about reforming the Shops Act 1950.

Mrs. Rumbold: I hope to have concluded my current programme of separate discussions with the wide range of interest groups on their proposals or positions on reform of the Shops Act 1950 early next year.

Asylum Bill

27. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has now received about the Asylum Bill.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since July we have received approximately 200 letters from hon. Members forwarding correspondence from their constituents and about 820 letters from members of the public.

Auto Crime

28. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress in preventing and pursuing thefts of and from private cars.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend introduced the Aggravated Vehicle-Taking Bill in the House last week. That Bill proposes tough measures against those who take cars and drive them dangerously, or cause injury or damage.

My right hon. Friend is also engaged in a series of meetings with leading car manufacturers to consider what measures they can take to improve car security. The next meeting will take place on 11 December. Car crime prevention features prominently in the Government's crime prevention publicity; we intend to intensify our activity on this front in the months ahead.

Local chief officers of police are responsible for the investigation and detection of car crime. I am confident that they give this matter the priority it deserves in their respective areas. The police have the Government's full support in acting against car crime.

Paint Ball Guns

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what regulations govern the sites at which paint ball guns are used.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under the Firearms Acts 1968 to 1988 there are no such regulations. As to the effect of any planning laws, this is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many personal licences were granted under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 in 1990 in Great Britain.

Mrs. Rumbold: Our records show that some 3,600 personal licences were issued in Great Britain in 1990.

Young Offenders

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of savings to the prison service that will result from the proposed provision of secure units for young people in England and Wales.

Mrs. Rumbold: We estimate that the realisable savings to the prison service of keeping juveniles on remand in secure units would be in the region of £100,000 per year.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to alter policy with regard to young offenders being given custodial sentences as a result of the psychological research in this area.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 2 December 1991]: In her reply on 26 November at columns 445-46 to a Question from the hon. Member about the psychological effect of custody on young offenders, my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, the Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold), mentioned three research studies. The detention centre order, which was the subject of the first study, was abolished by the Criminal Justice Act 1988. We have no plans to change courts' custodial sentencing powers in the light of the other two reports, but are considering what lessons they may hold for our regimes and working practices.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young offenders were transferred from Hewell Grange to the young offenders institution at Holesley bay colony during September 1991.

Mrs. Rumbold: Twenty.

Mr. Gordon Warren

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a further report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the case of Mr. Gordon Warren; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In September this year, with my right hon. Friend's approval as police authority, the Metropolitan police made Mr. Warren a further and final offer of an ex-gratia payment of £70,000. I understand from the Commissioner that Mr. Warren rejected the offer.

Bail Hostels

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department has carried out any research into the impact of bail hostels on local communities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Home Office knows of no such research and there are currently no plans for any to be carried out.

Correspondence

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date he received the letter dated 4 July 1991 from the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington, concerning Mr. A. P. Faulkner; on what date he sent a substantive reply; and what factors determined the length of time it took to provide the substantive reply.

Mrs. Rumbold: The hon. Member's letter was received on 5 July and a reply was sent on 28 November. I very much regret the delay in replying. This arose from several factors including the need to involve three prison service headquarters units based in London and Birmingham, and a backlog of casework in the prison service's medical directorate. It also proved difficult to obtain a medical report on Mr. Faulkner because it was necessary to transfer him, and his medical records, three times during this period.

North Tyneside

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will detail ministerial visits from his Department to North Tyneside in (a) 1990 and (b) 1991; and give details of meetings with representatives of the local authority which occurred during these visits.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: In June 1990 my predecessor visited magistrates at Tynemouth and the victim support scheme in North Shields. I visited North Tyneside on 1 November this year when I went to North Shields police station and a local probation hostel and toured the Meadow Well estate during which I met representatives of the Northumbria police authority and of the local probation committee.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what have been the percentage changes in police staffing levels for North Tyneside local authority area between 1977 and 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is for the chief constable to decide how available manpower should be deployed around the force area, within the total police establishment authorised by the Home Secretary. I understand from the chief constable that in December 1977 there were 305 police officers in the North Tyneside division. By December 1990 this had increased to 436 officers, an increase of 43 per cent. or 131 officers. Separate figures for North Tyneside metropolitan district are not available.

Electoral Register

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many electoral registration officers in England and Wales are scrutinising the electoral register for foreign sounding names and thereafter asking each voter so identified to sign a declaration that they are British subjects; and if this is being done on his advice.

Mrs. Rumbold: We are not aware of any electoral registration officer in England or Wales who has adopted such a procedure; we have not issued any advice to that effect.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what have been the year-on-year changes since 1977 of recorded crime and juvenile crime in (a) north Tyneside, (b) the Meadow Well estate, (c) the northern region and (d) the United Kingdom.

Mr. John Patten: The available information for the Northumbria police force area is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales". Chapter 2 gives information on recorded crime and chapter 5 on juvenile offending. Corresponding figures for the northern region and the United Kingdom are published annually in Regional Trends. Commentary on crime in North Tyneside and Blyth police division is contained in the annual reports of the chief constable of the Northumbria police force. Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Police Records

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the indexes held by SO5, the miscellaneous force indexes branch of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner that the miscellaneous force indexes branch holds the juvenile index, the missing persons index and the central index of prostitutes and adult cautions.

Football Matches

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the powers of the police to determine the day and time football matches are to take place.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. The scheduling and kick-off time of football matches are a matter for the football authorities, which very sensibly will wish to respect the advice of the police and the other emergency services.

Prisons (Private Sector)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for further private sector involvement in the prison system.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: On 11 July 1990, my right hon. Friend the then Home Secretary announced that preparations to reorganise arrangements for court escorts, custody and security were to proceed. Subsequently, the Criminal Justice Act 1991 made provision for these services to be contracted out to the private sector. A recent detailed study commissioned by the Home Office recommended that England and Wales should be divided into 10 areas for the court escort and custody service and I have now decided that the first of these to be contracted out should be Humberside and the east midlands. All movements of prisoners to and from courts in the area, except high security prisoners, will be carried out under the contract. Invitations to tender are expected to be issued next year and it is hoped that the service will be under private sector management from early in 1993, subject to the receipt of satisfactory tenders. Consideration is also being given to a phased programme of contracting out to cover other areas.

The present complex and overlapping arrangements, whereby both police and prison officers are responsible for escorting prisoners, inevitably leads to duplication of effort and consequently inefficiency. The contracting out of this work to private sector personnel, who will of course be required to be properly trained and security vetted, will free police and prison officers for tasks which make more use of their skills and training.

I have also decided to seek the agreement of Parliament to the contracting out of the management of another prison, Blakenhurst, currently being constructed near Redditch in Hereford and Worcester. I hope to be able to lay an order before the House in the spring. This follows the success of the recent tendering exercise for Wolds remand prison which demonstrated that the private sector has much to offer. A number of tenderers showed that they were capable of undertaking the task of operating a prison establishment securely, efficiently and humanely.

I believe that it is right to extend contracting out to another type of prison: both the prison service and the private sector will be able to learn from this experience. Blakenhurst will be a local prison and will therefore hold remand prisoners, like Wolds, but also some convicted prisoners. The capacity of the prison, due to open early in 1993, will be 649. It is not designed to hold high security prisoners.

I hope that the two projects will maintain the momentum of the contracting-out initiative in the prison system.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Telephone Services

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Lord President of the Council (1) what has been the total cost of calls to telephone premium rate services in the House of Commons for each month since 1986;

(2) what has been the total number of premium rate services telephone units recorded on House of Commons telephones in each month since 1986.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 25 November 1991]: I regret that this information is not available.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Lord President of the Council when the call barring of telephone premium rate services on the House of Commons telephone system took effect.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 25 November 1991]: The barring of premium rate services took effect on 1 August 1991.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance Fund

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of total receipts to the national insurance fund came from central Government in each year since 1961.

Mr. Jack: The table shows the relevant percentages for Treasury supplements as a proportion of contribution receipts:

Claim Forms

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the number of pages and questions on each claim form referred to in the answer on 7 February 1991, Official Report, column 246-47.

Miss Widdecombe: The composition of claim forms is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Disability

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many disabled people are currently employed in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: As at 1 June 1991, the Department of Social Security employed 1,465 people who were registered as disabled. There is no information on staff with disabilities who choose not to register.

Pensions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of pensioners who are wholly dependent upon the state pension have been eligible for income support in each of the last 10 years.

Miss Widdecombe: This information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the substituuion for the state pension of income support.

Miss Widdecombe: Income support provides flexible, comprehensive and effective help for people on low incomes who are not in remunerative work. It can be a supplement to, but not a substitute for retirement pension.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many state pensioners are entitled to income support but do not claim; and what steps his Department is currently taking to ensure that those eligible do claim.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not currently available. Estimates for the take-up of income support will be provided when the next statistics on the take-up of income-related benefits are published. The Department makes every effort to ensure that people are able to make informed choices on whether to claim benefit.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on trends in the percentage of pensioners wholly dependent on the state pension who are eligible for income support.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on those trends is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, but poorer pensioners generally have gained under this Government. The real net equivalent incomes of the poorest 20 per cent. have gone up on average by 15 per cent. from 1979 to 1988. The proportion of pensioners in the lowest 20 per cent. of income ranges has fallen from 38 per cent. in 1979 to 28 per cent. in 1986.

EC Social Directives

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all directives from the European Community issued in the last 10 years which are (a) now active in the field of British social security and (b) under consideration.

Mr. Jack: The following directives issued in the last 10 years are currently active in the field of social security.

1. Council directive 79/7/EEC of 19 December 1978 on the progressive implementation of the principle of equal treatment for men and women in matters of social security; and

2. Council directive 86/378/EEC of 24 July 1986 on the implementation of the principle of equal treatment for men and women in occupational social security schemes.

The necessary legislation has already been enacted.

The DSS, although not the lead Department, is currently involved in negotiations concerning proposed directives on the protection of pregnant women; on atypical work; on the protection of young people at work; and on pension funds.

EC (Visits)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the visits he, his Ministers and senior officials have made to European Community countries in the last year giving the main subject for discussion and the person involved in each case.

Mr. Jack: Since 1 January this year I have visited Ireland, the Netherlands, France and Portugal to meet my opposite number in each country and to discuss common social security issues, in particular with regard to the European Community. I also attended an international seminar in Spain to discuss the future of social security in the European Community, where I met Ministers and officials from several European Community member states. In addition I attended three Social Affairs Council meetings. Mr. C. Blake (Solicitor) Visited the European Court of Justice in Luxembourg.

Miss E. Saxon (Solicitor)
Made two visits to the European Court of Justice and attended an EC/EFTA seminar in the Netherlands.

As the Minister responsible for internationl social security issues, I made all the ministerial visits but one within the Community. My right hon. Friend the Minister of State discussed matters both on social security and health during a visit to Germany, in his capacity as Minister with responsibility for disabled people.

Operation Scotcheck

(2) if he will make a statement on Operation Scotcheck carried out in Scotland on 13 November; if he will list the number of officers involved from each Department of Social Security district office in Scotland; what part was played in the operation by the Department of Social Security fraud section; what information was supplied by drivers stopped during the operation; how many of the drivers were interviewed by Department of Social Security staff on (a) 13 November and (b) subsequently; and what use was made of information supplied by the drivers.

Mr. Jack: The investigation of social security fraud is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member shortly and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Social Fund

Mr. Terry Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many social fund inspectors were employed on 31 August 1991;

(2) how many applications for review by a social fund inspector were outstanding for more than one month on 31 August 1991.

Mr. Scott: I am informed by the social fund commissioner that on 31 August 1991 there were 57 social fund inspectors employed and 2,401 review applications outstanding for more than one month.

Local Office, Market Harborough

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will establish a caller office in Market Harborough, to serve Market Harborough and the surrounding rural area.

Miss Widdecombe: The provision of caller offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff were involved in fraud investigation, inspection and enforcement in each section and each region for each kind of post during each month since September 1990; and what are the proposed changes to such staffing levels in each section and in each region for each type of post.

Mr. Jack: The number of staff employed investigating social security fraud is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. Mr. Bichard will write to the hon. Member shortly and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office. His reply will include information provided by the chief executive of the Contributions Agency.

EMPLOYMENT

North Tyneside

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what has been the year-on-year rise in unemployment between 1979 and November 1991 in (a) North Tyneside, (b) the Meadowell estate, (c) the northern region and (d) the United Kingdom;

(2) what has been the year-on-year rise in unemployment amongst young people between 1979 and November 1991 in (a) North Tyneside, (b) the Meadowell estate, (c) the northern region and (d) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Forth: The information requested can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library. Information for North Tyneside and the Meadowell estate is available from June 1983, on the unadjusted basis only.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will detail ministerial visits from his Department to North Tyneside in (a) 1990 and (b) 1991; and give details of meetings with representatives of the local authority which occurred during these visits.

Mr. Forth: Ministers of the Department of Employment have visited the North Tyneside area on 10 occasions during 1990 and 1991, as follows:

Date	Minister
23 January 1990	The right hon. Michael Howard QC MP
14 January 1990	Mr. Tim Eggar MP
25 October 1990	Mr. Robert Jackson MP
27 February 1991	Mr. Robert Jackson MP
9 May 1991	Mr. Eric Forth MP
14 May 1991	The Viscount Ullswater
23 May 1991	Mr. Robert Jackson MP
25 September 1991	The right hon. Michael Howard QC MP
14 November 1991	Mr. Robert Jackson MP

Those visits have been for a variety of purposes and have included meetings with a wide range of people connected with the North Tyneside area. The visit on 14 November 1991 involved a meeting with the Meadowell steering group, which includes among its members two representatives of North Tyneside metropolitan borough council.

Labour and Social Affairs Council

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the outcome of the meeting of the Labour and Social Affairs Council held in Brussels on 3 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The Council held its first discussion of the draft working time directive. The United Kingdom recorded its concern at the damage which the Commission proposal would cause, not only to British industry and workers, but to the competitiveness of Community business in the world market. Most other member states registered difficulties with the proposal. After considering a number of detailed aspects of the draft directive, the Council concluded that a decision could not be taken on the current text. The proposal has been remitted for further consideration at official level.

A number of other proposals were agreed. The Council reached political agreement on a directive on safety signs in the workplace. Amending regulations on social security for migrant workers were approved, as was a recommendation on child care. A declaration on sexual harassment was endorsed subject to United Kingdom parliamentary reserve. A Commission report on poverty was noted.

The draft directive on European works councils and a recommendation on minimum resources for social protection schemes were both discussed, and they were referred back for further work by officials after several member states expressed disagreement with a number of the provisions.

This meeting again demonstrated that the existing treaty enables sensible progress to be made. Out of the 32 proposals put forward by the Commission under the social action programme, 18 have already been agreed by the Council or, where appropriate, the Commission.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Trade and Technology Transfer

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what forum exists for dialogue between the European Community and the Arab states on issues of trade and technology transfer.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The European Community's co-operation agreements with the Mashraq, Maghreb—except Libya—and the Gulf Co-operation Council provide a framework for trade and technology transfer. These and other matters related to the agreements are discussed at co-operation councils, which meet regularly at ministerial level.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions are ongoing between the European Community and the Gulf Co-operation Council on the subject of trade and technology transfer.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The 1988 co-operation agreement between the EC and the Gulf Co-operation Council (GCC) provides a framework for trade and technology transfer and commits both sides to opening negotiations for a free trade agreement (FTA). EC and GCC Ministers discussed these issues in May. Since it came into force in 1990, the co-operation agreement's main focus has been on an FTA. A negotiating mandate was agreed by the Foreign Affairs Council in December 1989 and subsequently amended on 1 October 1991. Negotiations are expected to resume in January 1992.

European Community Environment Directives

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has regarding the number, type and range of complaints and petitions made by United Kingdom citizens to the European Commission since 1979 on the implementation, or failure of implementation, of EC directives and regulations on environmental matters by Her Majesty's Government; and what procedures exist for the communication by the Commission to EC member state Governments of the details of such complaints or petitions.

Mr. Garel-Jones: No procedure exists for communicating this information routinely to member states. To the extent, however, that the Commission takes up a complaint under the infractions procedure in article 169 of the treaty of Rome, details of it—though not its source—will be communicated to the member state concerned.

Maastricht Conference

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the opportunities which have been given to Parliament and its committees to consider the decisions to be taken on the Luxembourg text, the Dutch text or other items relating to the intergovernmental conference at Maastricht.

Mr. Garel-Jones: There have been two full debates covering the negotiations in the intergovernmental conferences on economic and monetary and political union, on 26 June and on 20-21 November. The House of Lords also held a debate on the negotiations on 25 November. The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs gave oral evidence to the Foreign Affairs Committee in advance of the Luxembourg and Maastricht European Councils on 12 June and 19 November. Ministers have been in regular contact with the Scrutiny Committees of both Houses.

Wilton Park

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which British hon. Members have participated in Wilton Park conferences in the last two years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [pursuant to his reply, 12 November 1991, c. 481]: My right hon. Friend the Member for Wallasey (Mrs. Chalker) should be added to the list of conference participants for 1991.

DEFENCE

Housing

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to delay the discharge of members of the armed forces until he is satisfied that sufficient housing exists for them in civilian life.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Individual service personnel selected for redundancy will receive adequate notice of discharge. We expect that the majority of those affected will be able to make suitable alternative civilian housing arrangements.

Service Pensions

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will establish a minimum level of service pension for each rank and period of service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. The rank held, the length of reckonable service given, and the circumstances under which service is terminated are all factors which are taken into account in determining retired pay and pensions. Once in issue retired pay or pensions are protected against the effects of inflation through index-linking arrangements.

Direct Fire Weapons Effects Simulator

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress towards ordering further research into, or production of, the direct fire weapons effects simulator.

Mr. Alan Clark: I expect to be able to make an announcement on the award of a supply and support contract early in the new year.

Redundant Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to offer United Kingdom expertise to the Government of the Union of Sovereign States, the former Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, on the physical protection and dismantlement of redundant nuclear weapons, along the lines of the aid plan put to the United States Congress by Senators Nunn and Lugar.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government continue to keep under review possible areas of assistance and advice to the Soviet Union.

Terrorists (Compensation Claims)

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is Ministry of Defence practice to settle out-of-court those claims for compensation made by terrorists or their families; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Any claim for compensation made against the Ministry of Defence is considered on the facts of each case and settled in accordance, where appropriate, with legal advice.

Daniel Doherty

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what award of compensation has been made to the widow of Daniel Doherty who was shot dead by the security services at Gransha hospital in Londonderry on 6 December 1984; what is the amount which has been awarded; how the award was made; and by whom the award is to be paid.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The claim for compensation made by the widow of Daniel Doherty has been concluded on terms endorsed between the claimant and the Ministry of Defence. The terms require that the agreement is confidential to both parties.

Training Areas

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the requirement for additional Army training land in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom as a whole, following the re-alignment and redeployment of forces as outlined in "Britain's Army for the 90s."

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Work is currently under way to examine future training needs in the United Kingdom that will result from the restructuring of the Army and drawdown from Germany.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have been made to the areas, ownership or rights status and types of authorised training in the Galloway and Kinlochleven training areas over the past three years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the acreage, dates of acquisition and types of training operations conducted for each of the training areas in Scotland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Apart from bombing ranges all training areas are used as small arms ranges and/or for dry training. Details are as follows:

Gibraltar

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to rationalise defence activities in Gibraltar; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Final decisions on the scale of the future MOD involvement in Gibraltar have yet to be taken. It is, however, the intention to make savings of the order of 30 per cent. of manpower and expenditure during the next five years while at the same time reducing the landholding to 50 per cent. of that held in 1990. The main thrust of this will affect the Royal Air Force and it is the intention to have completed the contractorisation of many of the functions currently carried out by the RAF—including the running of the airfield—before the spring of 1995. There will also be some restructuring of the Royal Navy. In the light of the recent reorganisation of the land forces and the resultant expansion of the Gibraltar Regiment it is not planned to make any further major changes to its organisation, although some of its functions will be adjusted to mirror the changes in the other two services and the civilian work force.

SCOTLAND

Health Budgets

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the level of expenditure in Scotland on (a) the national health service, (b) the hospital and community health services current budget and (c) the family health services current budget adjusted for changes in input unit costs, in each year since 1970-71.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information in the format requested is not fully available. Details of gross expenditure in Scotland on the national health service, hospital and community health services (current) and family health services from 1974-75 to 1991-92, in cash terms and adjusted by the gross domestic product deflator, are given in the following tables.

SCOTLAND

Electoral Register

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many electoral registration officers in Scotland are scrutinising the electoral register for foreign sounding names and thereafter asking each voter so identified to sign a declaration that they are British subjects; and if this is being done on his advice.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Electoral registration officers have a responsibility, under the Representation of the People (Scotland) Regulations 1986, to satisfy themselves that the electoral register properly contains the names of those entitled to be registered. It is for electoral registration officers themselves to decide how they should fulfil this requirement.

Strathclyde Buses Ltd.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if a date has been determined for the privatisation of Strathclyde Buses Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The sale of Strathclyde Buses Ltd. is a matter for Strathclyde regional council in the first instance. I understand that negotiations for a sale are currently under way between the council and the management employee buy-out team at the company. The Secretary of State's consent will be required for the sale.

Youth Training

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what number of (a) Easter and (b) summer school-leavers in 1991 in (i) the parliamentary constituency of Greenock and Port Glasgow and (ii) Strathclyde have been waiting more than (1) four weeks and (2) three months to commence placements on courses under the youth training guarantee scheme.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information requested is not collected by the careers service in Strathclyde. I have no power to instruct it to do so and, in any case, understand that it would involve it in disproportionate cost.

Operation Scotcheck

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement about Operation Scotcheck carried out in Scotland on 13 November; what was the role of (a) his Department and (b) the Health and Safety Executive; and whether any information obtained from the drivers has been passed to the fraud sections of the Department of Employment;

(2) if he will make a statement about his Department's involvement in operation Scotcheck carried out in Scotland on 13 November;

(3) what approval was given by his office to Operation Scotcheck on 13 November; if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Central region police on Operation Scotcheck; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Operation Scotcheck was a joint police and Health and Safety Executive initiative and my Department was not involved in this exercise. HSE inspectors were present at all the locations where this operation was mounted. The inspectors were checking compliance with the requirements of regulations concerning the transport of hazardous substances or goods by road. The police, as is customary in these operations, invited other Government Departments with particular interests to be present at the various checkpoints. It is not my intention to ask for a report from the police, nor will any information obtained from drivers during the exercise be passed to the Scottish Office.

Written Answer to Questions

TRANSPORT

Rail Services

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much grant he proposes to pay local authorities in west Yorkshire in the coming year for supporting rail services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Assistance to local authority programmes is given through revenue support grant paid by the Department of the Environment. For 1992-93, £105 million has been set aside within the All Other Services block for distribution to the six English metropolitan county areas in view of their responsibility for supporting local rail services. The amount for west Yorkshire is £18,917,910.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ensure that any costs arising from leasing required by him for rolling stock for use in the west Yorkshire rail electrification scheme are fully covered by grant paid by him to local authorities in west Yorkshire.

Mr. Freeman: The costs of operating leases for this rolling-stock will be one of the factors taken into account in future years in calculating the standard spending assessments of the west Yorkshire metropolitan district councils in respect of local rail services.

Docklands Light Railway

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now set up a full public inquiry into the problems associated with the docklands light railway.

Mr. Freeman: No.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much the London Docklands development corporation will pay for the acquisition of the docklands light railway and its assets.

Mr. Freeman: The transfer would be arranged for a nominal amount.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if it is his intention that the London Regional Transport Act 1984 should continue to apply to the docklands light railway once its transference to the London Docklands development corporation is completed.

Mr. Freeman: No. The Act applies in respect of railway services provided by London Regional Transport, or by a subsidiary company of theirs, or by another person in pursuance of an agreement with London Regional Transport under section 3 of the Act.

Thameslink

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what requests he has received from British Rail for permission to deposit a Bill to expand the Thameslink services; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail sought consent recently to deposit a Bill for works in south London to enhance Thameslink. Although the scheme has a number of very attractive features, the Government concluded that the Bill was premature. My right hon. Friend has told the chairman that the best way forward is to consider the project alongside other priorities in the context of British Rail's next corporate plan.

ENVIRONMENT

Revenue Support Grant, Sunderland

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the value of revenue support grant for the borough of Sunderland at current prices for each year from 1979.

Mr. Key: The information is as follows:

1991-92 prices

	£ million
Rate support grant
1979-80	152·6
1980-18	[1]151·5
1981-82	[2]114·3
1982-83	108·3
1983-84	104·4
1984-85	99·9
1985-86	[3]96·8
1986-87	99·7
1987-88	103·5
1988-89	108·0
1989-90	100·6
Revenue support grant
1990-91	[4,5]88·8
1991-92	73·6

Note: The information given is not available on a comparable basis for all years, i.e.:

[1] In 1979-80 and 1980-81 no rate support grant (RSG) payments were made to metropolitan county councils and Sunderland's rate support grant was correspondingly higher in those years.

[2] In 1981-82 to 1985-86 inclusive, rate support grant payments were made to metropolitan counties (and other upper tier authorities) and Sunderland's rate support grant was correspondingly lower.

[3] In April 1986, the metropolitan county councils were abolished and arrangements for paying grant changed accordingly.

[4] In April 1990, the new local authority finance system was introduced and revenue support grant replaced rate support grant as the main central Government grant to local authorities. They are not directly comparable. The 1990-91 figure includes £11·25 million (at 1991-92 prices) which Sunderland received under the area safety net.

[5] Under the local government finance system introduced in 1990 the level of revenue support grant is affected, inter alia, by the amount of non-domestic rates distributed from the national pool. In 1990-91 Sunderland's receipts (at 1991-92 prices) from the pool were £62·7 million and in 1991-92 they will be £75·8 million. For comparison, in 1989-90 the authority's non-domestic rate income was £38·0 million (again at 1991-92 prices).

Council House Sales

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the capital receipts for the sale of council houses by Wandsworth council, received by the council since the introduction of the right to buy.

Mr. Yeo: The total discounted values of all sales of houses and flats for each year from 1980-81, as reported by the London borough of Wandsworth, are listed in the table. Actual cash receipts in any year will depend on the extent to which the sales were financed by loans from the authority.

Wandsworth

Council Tax

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has had about the proposed council tax.

Mr. Key: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend, the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities on Wednesday 4 December 1991 to my hon. Friend the Member for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway) at column 252.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will deposit in the Library an analysis of the estimated distributional impact using the Treasury's inter-departmental group on tax-benefit modelling's tax-benefit model of the proposed council tax in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales using the illustrative bills published by the responsible Departments, which is, as far as possible, comparable with appendix 7 of HC 289 of Session 1990-91 and the answer of 22 May 1991, Official Report, column 471;

(2) if he will publish a list of those parliamentary answers on the impact of (a) the council tax and (b) other local government tax options which have been based, in part or in whole, upon evidence derived from the Treasury's interdepartmental group on tax-benefit modelling's tax-benefit model.

Mr. Key: Information to indicate the distribution of households with one, two, and three or more adults by region has been provided. No answers have been given on the impact of the council tax using this model.

Since 1988 the Department of the Environment has made extensive use of the inter-departmental group on tax-benefit modelling's tax-benefit model to illustrate the distributional impact of the community charge, and the effect of the transitional relief and community charge reduction schemes. A large number of parliamentary answers have been provided which are reliant to some degree on information from the model. We do not however, intend to publish any analysis of the impact of the council tax derived from the model.

Environmental Protection Agency

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the organisations with which he has consulted regarding the establishment of an environmental protection agency.

Mr. Baldry: Copies of the consultation paper on the Environment Agency have been sent to the chief executives of all local authorities in England and Wales, and to some 800 other organisations and individuals. A list of these has been placed in the Library. Requests for the paper are still being received.

Non-domestic Ratepayers

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the total to date of tribunal awards to non-domestic ratepayers in respect of rates they deem overpaid and over which range of years they relate; what authorities are being debited such sums in excess of £1 million; if he will name the relevant sums for each; and what consideration he has given to excluding such sums from the totals of his current standard spending assessments for the years 1992-93.

Mr. Key: This information is not available.

Loan Guarantees

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will instruct his officials to discuss with building societies and other financial institutions the guarantees they require to advance loans for the repurchase of homes by residents of Hanover square, Bradford.

Mr. Yeo: The Government do not have a statutory power to direct mortgage lenders to provide mortgages to particular types of borrowers. It is up to the lender to decide what conditions should be met for lending prudently; building societies in particular have to safeguard the position of investors.

City Challenge

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 26 November, Official Report, column 473, what proportion of funding for inner-city programmes will be topsliced for city challenge schemes from 1993 onwards; and what conclusions his Department has reached with regard to the implications for the urban programme budget and individual urban programme initiatives as a result of topslicing for city challenge schemes.

Mr. Portillo: No decision has yet been made on the amount of funds that will be available for 1993 onwards.

Docklands Light Railway

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out what the role, responsibilities and duties of the London Docklands development corporation will be with regard to the operation and investment strategy of the docklands light railway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The London Docklands development corporation will exercise a strategic role in respect of the Docklands Light Railway. Day to day management will continue to be the responsibility of DLR Ltd.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what budget will be made available to the London Docklands development corporation to (a) acquire the docklands light railway and (b) operate and manage the docklands light railway.

Mr. Portillo: The transfer of the Docklands Light Railway from London Regional Transport to London Docklands development corporation will be for a nominal sum. There will be an accompanying transfer of the resources required to operate and manage the railway.

Environmental Protection Act

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to introduce those sections of part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 which prevent the surrender of a disposal licence until a certificate of completion has been issued by the relevant authority.

Mr. Baldry: Disposal licences are issued under section 5 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974, and there is no provision in that Act to prevent their surrender. Disposal licences will be replaced by waste management licences granted under section 36 of the Environmental Protection Act. The provisions of section 39, including the issue of certificates of completion, will govern the surrender of those waste management licences that are site licences.

Under the target timetable for the implementation of part II of the Act, announced on 25 June 1991 by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside, these waste management licensing provisions of the Act are due to come into effect in April 1993. The consultation paper "Improving environmental quality—the Government's proposals for a new, independent Environment Agency" issued on 3 October 1991, stated that the timing of these provisions will need to be reviewed in the light of the emerging timetable for the agency.

Travelling Showpeople

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to issue fresh guidance about travelling showpeople.

Mr. Yeo: A circular is being published today. It offers guidance to local planning authorities about making provision for travelling showpeople in their developments plans, gives advice on the handling of planning applications and breaches of planning control, and encourages showpeople and local planning authorities to work together to reduce the risk of conflict.

Showpeople need a permanent, secure base from which to operate, establish their homes, and store and test their fairground equipment. Although they cannot expect preferential treatment, showpeople are entitled to look to local authorities to take account of their needs when determining planning policies.

River Ribble

Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to improve pollution monitoring of the River Ribble; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 4 December 1991]: Monitoring of river quality is a matter for the National Rivers Authority (NRA). Discharge consents issued by the NRA and the results of its monitoring of the River Ribble are entered on public registers held by the NRA's north west region.

Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP) is initiating a monitoring programme for processes it regulates through integrated pollution control under the Environmental Protection Act 1990, the results of which will be placed on public registers held by HMIP.

North Tyneside

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will detail ministerial visits from his Department to North Tyneside in (a) 1990 and (b) 1991; and give details of meetings with representatives from the local authority which occurred during these visits;

(2) if he will detail the year-on-year changes in housing improvement programme allocations to North Tyneside council from 1978 to 1991 at current prices;

(3) if he will detail the year-on-year changes in block allocations of Government grant to North Tyneside council from 1978 to 1991 at current prices.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 5 December 1991]: I will write to the hon. Member.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Meals

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to reinstate nutritional guidelines for school meals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: It is for local education authorities to decide on the nutritional balance of the school meals they offer.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will bring forward proposals to require local education authorities to ensure that drinking water is available at lunch times to pupils eating school meals or packed lunches; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: It is for local education authorities to decide what milk, meals or other refreshment to offer to its pupils.

School Governors

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many places on school governing bodies there are; and how many are currently unfilled.

Mr. Fallon: There are approximately 300,000 places on school governing bodies in England and Wales. A survey published by the National Foundation for Educational Research in November 1990 indicated a vacancy rate of just under 4 per cent.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money has been spent on training parents to be school governors; how many parents have been trained; and how many will be ineligible to remain school governors as a result of his proposals to prevent teachers being governors at the school attended by their own children.

Mr. Fallon: Funds for the support and training of school governors are available through the grants for education support and training (GEST) programme. In the current financial year £7·1 million of LEA expenditure is being supported, and this is planned to increase to £10 million next year. No information is collected centrally about the proportion of this sum spent on parent governors, nor about the number of teachers who are parent governors.

Teacher Qualifications

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his answer of 27 November, Official Report, column 535-36, if he will calculate the costs of educating and training a student for (a) the postgraduate certificate of education and (b) the articled teacher scheme with the average cost of a first degree included, so that the totals are comparable with the figure for the bachelor of education.

Mr. Fallon: The average cost of training a student for the postgraduate certificate of education is about £27,000 and for the articled teacher scheme about £40,500, inclusive of the average cost of a first degree. As in my previous answer these costs take into account institutional funding and student support, and, in the case of articled teachers, the additional expenditure incurred by participating local education authorities and supported through the GEST programme. The bursary for articled teachers, which is the main item covered by the GEST programme, is the equivalent of about a year of a student grant and a first year of a teacher's salary.

Higher and Further Education

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements he has made to prescribe expenditure under section 133 of the Education Reform Act 1988.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Section 133 of the Education Reform Act empowers the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council (PCFC) to make payments to any local education authority and the governing body of any institution designated under section 129 of the Act in respect of persons employed or formerly employed in the provision of further or higher education. These are payments to meet certain compensation and premature retirement liabilities. The terms of section 133, taken together with section 114 of the Education Act 1944, mean that regulations made by the Secretary of State need to be made to prescribe the classes or descriptions of such payments.

Payments totalling some £60 million, all for the purposes specified in section 133, were made by the PCFC between April 1989 and September 1991 without appropriate regulations being in place. In order to provide for future payments, SI 1991/2307 was brought into force on 19 October 1991. Clause 63 of the Further and Higher Education Bill would regularise past payments.

The Government will also propose an amendment to the Bill during its passage through Parliament to regularise payments made by the PCFC to certain bodies other than local education authorities and governing bodies, and to provide for the proposed Higher Education Funding Council (England) to make similar payments.

HMI (French Visit)

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the report from Her Majesty's inspectors following their visit to France.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 14 November 1991, column 625]: The HMI report on aspects of primary education in France will be published today, 6 December 1991.

EMPLOYMENT

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take action to deal with the discrepancy between the Wakefield TEC and the Leeds TEC in their treatment of special needs training.

Mr. Forth: TECs and local enterprise companies are required to provide appropriate facilities and support for trainees who have special training needs. My right hon. and learned Friend is satisfied that adequate provision is available in the Wakefield and Leeds TEC areas.

The Wakefield TEC policy is to integrate trainees with special needs into mainstream provision designed to meet individual requirements. On the other hand, Leeds TEC has chosen to contract with several providers who cater specifically for trainees with special needs.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what advice has been given to training and enterprise councils by his Department's solicitors concerning the legality of running employment action under TECs existing memoranda of association; what powers TECs have to revise their articles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: TECs were advised to consider whether their powers were wide enough to deliver employment action, and to amend their memorandum of association if they considered it necessary to do so.

TECs are private companies and it is for them to decide if such changes are needed and, under the terms of their contract with us, to seek our agreement.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will, as a matter of urgency, meet representatives of the Wakefield TEC to discuss the circumstances of the 400 16 to 18-year-olds within the Wakefield district who currently have no training placement and are ineligible for DSS benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Department's officials are already in contact with Wakefield training and enterprise council which is co-operating with the local careers service and has advised that it will be able to meet demand for youth training places in its area.

Business Statistics

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the change in the number of businesses in (a) Amber Valley, (b) Derbyshire, (c) nationally and (d) the east midlands between 1979 and the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Forth: The information requested, based on VAT registration data, is as follows:

Number of business registered for VAT

	end-1979	end-1990	Net change	(per cent.)
Amber valley (district)	2,400	3,200	800	33·5
Derbyshire	18,800	24,900	6,100	32·4
East midlands	88,200	116,300	28,200	31·9
United Kingdom	1,288,900	1,709,300	420,400	32·6

Working Hours

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average number of hours worked (a) excluding overtime and (b) including overtime, of each decile income group of earners, and of each percentile within the lowest 20 per cent.

Mr. Forth: Figures of hours worked by decile and percentile income groups are not readily available and would incur disproportionate cost to compile.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be (a) the first year and (b) the full year revenue yield from abolishing the national insurance upper earnings limit in Great Britain in (i) 1991-92, (ii) 1992-93, for (1) both employees and the self-employed and (2) only employees, and giving figures separately for the number of men and women who would be affected in each case.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is set out in the table:

	Estimated revenue yield		Estimated numbers of people affected
	First year £ billion	Full year £ billion	Men million	Women million
1991-92
(employees plus self-employed)	2·4	2·9	3·0	0·4

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the reasons for the withdrawal of the proposal to change the definition of full-time work for unemployment benefit purposes from 24 hours to 16 hours.

Mr. Jack: The Government proposed that the definition of employment in unemployment benefit regulations should be 16 hours per week in line with the change from April 1992 in the definition of remunerative work for income support and family credit purposes.

We received a report from the Social Security Advisory Committee and other representations about the effect of the proposed change to the regulations. Whilst the total number of disqualifications arising from the proposal would have been very small, a few people ineligible for family credit would have faced a difficult choice had disqualification been imposed for declining an offer of between 16 and 24 hours employment. Consequently we decided not to pursue the alignment of hours of work in this area.

Cold Weather

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of people of pensionable age qualify for help under the cold weather payments scheme.

Mr. Scott: We estimate that 1·5 million people of pensionable age are eligible to receive a cold weather payment, representing 14·7 per cent. of the total number of people of pensionable age. Every income support recipient over 60 years of age, not just those of pensionable age, qualifies for help under the cold weather payments scheme as well as recipients who have a child under five in the household or are entitled to the disability premium.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what advice his Department gives to pensioners regarding keeping warm.

Mr. Scott: For the fifth year running, the Department is a major participant in the Government's "Keep Warm Keep Well" campaign, a joint venture with other Government Departments and the voluntary sector. The aim of the campaign is to advise elderly people and other vulnerable groups about how best to cope with cold weather and where help is available, including details of the social security cold weather payments scheme.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations his Department has received regarding the problems faced by older people on low incomes in the winter months.

Mr. Scott: We have received many representations on this issue and on 14 June I announced important improvements to the cold weather payments scheme.

Interest on Capital

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what notional rate of interest is assumed to be received by those with capital above the present social security limits when assessing entitlement to social security benefits and relief from the community charge.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle-Upon-Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 6 November at column 149.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Longest Determinate Sentence

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the longest determinate sentence being served by any prisoner, including sentences running consecutively, for offences other than terrorist offences.

Mrs. Rumbold: According to the records held centrally, on 30 June 1991 the longest determinate sentence being served in a prison service establishment in England and Wales for a non-terrorist offence was 38 years.

Victim Support, Lancashire

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement giving the amount of support for victims of crime in Lancashire from 1987 to the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: The table gives details of the victim support schemes in Lancashire which are funded by the Home Office to provide help and support for victims of crime.

Financial Year	Number of schemes operating	Total amount of Home Office funding	Number of posts supported[1]	Number of cases referred to schemes by police
1987-88	7	66,869	10	7,467
1988-89	8	105,561	11	9,828
1989-90	8	148,499	13	13,830
1990-91	8	159,267	14	20,643

[1] Includes both full-time and part-time posts.

It is not possible to identify how much of the very substantial sums paid in compensation to victims of violent crime by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board went to victims in Lancashire. The total compensation paid in Great Britain has risen from £52 million in 1987-88 to over £125 million this financial year.

Correspondence

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the target time of his Department for answering letters from hon. Members regarding immigration cases.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under current arrangements, we aim to answer letters on immigration cases within divisional targets ranging between 21 and 50 working days. Target dates for the answering of correspondence from hon. Members are currently under review.

Trespass

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make it his policy to extend powers of eviction to mass trespasses;

(2) if he will seek to amend the Public Order Act 1986 to make mass trespass on common land into a specific offence, and in section 39 to reduce to three the number of trespassing vehicles and allow police to remove vehicles and to arrest offenders without warrant during mass trespasses;

(3) If he will make it his Department's policy to amend guidelines issued to police forces on trespassing, in order to allow police forces to intervene in cases where trespassers are moved on but are thought likely to resume their trespass elsewhere.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Trespass is essentially a matter for the civil law, but section 39 of the Public Order Act 1986 was introduced specifically to give police powers to deal with aggravated trespass. We recently conducted a thorough public review of section 39. On 22 May the Home Secretary announced his conclusion: no change to the law was required but guidance would be issued to the police on the application of section 39. This was done on 22 May. The decision whether or not to use their powers remains entirely an operational matter for the senior officer at the scene.

Terrorist Funds

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to conclude an agreement with India covering the confiscation of terrorist funds; if the agreement will be subject to debate or approval by the House; and if he will place relevant information, including the heads of agreement which are being negotiated, in the Library.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I hope to conclude early in 1992 an agreement with the Government of the Republic of India concerning the tracing, restraint and confiscation of the proceeds and instruments of crime and terrorist funds. The agreement could not be brought into force without orders in council under the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986, the Criminal Justice Act 1988, the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 and the Criminal Justice (International Co-operation) Act 1990. Each of these orders would require the affirmative resolution of both Houses of Parliament. The text of the agreement is still under discussion but will be published in due course.

HEALTH

NHS Reforms

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been spent (a) on the national health service reforms and (b) on sustaining the new market structures.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost to date of the Government's reforms of the national health service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Around £380 million has been made available to the NHS for implementing the NHS reforms this year. This is in addition to sums of £300 million and £80 million provided in 1990-91 and 1989-90. All this money is in addition to that needed to maintain service levels. An analysis of how this money is expected to be spent is shown in the table.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the cost of eradicating national health service waiting lists.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is reducing waiting time, rather than the overall list size, which is important. This is a key national health service objective backed by additional resources through the £37 million waiting list fund. The drive to eliminate excessive waiting is picking up speed. In the six months to September 1991, the number of patients waiting over a year fell by 24 per cent., and the number waiting over two years by 47 per cent.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Disability

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many disabled people are currently employed in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Counting part-time staff as half units, the Department employs 141½ staff who are registered disabled persons. This does not include staff with disabilities who have chosen not to register.

The Department is fully committed to the policies and principles set out in the code of practice on the employment of people with disabilities in the civil service. Officials are making every effort to ensure that the policies are implemented effectively and sensitively, in order to increase access for people with disabilities to the full range of recruitment and career development opportunities available, irrespective of whether they have chosen to register. The Department also participates in schemes designed to increase opportunities for the employment and retention of people with disabilities such as the sheltered placement scheme.

Deer Farming

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the legislation covering deer farming in Great Britain.

Mr. Curry: The Tuberculosis (Deer) Order 1989 and the Tuberculosis (Deer) Notice of Intended Slaughter and Compensation Order 1989 cover farmed deer. The Welfare of Livestock (Prohibited Operations) Regulations 1982 prohibit the taking of deer antlers in velvet. The Deer Act 1991 mainly covers wild deer but some if its provisions are of relevance to farmed deer. Other legislation not specific to deer but covering livestock, animal health, welfare and slaughtering generally would also apply to farmed deer. In addition, an EC directive concerning public health and animal health problems affecting the production and placing on the market of rabbit meat and farmed game (91/495/EEC) has been agreed. Member states are required to implement this directive by 1 January 1993.

Pigs

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received following the postponement of the European Commission's report on sow confinement conditions.

Mr. Maclean: The recently agreed Council Directive on pig welfare requires a review to be carried out, particularly on the confinement of sows, by the end of 1997. The United Kingdom voted against the directive on the grounds that it should have phased out stall systems as well as tethers and that the time scale for Community action should have been shorter. We have received numerous representations from the industry, welfare interests and individuals agreeing with this view.

We have made it clear that the Government will press for the review to be completed as soon as possible and for our high welfare standards to be adopted throughout the Community.

Staffing Levels

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the present staffing levels of his Department in each of the regions in England and Wales; and what steps he has taken to assure himself that these are sufficient to meet both current need and critical situations which arise from time to time.

Mr. Curry: Staff-in-post numbers in the English regions and in Wales on 2 December 1991 were as follows:

Region	[1]Staff in post
Eastern	818·0
Midland and West	1,000·5
Northern	675·0
South-Eastern	533·0
South-Western	844·0
Wales	189·0

[1] Non-industrial and industrial

Responsibility for ensuring the adequacy of staff numbers to deal with both routine and unexpected work lies in the first instance with local management, with input from headquarters in the case of more senior grades. In addition cyclical visits by staff inspectors give independent and objective assessment of the levels set. These visits are carried out in accordance with Treasury guidance on frequency, and the staff inspectors also provide an ad hoc consultancy service within the department as required.

These figures cover administrative, technical and professional staff in England, and professional and technical staff in Wales. (Administrative staff in the Principality come under the Welsh Office). These figures do not include officials who work outside London, but who are not part of the regional organisation structure, for example, Directorate of Fisheries Research.

Food Market Statistics

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the size of the retail food market in volume terms in each of the last five years to date.

Mr. Curry: The table provides estimates of the size of the food market derived from statistics on retail sales of food, confectionery and soft drinks. The current price estimates have been deflated by the food component of the retail prices index, 1986 = 100.

WALES

Factory Space

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many square metres of Welsh Development Agency factory property was sold in 1990-91 and in 1991-92 to the latest possible date; what was the total value of these sales; and what is the estimated total sale for 1991-92 and the total value.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

	Total size square metres	Total value £
a. 1990-91	63,480	11,716,792
b. 1 April 1991 to 30 November 1991	99,576	6,398,589
c. 1991-92 (estimated)	209,775	26,343,089

Sales of undeveloped land are not included in these figures.

Valleys Programme

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he includes in the aims of the valleys programme (a) the reduction of unemployment from the date of the programme's inception and (b) sustaining population numbers in the area covered by the programme.

Mr. David Hunt: Yes.

Learning Difficulties

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of places needed for adults with learning difficulties (a) in hospitals, (b) in other residential settings and (c) in the community in each county in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Estimated need and targets for service development are identified annually by county joint planning teams in their county plans.

National Health Service (Wales)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will detail the individuals, groups and organisations whom he regards as customers of the national health service in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Everyone who comes into contact with, or works for, the national health service is a customer of the NHS. Customers include patients, their friends and relatives, the staff of the NHS and the organisations who deal with the NHS.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy in respect of encouraging health authorities and national health service units in Wales to regard those they serve as patients or as customers.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: One of the three main aims of the strategic intent and direction for the NHS in Wales, launched in November 1989, is to develop a people-centred service. This means valuing people as individuals and managing services to this end.

This objective was developed in the all-Wales quality strategy, launched in April 1990. The strategy identified two types of customer of the NHS: external customers —in-patients and out-patients, domiciliary patients, the public and other organisations; internal customers—mainly those who work for the NHS.

The people-centred approach is an important feature of the patients charter for Wales. The charter informs patients of their rights and the standards they can expect within the NHS.

Health authorities and units are continually improving their service to the customers of the NHS within the overall Welsh Office strategy.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

"Spycatcher"

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Attorney-General what consideration he has given to the recent judgment of the European Court of Human Rights in the cases of The Sunday Times and others v. the United Kingdom and others.

The Attorney-General: I have considered the judgments carefully.

The background is that The Observer and The Guardian published reports in June 1986 on the Australian "Spycatcher" proceedings. The reports gave details of some of the contents of the manuscript of the book, "Spycatcher", by Peter Wright. I obtained an interlocutory injunction in the High Court on 11 July 1986 preventing The Observer and The Guardian from publishing further "Spycatcher" material. On 12 July 1987, The Sunday Times published extracts from the book. On 14 July 1987 the book was published in the United States. I obtained an interlocutory injunction in the High Court on 16 July 1987 preventing The Sunday Times from publishing further "Spycatcher" material. The House of Lords confirmed the interlocutory injunctions against the publishers of all three newspapers on 30 July 1987. At the hearing of the main action on 13 October 1988 the House of Lords discharged all the injunctions.

The European Court of Human Rights found that there was no breach of article 10 of the convention in respect of the injunctions imposed on the publishers of The Observer and The Guardian for the period up to publication of "Spycatcher" in the United States. The court found that there was a breach of article 10 of the convention in respect of the injunctions imposed on the publishers of The Observer and The Guardian for the period following publication in the United States. The court also found a breach of article 10 in respect of The Sunday Times injunctions, which were imposed when the book had been published in the United States and was being freely imported into this country.

In respect of the period up to 30 July 1987, the court found that the injunctions were necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security and for maintaining the authority of the judiciary. The court thus confirmed the key principle that the Crown was seeking to protect—namely, the right of the Crown to apply to the national courts to restrain publication of confidential material that is not already in the public domain when it is necessary to restrain publication for the protection of national security.

The court's ruling shows that material that has entered the public domain by whatever route has lost its confidentiality and that the further publication of such material cannot be restrained. That ruling is consistent with the conclusions of the House of Lords of 13 October 1988, which held that publication of extracts from the book could not be further restrained in the light of the widespread publication of the material that had already occurred. In those proceedings the House of Lords upheld a lifelong duty of confidentiality to the Crown on the part of members and former members of the security and intelligence services of the Crown. That important principle is not weakened by the judgments of the European Court of Human Rights.

The European Court of Human Rights also found that there was no breach of article 13 of the convention, which provides for everyone to have an effective remedy before a national authority, or of article 14, which provides that the enjoyment of the rights and freedoms set forth in the convention shall be secured without discrimination.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Autumn Statement

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update table D1 from the 1990 Autumn Statement Statistical Supplement (Cm 1520).

Mr. Maude: Some of the estimates of the costs of direct tax allowances and reliefs for 1990-91, included in the table referred to, have been revised and publication in "Inland Revenue Statistics 1991" is expected later this month. Estimates for 1991-92 will be published in the 1991 Autumn Statement Statistical Supplement early in the new year.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total inheritance tax yield in Great Britain and Northern Ireland in the latest year for which information is available.

Mr. Maude: The latest year for which information is available is 1990-91. Receipts in this year were £1,262 million for the United Kingdom, of which £56 million was collected in Northern Ireland. Much of the tax collected in Northern Ireland related to deaths in England and Wales.

National Insurance

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the revenue (a) in the first year and (b) in a full year, assuming this is introduced at the beginning of 1991-92, and (c) in the first year and (d) in a full year, assuming this is introduced at the beginning of 1992-93, from extending national insurance contributions to (1) use of credit cards and charge cards and (2) medical bills insurance, for employees who earn over £8,500, distinguishing separately employee contributions and employer contributions, estimating the total revenue yield and, in each case, the number of taxpayers who would be affected.

Mr. Maude: Such a charge on private medical insurance premiums paid by employers would effect some 500,000 taxpayers and would yield £10 million in employee contributions and £40 million in employer contributions in a full year at 1991-92 levels of earnings and benefits. These estimates are based on an employee contribution rate of 9 per cent. and an employer contribution rate of 10·4 per cent. and take account of the fact that many taxpayers who receive private medical insurance from their employers have earnings above the upper earnings limit. The yield in the first year would depend on the administrative arrangements made to collect the new charge. The yield for 1992-93 would depend upon the level of employer-provided benefits in that year.

Detailed information on the extent of the use by employees of credit cards and charge cards provided by employers is not available.

Corporation Tax

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total reduction in corporation tax receipts for provisions on doubtful sovereign debt owed to United Kingdom banks in 1990-91.

Mr. Maude: Corporation tax receipts in 1990-91 are provisionally estimated to be lower by about £650 million as a result of provisions for doubtful sovereign debt by banks operating in the United Kingdom.

Private Health Insurance

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total number of people claiming tax relief for private health insurance; and what proportion of these are higher rate tax payers in (i) Great Britain and (ii) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Maude: It is estimated that, in 1990-91, 330,000 people in the United Kingdom claimed tax relief for private medical insurance for people aged over 60. There are no reliable estimates of the proportion who were higher rate taxpayers or of the split between those in Great Britain and those in Northern Ireland.

Earnings

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate for 1991-92 of the numbers of men and women with earnings below (a) the tax threshold and (b) the national insurance contribution threshold, in (i) Great Britain and (ii) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Maude: Estimates for the United Kingdom in 1991-92, based on projections from the 1988 and 1989 family expenditure surveys and on the new earnings survey, are as follows:

(million)

	Numbers of employees and self-employed with earnings below the income tax threshold	Numbers of employees with earnings below the national insurance lower earnings limit
Women	2·9	2·25
Men	1·0	0·75

Separate estimates for Northern Ireland are not available.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his forecast for the cost to the Exchequer in 1991-92 and in a full year of the business expansion scheme, in Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Maude: The cost of tax relief for the business expansion scheme in 1991-92 depends on the total amount raised during the year. The cost of income tax relief is provisionally estimated as £130 million. Reliable estimates of the breakdown of the cost by country are not available.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting of the intergovernmental conference on economic and monetary union held between 30 November and 3 December.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I attended the final scheduled meeting of the intergovernmental conference on economic and monetary union from 30 November to 3 December. A large number of issues were discussed, in preparation for the meeting of the European Council at Maastricht on 9-10 December. Because of the extra time devoted to the intergovernmental conference, the meeting of the Council of Economics and Finance Ministers scheduled for 3 December did not take place.

Progress was made on a number of issues. Although all matters remain open for negotiation at Maastricht, provisional agreement was reached on:

ensuring that if the United Kingdom decide to move to stage 3 of EMU our coins could continue to bear the head of Her Majesty the Queen, and the right of certain Scottish and Northern Irish banks to issue notes should be protected;

the principle that the status of the Bank of England need not be changed unless and until the United Kingdom decided to move to Stage 3; making the procedure for monitoring Government budget deficits less inflexible and constraining; and ensuring that legally binding ceilings and sanctions on budget deficits would not apply in stage 2 of EMU.

Among other issues discussed were the transition from stage 2 to stage 3, exchange rate policy in stage 3, the functions of the European Central Bank in stage 3, the structure and role of the European Monetary Institute in stage 2, and economic and social cohesion.

Income Tax

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the single person's allowance could be increased at a revenue cost of £1 billion in 1991-92 in Great Britain and Northern Ireland with (i) the current system of tax allowances and (ii) all tax allowances and reliefs restricted to the basic rate except the single person's allowance.

Mr. Maude: Raising the personal allowance by £150 for all taxpayers (including those aged 65 and over) would cost about £1 billion in a full year at 1991-92 levels of income.

The yield from restricting all allowances and reliefs except the personal allowance to the basic rate would be about £900 million. This equates approximately to the revenue cost of raising the personal allowance for all taxpayers by a further £140.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the revenue cost of allowing couples to split the married couple's allowance as would be most financially beneficial in (a) the first year and (b) a full year, assuming this is introduced at the beginning of 1991-92, and (c) the first year and (d) a full year, assuming this is introduced at the beginning of 1992-93, in Great Britain and Northern Ireland with (i) the current system of tax allowances and (ii) all tax allowances and reliefs restricted to the basic rate except the single person's allowance.

Mr. Maude: Under the current system of tax allowances the revenue cost is estimated to be about £10 million in a full year at both 1991-92 and 1992-93 income levels. If the married couple's allowance were restricted to the basic rate, no couples would gain from the proposed change and there would be no revenue cost.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the revenue yield from freezing the married couple's allowance, additional personal allowance and widow's bereavement allowance, (but not the married couple's allowance for pensioners) in Great Britain and Northern Ireland, (a) in the first year and (b) in a full year, assuming this is introduced at the beginning of 1991-92, (c) in the first year and (d) in a full year, assuming this is introduced at the beginning of 1992-93, with full compensatory increases, at the basic rate, in (i) one-parent benefit, (ii) one-parent benefit and means-tested benefits for single parents, (iii) one parent benefit and the widowed mothers' allowance, (iv) one parent benefit and the widowed mothers' allowance and means-tested benefits for single parents and widows, with (1) the current system of tax allowances, and (2) restricting all tax allowances and reliefs except the single person's allowance to the basic rate.

Mr. Maude: It is estimated that, at 1992-93 levels of income, freezing the married couples allowance (for taxpayers aged under 65), the additional personal allowance, and the widow's bereavement allowance in 1992-93 would yield about £140 million in the first year, and £180 million in a full year compared with the illustrative 4 per cent. indexation shown in table 4.2 of the autumn statement 1991. These allowances were not increased in the 1991 Budget.

It is not administratively possible to compensate taxpayers fully and accurately through the benefits system in the way suggested. The benefit system cannot distinguish between taxpayers and non-taxpayers, nor can it take account of a person's tax liability at a particular point in time.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the effect on tax revenues (a) in the first year and (b) in a full year, assuming this is introduced at the beginning of 1991-92, and (c) in the first year and (d) in a full year, assuming this is introduced at the beginning of 1992-93, of the income tax at (1) 20 per cent., (2) 21 per cent., (3) 22 per cent., (4) 23 per cent., (5) 24 per cent., on the first (i) £1,000, (ii) £2,000, (iii) £3,000, (iv) £4,000, (v) £5,000, (vi) £8,000 and (vii) £10,000 of annual taxable income, in Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Maude: Estimates are as follows. They assume that the basic rate limit (higher rate threshold) would not be affected by the introduction of the reduced rate band.

The effect on tax receipts in the first year would depend on administrative arrangements following such a change.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) men, (b) women, (c) pensioners and (d) non-pensioners would be affected by restricting all tax allowances and reliefs except the single person's allowance to the basic rate in Great Britain and Northern Ireland, respectively, in 1991-92, giving the numbers of each (i) who earn above the 40 per cent. threshold, (ii) who earn below the 40 per cent. threshold, (iii) who are only affected because of the restriction in the married couple's allowance and (iv) who are brought into the higher rate tax bracket by this change.

Mr. Maude: Latest estimates for 1991-92 are as follows:

Restriction of allowances[1] and reliefs to the basic rate
Number of taxpaying individuals affected

	Thousands
	Higher rate taxpayers	Basic rate taxpayers	Affected by restriction of MCA only	Brought into higher rate
(a) Men	1,340	270	320	270
(b) Women	150	20	—	20
(c) Aged 65 and over	90	10	40	10
(d) Aged under 65	1,400	280	280	280

[1] Except for the personal allowance.

Separate estimates for Great Britain and Northern Ireland are not available.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost of a (a) £100, (b) £200 and (c) £300 increase in the single person's allowance in Great Britain and Northern Ireland, (i) in the first year, (ii) in a full year, assuming this is introduced at the beginning of 1991-92, (iii) in the first year and (iv) in a full year, assuming this is introduced at the beginning of 1992-93, with (1) the current system of tax allowances and (2) all tax allowances and reliefs, except the single person's allowance, restricted to the basic rate, giving the numbers in each case who are taken out of tax altogether.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 5 December 1991]: Estimates of the direct revenue costs are as follows:

Cost under current system of tax allowances (£ million)

Increase in the personal allowance (£)	1991-92		1992-93
	First year	Full year	First year	Full year
100	500	650	500	650
200	1,000	1,300	1,000	1,300
300	1,500	1,950	1,500	1,950

Cost following the restriction of all tax allowances and reliefs (except the personal allowance) to the basic rate (£ million)

Increase in the personal allowance (£)	1991-92		1992-93

200	1,050	1,350	1,050	1,350
300	1,550	2,050	1,550	2,000

The numbers taken out of tax in either year are estimated to be (a) 200,000, (b) 500,000 and (c) 700,000.

SCOTLAND

Hospital Beds

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give (a) the total number of private and voluntary sector hospital beds, (b) the number of private and voluntary sector acute beds, (c) the total number of national health service beds and (d) the number of national health service acute beds in Scottish hospitals in each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is given in the table:

Number of beds at 31 March (Scotland)

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the allotted capital expenditure for local authorities on education in cash and constant price terms since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information given in the following table records actual capital expenditure in each year, taken from local authority financial returns. The fall in expenditure in real terms during the period reflects a substantial and progressive decline in school pupil numbers which has reduced the requirement for new school building.

Capital expenditure by local authorities on educational building

Pension Power

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he has made to his recent meeting with representatives of Scottish Pensioner Power; and what action he intends to take as a result of the meeting.

Mr. Lang: I had a useful and constructive meeting with representatives of Scottish Pensioner Power on 18 October in Glenluce, since when I have corresponded with them twice in connection with specific matters raised by them.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the proposals in the citizens charter, the parents charter and the patients charter which have reference to environmental protection.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 4 December 1991]: There are no proposals in the parents or the patients charters which refer directly to environmental protection, although environmental health aspects are clearly relevant to the patients charter proposals.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Furniture Moving

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Lord President of the Council what arrangements are made for moving chairs and furniture around the Palace of Westminster; and if he will list the outside companies and organisations involved and their cost each year for the last five years.

Mr. MacGregor: The Parliamentary Works Office employs porters to carry out this work on the parliamentary estate. Additional supplementary porterage is provided when needed by Swift and French who hold the Buying Agency's call-off contract for removal of goods within the London region. Bishop's Move has also been used this year to provide a storage and removal service for the furnishing and fitting out of the new parliamentary building.

Departmental Telephone Calls

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Lord President of the Council what information is available on the number of calls made to directory inquiries from House of Commons telephones since 1 April 1991.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 27 November 1991]: I regret that this information is not available.

Members' Rooms

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many thefts from hon. Members' rooms have been reported in 1991 to the to the most recent practicable date.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 2 December 1991]: Forty thefts have been reported from Members' rooms in 1991 to date 1 December. I am pleased to be able to let the hon. Member know that, following police investigations, a man is at present on bail, having been arrested in connection with a number of thefts from the House.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he is satisfied with the locking procedures for hon. Members' rooms at the conclusion of parliamentary business each day; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 2 December 1991]: Yes, I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 11 November at columns 365-66.

ENERGY

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans the Government have to review the level of funds allocated to the home energy efficiency scheme.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There is some £26 million available for the home energy efficiency scheme (HEES) during the current financial year. In 1992-93 some £40 million will be available in my Department's budget for the promotion of energy efficiency in low income households of which the major part will be funding for HEES, representing an increase of about 50 per cent.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans the Government have to publicise the help available under the home energy efficiency scheme.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Leaflets about the home energy efficiency scheme (HEES) have already been distributed to local authority housing offices, local offices of the Department of Social Security, citizens advice bureaux, Help the Aged offices and various other organisations. HEES is also promoted via the "Keep Warm Keep Well" campaign. In addition, my Department is exploring with the Department of Social Security other methods by which potential clients may be made aware of the scheme.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what further developments have taken place on future carbon dioxide emission scenarios.

Mr. Wakeham: The Government made a commitment last year to return United Kingdom CO_2 emissions to 1990 levels by 2005 if other countries play their part. It also made clear that it would monitor progress towards achieving this challenging target, and if possible improve on it. There have been several significant and helpful developments since projections of CO_2 emissions were made available in 1989. These include a number of new proposals for more efficient gas fired electricity generation, following the introduction of competition into the electricity industry, which will reduce CO_2 emissions. In the light of these and other changes my Department has prepared some new scenarios for United Kingdom CO_2 emissions taking into account recent trends, including improvements in energy efficiency.

The latest scenarios suggest emissions in millions of tonnes of carbon (mtc) could be within the following ranges:

Year
1990	[1]160
2000	156-178
2005	166-200
2020	188-284

[1] Provisional.

These figures are produced on the same basis as those in the Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics.

Previous ranges (in mtc) based on data submitted in 1989 to the IPCC and subsequently published in Energy Paper 58 were:

Year
1985	158
2000	174-206
2005	178-225
2020	188-316

Details of the new scenarios and the assumptions underlying them are being prepared for publication next year.

While it is welcome that these new developments indicate progress towards reducing growth in CO_2 emissions there remains substantial uncertainty about the future path of United Kingdom emissions. It remains our view that the Government's target is a demanding but realistic one. There can be no question of making commitments that we cannot be sure of achieving.

Discussions on further measures to limit CO_2 emissions at national and Community level will continue at the Joint Energy and Environment Council due to take place in Brussels on 13 December. The Government will play a full and active part in these discussions.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Insurance Companies

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what powers he has under the Insurance Companies Act 1982 to preserve the independence of insurance companies and societies from merger with banks and building societies; and how those powers have been used.

Mr. Redwood: The Insurance Companies Act 1982 contains no general restrictions on mergers between insurance companies and banks and building societies.

However, there are limitations on the extent to which insurance companies may carry on non-insurance business. More specifically, the Act gives the Secretary of State a range of intervention powers which are exercisable when the interests of policyholders are at risk. Further, in approving changes of control of insurance companies and in authorising companies to carry on insurance business in the United Kingdom the Secretary of State is required (under sections 61 and 7 of the Act respectively) to be satisfied that a proposed controller, whether a company or an individual, is fit and proper to hold that position.

In exercising these powers the Secretary of State looks at each case individually.

Fraud Investigation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cases of fraud in pension schemes his Department is currently investigating; and how many staff are employed on the investigations.

Mr. Lilley: There are currently no cases where inspectors have been appointed under the Companies Act to investigate fraud in pension schemes. However, inspectors are appointed to investigate all the affairs of a company.

Investment Services Directive

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the proposed directive on investment services will be under negotiation at the Maastricht summit; and if it remains Her Majesty's Government's policy to press for its adoption.

Mr. Redwood: The Investment Services Directive is not on the agenda for the Maastricht summit. The Government wish to see a directive which genuinely liberalises the single market in investment services and which does not impose unnecessary restrictions on member states' markets.

Sunday Trading

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will refer the action of the supermarket chains in opening on Sundays to the Director-General of Fair Trading on the ground that it represents an unfair trading practice.

Mr. Redwood: No. Competition legislation is not designed to apply to the opening of supermarket chains on Sunday.

ECGD Insurance Services Group

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the vested and non-vested markets in the sale of the Insurance Services Group of the Export Credits Guarantee Department to NCM of Amsterdam.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 5 December 1991]: The non-vested markets are:

Angola
Egypt
Gambia
Guyana
Iran
Iraq

Jordan
Kuwait
Liberia
Libya
Nigeria
Sierra Leone
Somalia
Soviet Union (all the republics which formed part of the USSR as at 1 January 1990) and the Baltic States
Sri Lanka
Sudan
Tanzania
Yugoslavia (deemed to comprise all of the Republics which formed part of Yugoslavia as at 30 June 1991)
Zambia

The vested markets are all the remaining countries for which ECGD short-term cover was available immediately prior to the sale.

Non-vesting means that neither the risk nor the benefit of business underwritten under ECGD policies on the relevant country has been transferred to NCM credit insurance as part of the sale arrangements. The risk on future business insured under NCM credit insurance policies with those non-vested markets for which ECGD cover was available immediately prior to vesting will in certain cases be assumed by NCM under wholly private sector arrangements and in others under the national interest reinsurance facility provided to it by ECGD.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diplomatic Missions

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current establishment at each of United Kingdom's diplomatic missions overseas; what were the comparable figures in 1979; what posts have been closed since 1979; which new ones opened; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the current edition of Her Majesty's diplomatic service overseas reference list and the edition for 1979, copies of which are in the Library of the House. This publication provides details of staff at each overseas post. Posts opened since 1979 include: Kiribati, Belmopan, Brazzaville (November 1983), Managua, San Salvador (July 1984), Shanghai, Windhoek, Tallinn, Riga and Vilnius. British Diplomats are now also based in Kiev and St. Petersburg working to establish missions in those cities.

The following posts have been closed since 1979: Bergen, Cadiz, Ostend, Malmo, Winnipeg, San Salvador (February 1980), Adelaide, Palermo, Philadelphia, Saint Louis, Basle, Calais, Ibadan, Innsbruck, Strasbourg, Tangier, Trieste, Rotterdam, Detroit, Hanover, Blantyre, Cagliari, Gothenburg, Halifax, Salonika, Santo Domingo, Vientianne, Vigo, Zagreb, Monrovia, Libreville, Brazzaville (August 1991) and Edmonton.

India (Human Rights)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of India in the current year relating to human rights violations in the Punjab and Kashmir; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are deeply concerned about human rights violations in Punjab and Kashmir and have raised this issue regularly with the Indian Government this year. The Indian Government have assured us that action is being taken to improve the situation. They have told us that more than 200 members of the security forces have been punished for violations in Punjab and Kashmir. We have urged the Indian Government to allow Amnesty International to visit Kashmir to make an assessment of the situation.

Cyprus

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will specify the contacts, diplomatic and social, the United Kingdom high commission in Cyprus has with the purported Turkish Cypriot breakaway entity in northern Cyprus; and what economic and other aid, including scholarships, is provided for that entity.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The British Government do not recognise the "Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus". The British High Commission in Nicosia is accredited to the Government of the Republic of Cyprus.

Since the United Kingdom is a guarantor power, and as part of our active support for the United Nations Secretary-General's mission of good offices, the British High Commission maintains contact with the leaders of the Turkish Cypriot community.

In 1990-91 under the ODA's bilateral aid programme we provided £181,000 to the Turkish Cypriot community, which is channelled through the British Council in Nicosia or the Commonwealth scholarship programme. Similarly, under the EC association agreement the third financial protocol for 1989-93 provides 62 mecu for the whole of Cyprus.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what help he is providing to the Government of Cyprus in seeking to trace Cypriot citizens missing following the Turkish invasion of Cyprus.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The issue is being investigated by the United Nations committee on missing persons, which was established in 1981 to trace and account for all persons reported missing by each side. We fully support the work of this committee, which relies upon the full co-operation of both sides to the intercommunal dispute.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council on 2 December.

Mr. Hurd: My hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and I represented the United Kingdom at the Foreign Affairs Council on 2 December. The Council agreed a package of positive measures towards the Yugoslav republics of Croatia, Slovenia, Bosnia-Herzgovina and Macedonia. These restored to those republics the preferential trade access arrangements previously available to Yugoslavia as a whole under the trade and co-operation agreement on the ground that they are co-operating with the EC's efforts to restore peace. The Council also invited the Commission to reinstate the EC's PHARE technical assistance programme and disbursement of funds under the EC's second financial protocol with respect to the four republics.

Ministers discussed the bombing of flights Pan Am 103 and UTA 772. They issued a statement affirming that they took a most serious view of the accusation against Libyan officials, endorsing the demands of the British, French and United States Governments and calling upon the Libyan authorities to comply promptly and in full with these demands.

Ministers also issued a statement welcoming the democratic manner in which the Ukrainian people had declared their wish for independence and calling upon the Ukraine to pursue with the Soviet Union and the other republics an open and constructive dialogue intended to ensure that all the Soviet Union's existing international obligations and commitments were carried out.

In a statement on East Timor, Ministers reiterated their condemnation of the unjustifiable actions by the Indonesian armed forces in Dili. They called for a thorough investigation by independent experts and decided to review EC co-operation with Indonesia in the light of the Indonesian response.

The Council had a brief discussion about preparation for the Maastricht European Council. The Council decided to ask the Commission to make proposals for a Community trade embargo against Haiti.

An EC/Egypt Co-operation Council was held in the margins of the Foreign Affairs Council, followed by a lunch at which Ministers discussed with Foreign Minister Moussa the middle east peace process.

Political Union

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a statement on the outcome of the ministerial meeting of the intergovernmental conference on political union on 2 and 3 December.

Mr. Hurd: My hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and I attended a two-day ministerial meeting of the intergovernmental conference on political union on 2 and 3 December.

The aim of the meeting was to narrow the areas of disagreement between member states in preparation for the Maastricht European Council on 9 and 10 December.

Some progress was made in a number of areas, including the provisions on the common foreign and security policy. Agreement was reached in principle to conference declarations in most of the areas we had proposed, including on the role of national parliaments and animal welfare. In other areas of the negotiation, a number of difficult issues remain to be resolved. Those must now be addressed by Heads of State and Government meeting in the European Council of Maastricht.

I made clear where our principle difficulties lie, but reiterated our commitment to working for an agreement at Maastricht which is satisfactory to all, and to this House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Child Benefit

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what would be (a) the first year and (b) the full year costs of raising child benefit to £9·95 (i) in 1991-92 and (ii) 1992-93, including increases in linked, means-tested and national insurance benefits for Northern Ireland;

(2) what would be (a) the first year and (b) the full year costs of raising child benefit to £10 (i) in 1991-92 and (ii) 1992-93, including increases in linked, means-tested and national insurance benefits for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: The rates of child benefit from April 1991 were £8·25 for the eldest eligible child and £7·25 for each other child and were increased to £9·25 and £7·50, respectively, from October 1991. The estimated gross cost of increasing child benefit from those rates to £9·95 for each child throughout 1991-92 would be about £46 million. If the October 1991 rates had applied throughout 1991-92, the cost would be around £39 million. The gross full year cost in 1992-93 of paying £9·95, instead of the rates of £9·65 and £7·80 payable from April 1992, would be about £31 million.

Raising child benefit on the same basis to £10 instead of £9·95 would increase the above costs by about £1 million to around £47 million, £40 million and £32 million, respectively.

National Insurance

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the latest information on the number of people who pay national insurance contributions at the contracted-out rate in Northern Ireland; and of these how many earn above (a) £15,000, (b) £20,000, (c) £25,000, (d) £30,000 and (e) £40,000 respectively.

Mr. Hanley: The information is not available in the precise form requested. However, figures for the number of employed earners who paid national insurance at the contracted-out standard rate in 1989-90, the latest year for which provisional information is available, and for the number of them who earned above that year's upper earnings limit for national insurance purposes are given in the table.

	Total	With earnings above the UEL (£16,900)
Paying at the standard contracted-out rate	219,000	24,600
Paying a mixture of contracted out and not contracted-out rates	30,100	1,600
Total with some contracted-out contributions	249,100	26,200

Disability

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many disabled people are currently employed in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: At 29 November 1991 the Northern Ireland civil service employed 1,284 staff who self-reported a disability, of whom 431 were, or had been, registered as disabled.

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reduction is planned in the amount of low flying at less than 250 ft over the United Kingdom; and what consideration has been given to closing one or more of the tactical training areas.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 18 October 1991 at column 303.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the one-way flow control system for low flying military aircraft in the Bwlch Llyn Bach valley is marked on the military low flying chart covering the area.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Yes.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the maximum length of time for which air force training units are permitted to use a particular fixed low-level flying route.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Air crew are required to avoid the use of standard routes whenever possible. Where the use of such routes is unavoidable they are replaced at regular intervals.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what specific advice or instructions is given to pilots flying at less than 250 ft over the United Kingdom, regarding flight at speeds greater than 450 knots in the run-up to simulated targets.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The normal cruising speed for all low flying aircraft is 450 knots. While aircraft may fly at faster speeds in the run-up to simulated targets pilots are instructed to observe speed limits ranging from 420 knots to 550 knots, depending on height and aircraft type. These controls were imposed to ensure that noise levels on the ground in excess of 125dB(A) are not created by low-flying aircraft.

Low Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the numbers of low-flying sorties flown by Royal Air Force aircraft in each low-flying area in Germany in each month since January 1990, as collated in accordance with the requirements of the allied forces central Europe low-flying handbook.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Prior to September 1990, a general lower limit of 500 feet applied to low flying in Germany but flying down to 250 feet was permitted in seven discrete low-flying areas. Since 16 September 1990, there has been a general lower limit of 1,000 feet on low flying in Germany and consequently records of entries into the German low-flying areas by RAF aircraft only extend to that date. While the information is not available broken down by sorties, the numbers of entries recorded between January and September 1990 are as follows:

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the maximum number of times an aircrew is permitted to re-attack the same simulated target at low level; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to my Department's evidence to the inquiry into low flying by the Select Committee on Defence (HC 120/90, page 177).

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all requests made to his Department for low flying avoidance status around bird sanctuaries, wildlife breeding sites and nature reserves in the last three years; and what was the outcome of each request.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I regret that such applications are not recorded separately and it would require disproportionate effort to identify them. However, some 54 bird sanctuaries, wildlife breeding sites and nature reserves are the subject of seasonal or permanent avoidance arrangements.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the flying at less than 250 ft during Exercises Highland Cardinal and OSEX 91 in mid-Wales in June-July 1991, as specified in the Civil Aviation Authority notification of these exercises, was approved by Ministers; and how many sorties at less than 250 ft were flown during the two exercises.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No flying below 250 ft took place during Exercises Highland Cardinal and OSEX 91.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to retain records of requests from foreign air forces for permission to fly at less than 250 ft over the United Kingdom, and of his Department's responses to those requests.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. My Department's general policy on such training remains as set out in evidence to the Select Committee on Defence published last year. (HC 120/90, pp. 12-13).

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints about low flying in each of the years 1986 to 1990 came from addresses located within each of low-flying areas 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11 and 14.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The numbers of inquiries or complaints about low-flying training which my Department received in each of the last five years from addresses located within low-flying areas 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11 and 14 were as follows:

Low flying area	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990
1	114	115	135	134	90
2	739	890	922	1,058	992
3	11	18	14	14	12
4	401	400	434	646	526
5	451	414	364	620	624
6	364	529	380	519	446
7	733	913	856	1,110	1,086
8	302	286	283	399	413
9	34	42	59	56	41
11	726	594	482	579	537
14	242	425	534	899	564

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Chepstow transit area was abolished; what was the specific reason for its abolition; and if he will list the parliamentary constituencies over which low flying is newly permitted, or within which the area available for low flying is extended, as a result of this measure.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is not our practice to publish detailed information on the United Kingdom low-flying system. As part of the continuous monitoring of the United Kingdom low-flying system, however, a programme of reviews of avoidance areas is carried out and changes made when necessary, reflecting changes on the ground, and aimed at spreading low flying more evenly and enhancing flight safety, while at the same time reducing, where possible, the disturbance to those on the ground.

Iraq

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his oral statement on 22 November, Official Report, column 541, if he will set out the sources for his statement that the People's Republic of China and North Korea sold missile technology to Iraq that contributed to the latter's nuclear capabilities.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend sought to make two separate points—that the People's Republic of China and North Korea had exported missile technology; and that Iraq had received external support in its nuclear weapons programme. We do not disclose the sources for such information.

Diesel-powered Staff Cars

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff cars are diesel powered.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A total of 1,487.

RAF Aerobatic Team

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current cost of the RAF aerobatic team.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Operating costs are £14·8 million per annum at 1990-91 prices.

US Air Force Training

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what special considerations are taken into account when selecting data link areas in the United Kingdom for United States air force training with the GBU-15 glide bomb system.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Areas are selected in order to minimise interference with other frequency users.

Army (Hunting)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of transporting Army horses and riders to fox and any other hunting events in 1989, 1990 and the current year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) on 11 June 1991 at column 521.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Army personnel have been involved in hunting and associated duties in the last three years; and what was the number of duty hours involved.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Equestrian skills are essential for all service personnel from units that have a mounted ceremonial role and hunting is a useful form of training and exercise for both horses and riders. Hunting, however, is not recorded as a separate activity and therefore cannot be readily identified.

Technical Data Packages

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department takes to ensure the integrity of technical data packages passing between suppliers of equipment ordered by the procurement executive.

Mr. Alan Clark: Responsibility for ensuring that technical data packages are complete, accurate, and fit for the purpose for which they are required, rests with the company producing them. The Department does not seek to derogate from the company's contractual obligations.

Mr. Cyril Thomas

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will initiate an inquiry into the cause of death in 1988 of Mr. Cyril Thomas, formerly of Narbeth, Dyfed, following his employment at the Royal Ordnance factory at Woolwich and the atomic weapons establishment at Aldermaston; and what recent communication his Department had with Mrs. Margaret Thomas, his widow.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In the light of the evidence presented at the recent inquest on Mr. Cyril Thomas, I do not consider that there are grounds for any form of special inquiry into the cause of death. His widow, Mrs. Margaret Thomas, has been provided with full copies of his radiation dose record.

Skyguard Radar

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates and locations of deployments of Skyguard radars outside Ministry of Defence land for use as mobile simulated threats for training of air crew over the past two years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Skyguard radars have been deployed outside Ministry of Defence land for use as mobile simulated threats for training of air crew on three occasions in the last two years. They were:

15 to 19 May 1990	East Lothian
18 to 22 November 1991	Dumfries and Galloway
2 to 6 December 1991	Devon

United Scientific Holdings/Avimo

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary aof State for Defence (1) whether his Department is taking any action to secure compensation from any other company in respect of ex-gratia payments made to United Scientific Holdings/Avimo;

(2) what was the amount of ex-gratia payment made by his Department to United Scientific Holdings/Avimo in respect of that company's performance on the most recent contract for the delivery of thermal observation and gunnery sighting equipment.

Mr. Alan Clark: The details of extra-contractual payments made by my Department to particular firms, and of any actions taken with other companies to secure compensation, are commercially confidential.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department is satisfied that the technical data package received by Avimo Ltd. in respect of its recent thermal observation and gunnery sighting equipment contract was sufficient to permit it properly to discharge its contractual obligations.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is not our normal practice to comment on the quality of particular products passing between our suppliers.

Gulf War

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the occasions on which statements made by his Department in respect of the deaths of British service men killed during action in the Gulf conflict have been subsequently corrected.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have been able to identify only one change to an official statement on British personnel killed in action in the Gulf. This was the reduction to 24 of the total "killed in action", which I gave in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Davyhulme (Mr. Churchill) on 28 June at column 579. I am, however, aware that some of the early accounts about the weather and 3 RRF's activities given to the next of kin of personnel involved in the Warrior/A-10 friendly fire incident, through the regimental support system, later proved to be mistaken. I can assure the hon. Member that these accounts were given in good faith at the time. The answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim) on 24 July at columns 706-9 gave the official statement on the incident.

Exercises

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what RAF participation is scheduled in exercises (a) Red Flag 92-2, (b) Green Flag 92-3, (c) Maple Flag 25, (d) Red Flag 92-4 and (e) Green Flag 92-5.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Eight RAF Tornado and two RAF Hercules aircraft, together with three RAF regiment Rapier squadrons, are scheduled to participate in exercise Red Flag 92-2. Nine RAF Jaguar aircraft are scheduled to participate in exercise Maple Flag 25. No RAF participation is currently scheduled in exercises Green Flag 92-3, Red Flag 92-4 or Green Flag 92-5.

Disability

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many disabled people are currently employed in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There are 1,164 registered disabled staff in the MOD. In addition, there are a number of staff with disabilities working in the MOD who have chosen not to register formally as disabled.

The MOD takes very seriously indeed its responsibilities as an equal opportunities employer and early in 1992 we will be launching a major programme for action for people with disabilities.

Military Equipment

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the value of United Kingdom sales of military equipment (a) within the United Kingdom, (b) to EEC countries and (c) internationally, excluding EC countries, for each year since 1979 in (i) cash and (ii) 1991-92 prices.

Mr. Alan Clark: The full information requested could be assembled in the precise form specified only at disproportionate cost.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 9 December 1991

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Government Legal Services

34. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement about recruitment to the Government legal services.

The Attorney-General: I am pleased to say that recruitment to the Government legal service is very satisfactory. Whenever we advertise, we attract a large number of high calibre applicants.

Solicitors (Disclosure of Information)

35. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General under what guidelines the Crown prosecution service may decline to disclose relevant information to solicitors acting for persons accused of murder.

The Attorney-General: None. The guidelines issued by my predecessor in 1981 require that relevant information be disclosed.

Charities

36. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General when he last met the Charity Commissioners to discuss the political activities of charities.

The Attorney-General: I have not met them for this purpose.

Prosecutions

37. Mr. Hind: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the number of prosecutions brought in 1991 and the number of staff currently employed by the Crown prosecution service to pursue them.

The Attorney General: Between January and September 1991 the Crown prosecution service completed 1,320,463 cases and on 31 October employed 5,821 members of staff of whom 1,904·5 were lawyers.

Immigration Appeals

38. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Attorney-General if he has any plans to shorten waiting times for a hearing for immigration appeals.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor's Department has recruited additional staff and part-time adjudicators for the immigration appellate authorities (IAA) to cope with the large number of appeals. Streamlined procedures have been introduced for the initial collation of case papers with the aim of dispatching them to the parties' representatives in this country within two weeks of their receipt. This is a significant improvement on the previous position of eight to 12 weeks and has helped to reduce the time taken for cases to be determined.

A multi-terminal case-tracking computer system will also be operational by January 1992. This will enable the IAA to monitor more accurately and frequently the progress of appeals.

Bailiffs

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the statutory provisions that govern the hours of working of bailiffs engaged in (a) debt recovery in general and (b) poll tax enforcement.

The Attorney-General: Order 7, rule 3 of the County Court Rules 1981 provides that county court bailiffs are not permitted to serve or execute process on Sunday, Good Friday or Christmas day without leave of the court.

There are no statutory provisions which govern the hours of working of bailiffs engaged in community charge enforcement.

Maxwell Communication Corporation

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Attorney-General what is the remit of the Serious Fraud Office inquiry into the Maxwell Communication Corporation.

The Attorney-General: The Serious Fraud Office is investigating the circumstances surrounding a £55 million loan from Swiss Bank Corporation to Adviser 188 Ltd., a company owned by Headington Investments Ltd., which is itself associated with the late Mr. Robert Maxwell. Subsequently the director of the Serious Fraud Office decided to investigate allegations concerning the management of the assets of the pension funds of various companies also associated with Mr. Maxwell.

The investigations are being carried out in conjunction with the City of London police.

Paintball Guns

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Attorney-General how many prosecutions are a waiting trial at Crown courts involving the use or possession of paintball guns.

The Attorney-General: The use and possession of paintball guns are not covered by any specific legislation, but may contravene a number of enactments depending on the characteristics of the item and the circumstances and purpose of the possession. The CPS does not maintain records which in respect of any category of offence enables those involving paintball guns to be identified from those which do not.

PRIME MINISTER

Zionism

Mr. Janner: To ask the Prime Minister (1) whether he has now held discussions with the United States of America on how best to achieve the repeal of United Nations resolution 3379;

(2) what discussions have been held with Britain's European partners on how best to achieve the repeal of United Nations resolution 3379 on Zionism, to which he referred in his letter of 14 October 1991; at what level they were conducted; and what was the outcome;

(3) with which countries he intends to discuss the issue of repealing United Nations resolution 3379 in his forthcoming bilateral contacts.

The Prime Minister: As I told the hon. and learned Member in my letter to him of 14 October, we support the United States proposal to secure the repeal of this resolution. We have discussed how to achieve repeal with the Unites States administration and have said we shall co-sponsor a draft resolution which revokes it. Our discussions with our European partners, primarily through our missions in New York, continue. We expect to raise the matter with other countries before a repealing resolution is put to the vote.

United Nations

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Prime Minister if he will raise at the next meeting of the United Nations the question of late payment of subscriptions by (a) the United States of America and (b) other member countries.

The Prime Minister: We repeatedly make clear our concern at the failure on the part of a large number of member states to pay their assessed contributions in full and on time.

Non-proliferation Policies

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister what extra resources he proposes to commit in support of the agreement at the G7 summit to combat the proliferation of nuclear, chemical and biological weapons and to foster non-proliferation policies among additional nations; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Together with our G7 and other partners we are addressing the question of how we can best strengthen the various regimes designed to combat nuclear, biological and chemical proliferation.

Arms Sales

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister what are the implications to the United Kingdom of the principle of transparency in international transfers of conventional weapons and associated military technology as agreed at the G7 summit in London; and if he will press the United Nations to publish a register of arms sales.

The Prime Minister: As an important step towards openness in conventional arms transfers, the declaration at the London economic summit called for the early adoption of a United Nations register of arms transfers. This followed our initiative to establish such a register. The Twelve and Japan tabled a resolution at this year's United Nations General Assembly with this aim in mind. The resolution was approved by a large majority in the First Committee of the General Assembly on 15 November and will shortly be adopted at the plenary stage of the General Assembly. It will allow the international community to monitor the scale of arms build-up by any one country. Information will be provided on an annual basis and the register will be established and maintained at the United Nations headquarters in New York by the Secretary General.

United Nations

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister whether he intends to commit additional resources to the proposed extension of the capacity of the United Nations to respond to emergencies and appeals for aid; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The proposals to which the hon. Member refers are the result of an initiative by this Government together with the German Government which was subsequently taken up by the G7 summit and the European Council. They are currently under consideration by the United Nations. We are pressing for their early adoption. We fully intend to contribute our share of the required funds.

Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister what response he has made to the proposal of the Secretary General of the International Atomic Energy Agency at its 35th conference concerning (a) the need to strengthen International Atomic Energy Agency nuclear safeguards by increasing the number of special inspections under the provisions of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and (b) the need for the International Atomic Energy Agency to be given additional information on nuclear programmes by the security services of non-proliferation treaty and International Atomic Energy Agency member states.

The Prime Minister: The director-general in his statement to the International Atomic Energy Agency called for a strengthening of the safeguards system to provide, through special inspections, confidence that no undeclared nuclear installations or material exist in states which have accepted full-scope safeguards. The United Kingdom fully endorses this policy and has made this support clear.

To enable the agency to exercise its right to make special inspections of undeclared activities, it requires access to information pointing to their existence. It is the intention of the Government to assist the agency in this context as far as possible by providing relevant information as appropriate.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 355, if he will list the proposals relating to disabled people which are under consideration.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 6 December 1991]: The proposals relating to disabled people, published by the European Commission and presently under consideration are:

Proposals for a Council directive on minimum requirements to improve the mobility and safe transport to work of workers with reduced mobility (published February 1991).

Proposals for a Council decision establishing a third Community action programme to assist disabled people—HELIOS II (published October 1991).

In addition we are participating in two recent Community initiatives specifically for disabled people: TIDE—Technology for the socio-economic integration of disabled and elderly people; and HORIZON—a programme within the European social fund which aims at improving the conditions of access to the employment market for disabled and disadvantaged people.

Maastricht

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Prime Minister whether he will submit a resolution to the EC summit at Maastricht condemning the growth of racist sentiment and attacks in Europe.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 6 December 1991]: The Government view with concern the recent manifestations of racism across Europe. I understand that the EC presidency has it in mind to propose a resolution on these matters at the forthcoming meeting of the European Council.

Sterling

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has had on the similarity of design between the £5 note and the £20 note; if he will withdraw the £20 note; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 6 December 1991]: I have received a number of letters on the new £5 and £20 notes. However, the design of banknotes is the responsibility of the Bank of England and not the Government. The bank believes that its new notes achieve an appropriate blend of security features and distinguishing characteristics. It will, however, take account of the reactions to the notes already issued in designing future issues.

"Faith in the Countryside"

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what response he intends to make to the archbishop's commission on rural areas report "Faith in the Countryside".

The Prime Minister [holding answer 6 December 1991]: The report "Faith in the Countryside" was debated in the House of Lords on 15 November 1990.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Yugoslavia

45. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his proposals for aid to Yugoslavia.

Mrs. Chalker: British aid for Yugoslavia during the current civil strife will depend upon the specific needs of the emergency, taking account of how the international community responds to them. We have already provided blankets and cash to the international committee of the Red Cross, valued at £1·75 million.

Finance Ministers

46. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to hold discussions with Finance Ministers from developing countries in London over the coming month.

Mrs. Chalker: I met Ghana's Prime Minister and Finance Minister last Thursday and Friday; I discussed the Botswanan economy this morning with His Excellency President Masire.

In early January I hope to meet the Finance Minister of Nepal. In addition I hope to see the ANC president tomorrow, when I will discuss the investment needs of South Africa.

Mauritius

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid is currently being paid to Mauritius; what future aid to Mauritius is planned; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: British bilateral aid to Mauritius totalled nearly £5 million in 1990, including £3·2 million of investment by the Commonwealth Development Corporation. Expenditure this year will be of a similar order. Future aid would be for discussion in bilateral talks in due course.

EC Aid

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Minister for Overseas Development last met her French counterpart to discuss EC aid programmes.

Mrs. Chalker: I visited Paris on 29 November for discussions with Madame Avice on EC aid and other development issues of mutual interest.

EC Development Council

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the discussions at the EC Development Council meeting on 28 November.

Mrs. Chalker: This was a very constructive Development Council, at which we discussed a number of issues. We reached agreement on new regulations governing EC aid to Asia and Latin America and the EC investment partners' scheme. We approved resolutions on human rights and democracy in developing countries, on emergency aid, and on the EC approach to UNCED.

Contract Legal Personnel

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the names of contract legal personnel overseas funded under the British aid programme, the countries in which they work and the total cost of their salaries to the taxpayer.

Mrs. Chalker: There are currently 21 contract legal personnel working overseas under the British aid programme:

Countries	Legal personnel
Barbados	Regional legal adviser
Gibraltar	Chief Justice
Kenya	Chief Justice 2 Puisne judges

Swaziland	High Court Judge

Countries	Legal personnel
Turks and Caicos Islands	Attorney General Chief Magistrate
Tonga	Puisne Judge Senior Crown Counsel/ Acting Chief Justice
Uganda	Supreme Court Judge
Vanuatu	Puisne Judge/ Acting Chief Justice Public Prosecutor Regional Legal Adviser
Zimbabwe	Chief Law Officer Training Officer

We do not publish the names of individual officers. The total salary cost is currently about £750,000 per annum.

British Virgin Islands

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why the outstanding debt on the Wickams Cay and Anegada loans to the British Virgin Islands was remitted, as recorded in the appropriation accounts 1990-91, vol. 1, class I, page 18; what was the nature of the projects funded by the loans; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Loans were made to the BVI Government in 1971 to repurchase lands sold to developers. That Government's intention was to use the lands to generate revenue from tourism. It has never proved possible to generate the income from which the Government of BVI could have been expected to service the loans and it was not regarded as appropriate to press for repayment from general revenues.

South Africa

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to move for the Republic of South Africa, as a member of the United Nations organisation, to be re-admitted to participation in the General Assembly; and if he will represent to the South African Government the advantages in it thereafter bringing up to date its subscriptions to the United Nations organisation.

Mrs. Chalker: We understand that the South African Government are considering how best to move forward to full participation in United Nations bodies. We shall keep in touch with them and monitor developments closely. As and when South Africa does regain membership of United Nations bodies, we would expect them to pay their subscriptions fully and on time.

Aid Review

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost to public funds of publishing the 1991 British overseas aid annual review; and how many copies were printed.

Mrs. Chalker: Fifteen thousand copies of "British Overseas Aid 1991" were produced at a cost of £98,100.

Mr. Lilley: The following is the information:

	Visits made to other member states on official EC business	Of which visits to Brussels	Nights spent away
Secretary of State	2	1	1
Minister for Trade	2	1	2
Minister for Corporate Affairs	2	2	0
Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs	1	0	1
Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Technology	2	0	1

Ozone-depleting Substances

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the import and exports figures for the latest available year for the United Kingdom for (a) chlorofluorocarbons, (b) carbon tetrachloride, (c) halons, (d) HCFCs and (e) methyl chloroform; and what is the monetary value.

Mr. Leigh: Information about trade in carbon tetrachloride is published under standard international trade code 511.36 (commodity code 290314000) in "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom", which is available in the Library of the House. The other products identified in the question are also mostly grouped under SITC code 511.3—"halogenated derivatives of hydrocarbons". However, trade figures for some of them are not published for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

Director General of Telecommunications

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations he has held with the Council of Tribunals regarding the powers of the Director General of Telecommunications to settle disputes.

Mr. Redwood: The Council of Tribunals has expressed a potential interest in dispute procedures of all four utilities covered by the Competition Service (Utilities) Bill. This is being considered, in conjunction with other Departments, and a response to the Council will be made shortly.

Operation Scotcheck

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about his Department's involvement in Operation Scotcheck carried out on 13 November in Scotland.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 5 December 1991]: This is an operational matter for the Radiocommunications Agency and I have asked the chief executive to reply.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pesticides

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which pesticides are classified as poisonous or toxic; and if he will list those substances which are available for use as pesticides but which are not harmful to humans or animals.

Mr. Maclean: The detailed information requested cannot be provided except at disporportionate cost. All pesticides are subject to rigorous scrutiny by the independent advisory committee on pesticides and must be approved by Ministers in six Government Departments before they can be used. Approval would not be given if there was evidence of adverse health effects in humans or animals.

It is a requirement that the label of each pesticide produce—of which there are over 3,000—must display a hazard classification symbol, if appropriate, in addition to the relevant precautions and statutory conditions.

Dumping at Sea

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his Department last undertook a prosecution for breach of a dumping at sea licence.

Mr. Gummer: In November this Department successfully prosecuted a marina and a skipper of a dumping vessel for breach of conditions set in a licence issued under part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985. The marina was fined £1,000 on each of three charges and £500 costs. The skipper was fined £300 on each of the three charges and £100 costs.

We shall not hesitate to take firm action, including prosecution when appropriate, to enforce licence conditions set to protect the marine environment and to avoid interference with other uses of the sea, including fishing.

Wind Energy

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn), Official Report, 28 November, column 651, he will set out (a) the nature of his departmental representation and (b) what new information his Department gained from attendance at the seminar on wind energy and agriculture held on 20 November.

Mr. Curry: The following is the information:

(a) Two officers of the Ministry's Agricultural Development and Advisory Service attended the seminar one of whom presented a paper.

(b) The aim of the seminar was to heighten the awareness of farmers regarding the uses of wind energy and the types of equipment available. Information was obtained on the growing interest of farmers in renewable sources of energy including wind power.

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken to detect fraudulent applications for a five-year set-aside scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1991, Official Report, col. 166]: Yesterday's Sunday Times (8 December) claims that I misled the House in my earlier reply. This is a most serious allegation and quite untrue.

The points raised by The Sunday Times in defence of its story were rebutted in a letter from me to the paper's deputy editor on Friday evening. The newspaper chose not to publish this.

In elaborating yesterday on its misleading claims of the previous week, The Sunday Times has introduced no new evidence of substance. It has placed great stress on the existence of one taped telephone conversation between a MAFF inspector and the Insight team journalist who posed as a landowner. In its selective use of events the newspaper has chosen not to disclose other telephone conversations as a result of which the journalist was left in no doubt as to the true position.

The Sunday Times knows and knew at the time that there could have been no justification for it to claim that Dr. Rufford's application had been approved. The central point remains that no formal approval letter was issued or would have been issued until a satisfactory site inspection had been carried out. It also remains true that its journalist signed false declarations, and that the Insight team fabricated a MAFF letterhead in order to give credence to what they knew was not a final letter of approval.

WALES

Expenditure

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the latest available figures showing how much was spent by (a) each executive body, (b) each advisory body, (c) each health authority and (d) each tribunal on (i) legal services, (ii) accounting advice, (iii) auditing, (iv) advice on business plans, (v) market research, (vi) management advice, (vii) public relations communications advice, (viii) time and motion studies and (ix) opinion polls, respectively; and how much was spent in each case exclusively within Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not held centrally for non-departmental public bodies. The information available for health authorities is shown in the following table. This shows total spending in each category and therefore includes both the costs of in-house services and contracts placed outside each authority. It is not possible to identify separately how much was spent in Wales.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has of the number of young people in each area to whom the training and enterprise councils have not been able to fulfil a guarantee of a training place.

Mr. David Hunt: Reliable estimates are not available.

Minor Works Grant

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of householders who became ineligible for a minor works grant with the introduction of the community charge general reduction of £140.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not held centrally.

Public Rights of Way

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he proposes to apply the principles of the citizens charter to the way the Welsh Office handles opposed public path orders and definitive map modification orders.

Mr. David Hunt: All orders handled by my Department are subject to the procedures set out in the relevant legislation. Existing procedures are in keeping with the principles of the citizens charter.

Health "Customers"

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance or advice he or his officials have given to health authorities and national health service units in Wales regarding the use of the term "customer" in publicity, information to the public, education and training work and in official or internal documents and letters.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No specific guidance or advice has been given by the Welsh Office to health authorities and NHS units in Wales on the term "customer". The term is used within the NHS to describe those who come into contact with, or work for, the NHS.

Service Contracts

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the latest available figures showing (a) the total number of bought-in service contracts and (b) the number of bought-in service contracts completed with firms issued in Wales by (i) each executive body, (ii) each advisory body and (iii) each tribunal operational in Wales; and if he will publish a breakdown in the categories of (1) legal advice, (2) accounting, (3) auditing, (4) business plans, (5) market research, (6) management advice, (7) public relations advice and communications in general, (8) time and motion studies and (9) opinion polling.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue guidelines to (a) all executive bodies, (b) all advisory bodies, (c) all tribunals and (d) all health authorities operational in Wales, encouraging them to give priority to firms based in Wales when fixing contracts or seeking advice, where they are legally entitled to do so, and where there is no significant additional cost in so doing.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No. Such guidelines would contravene the United Kingdom's international obligations under the treaty of Rome and the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

Welsh World Trade Centre (Grant)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the urban development grant payments (a) already made and (b) still to be made to the Welsh world trade centre, Cardiff and the conditions requiring to be met before eligibility for further urban development grant payments can be established.

Mr. David Hunt: Under the urban development grant agreement between Cardiff city council and Brent Walker Group plc, £2·5 million has been paid to Brent Walker and £750,000 remains to be paid. A total of 75 per cent. of the payments are funded by the Welsh Office. For the remainder of the payments to be made, Brent Walker would need to satisfy the city council that the terms of the legal agreement between them have been met.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he is making for informing Welsh local authorities of their standard spending assessments.

Mr. David Hunt: My officials have today written to Welsh authorities, advising them of their provisional SSAs. I am placing a copy of that letter in the Library of the House. Final figures will be contained in the distribution report which I plan to lay before the House after the Christmas recess.

Rural Initiative

Mr. Gwilyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library the document he intends to publish on the rural initiative.

Mr. David Hunt: I have today published a document setting out my proposals for developing the rural initiative in Wales. A copy of the document has already been placed in the Library of the House.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Poll Tax

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will issue guidelines on the need to establish consistency and equivalence of impact in judgments in poll tax cases.

Mr. John Patten: It is not for Ministers to issue guidelines on how the courts should exercise their judicial discretion.

Terrorist Suspects

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how often suspects detained under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act in England and Wales requested access to a solicitor and how often such access was deferred in each month over the past five years.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The available information is as follows: of 253 suspects detained under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 in England and Wales between 22 March 1989 and 11 November 1990, 125 requested access to legal advice, and delay of access to legal advice was authorised in 66 cases. In 30 of the 66 cases in which delay was authorised, the suspect had not however requested access to legal advice.

Private Security Industry

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representations he has received about the need to regulate the private security industry; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consideration he has given to the introduction of a statutory licensing system for the private security industry;

(3) what consideration he has given to the introduction of compulsory self-regulation for the private security industry;

(4) what views have been expressed to him by the private security industry about regulation.

Mr. John Patten: Following the receipt of a number of representations to my right hon. Friend expressing concern at the lack of regulation of the private security industry, a working group was set up in 1989 which later that year produced a report recommending ways in which the regulation of the industry could be improved.

We subsequently considered a range of options for improving the regulation of the private security industry which goes wider than those considered by the working group. We will make a statement in due course covering all the relevant issues.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the number of private security firms operating in England and Wales which are not members of the British Security Industry Association.

Mr. John Patten: Such information is not held centrally.

Correspondence

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Hammersmith dated 11 September 1991, Home Office reference F148287/2.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A reply will shortly be sent to the hon. Member.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many police officers in the Metropolitan force are currently the subject of complaints investigation procedures; and how many of those officers are based in the GN or GH divisions of 2 area;

(2) how many police officers in the Metropolitan force have been advised, reprimanded, dismissed or faced criminal prosecution in the past 12 months as a result of complaints investigations being carried out; how many of those officers come from area 2 of that force; and how many of those officers are based in the GN or GH divisions of that area;

(3) how many police officers in the Metropolitan force have been suspended in the past 12 months as a result of complaints investigations being carried out; what the total cost of the wages paid to them in that period is; how many of those officers come from area 2 of that force; and how many of those officers are based in the GN or GH divisions of that area.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: These are matters for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

Hepatitis B (Prisons)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have contracted hepatitis B while in prison; and how many prisoners have died from hepatitis B (a) in prison and (b) following release in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Rumbold: The number of reported cases of acute hepatitis B infectition among prisoners in England and Wales for each of the last five statistical years—April to March—is:

	Number
1986-87	150
1987-88	155
1988-89	105
1989-90	56
1990-91	20

From the available statistical information it is not possible to presume how many of these prisoners became infected in prison. No prisoner died from hepatitis B infection in the five-year period. Statistical information about deaths after release from prison custody is not collected.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were immunised against hepatitis B while in prison in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Rumbold: I regret that this information is not available in statistical form and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the prison medical service offers immunisation against hepatitis B.

Mrs. Rumbold: Yes. Prison medical officers are recommended to offer vaccination to those prisoners who are identified as belonging to a high-risk behaviour group and who are expected to remain in the prison system long enough to complete the six-month course.

Mr. Ian Borovikov

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Mr. Ian Borovikov (XC1225), currently in Her Majesty's prison, Pentonville, completed his sentence; when he expects to make a decision regarding his deportation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Mr. Borovikov completed his sentence on 16 August and he has since been detained by virtue of Winchester Crown court's recommendation on 31 July 1991 that he be deported. Mr. Borovikov's appeal against his conviction was dismissed on 28 November but he has until 16 December to renew his application. No decision will be taken about his deportation until the final outcome of his appeal is known.

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in rank order for each (i) police authority, (ii) county police authority in England, including average figures, (a) the number of police officers per 1,000 of the population and (b) the amount spent on the police per person.

Alleged Police Assaults

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Metropolitan police commissioner regarding the number of complaints he has received of alleged assault in each of the following police stations: (a) Dalston E8, (b) Carter street SE17, (c) Fulham SW6, (d) Hammersmith W6 and (e) Stoke Newington N16; and what has been the outcome in each case.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. These are matters for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Police Complaints Authority regarding the number of complaints it has received of alleged assault at each of the following police stations: (a) Dalston E8, (b) Carter street SE17, (c) Fulham SW6, (d) Hammersmith W6 and (e) Stoke Newington N16; and what has been the outcome in each case.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. This is a matter for the Police Complaints Authority and it would not be appropriate for my right hon. Friend to call formally for a report from it on its supervision or review of specific complaints.

Data Protection Registrar

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward proposals to require the Data Protection Registrar to allow any group or organisation to register either (a) using a Welsh language title or (b) through the Welsh language.

Mrs. Rumbold: Enforcement of the Data Protection Act 1984 is a matter for the registrar and ultimately for the Data Protection Tribunal and the courts. I understand, however, that the registrar has for some years provided a Welsh version of the registration application form and associated booklet. An organisation with a Welsh title may register in this form.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to ensure that the Data Protection Registrar responds to all correspondence in Welsh to his Department by replying in the Welsh language, or, at least, bilingually in Welsh and English.

Mrs. Rumbold: Enforcement of the Data Protection Act 1984 is a matter for the registrar and ultimately the Data Protection Tribunal and the courts. I understand, however, that the language in which the registrar replies to correspondence in Welsh is currently the subject of correspondence between him and the Welsh Language Board.

Police Batons

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider the introduction of the side-handled baton as a means of providing enhanced protection for police officers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We should be prepared to consider arranging for a scientific evaluation of any equipment which might assist in public order control if chief officers requested it. I understand that chief officers have no wish to bring the side-handled baton into use.

Electoral Registration

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place the public opinion survey carried out by his Department, entitled "Post Campaign Research for Electoral Registration Advertising", in the Library.

Mrs. Rumbold: The findings of research into the effectiveness of this year's advertising campaign on electoral registration are not yet available. I shall arrange for a copy of the report to be placed in the Library early in the new year.

Prison Escapes

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what attempts Nicholas Mullen is known to have made, or been involved in, to escape from prison prior to his recent attempt to escape from Full Sutton prison;

(2) if he will make a statement on the recent attempted escape from Full Sutton prison by Nicholas Mullen and others and on the circumstances which led to its discovery.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: As a result of security intelligence, cell searches made at Her Majesty's prison Full Sutton on 24 November led to the discovery of a quantity of escape equipment. Appropriate security and other action has been taken by the governor. It is not the practice to disclose detailed security information about arrangements at the prison or in relation to individual inmates.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have now been taken to court and convicted for non-payment of the poll tax in England and Wales; how many have received prison sentences; how many have turned up in court to argue their cases; how many hours of court time have been involved and, based on the average cost per hour of a magistrates court, at what cost to public funds.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1991, col. 329]: During the period 1 April 1990 to 30 September 1991 195,480 people in England and Wales attended community charge liability hearings.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Pupil Exclusions

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice his Department issues to local education authorities about the number of hours of tuition to be provided for children on permanent or indefinite exclusion from school; and what assessment he has made of whether such children are receiving sufficient tuition to cover the whole of the national curriculum provisions.

Mr. Fallon: The Department does not issue guidance about the number of hours of tuition to be provided for children excluded from school. That is a matter for local education authorities to decide in the light of individual circumstances. It is the responsibility of the head teacher, the governing body and the local education authority to secure the provision of the full national curriculum to all pupils of compulsory school age registered at maintained schools, save to the extent that they may have been statutorily excepted from some part of it.

Science Research Fellowships

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has concerning science research fellowships offered (a) by United Kingdom companies and (b) to United Kingdom residents by overseas companies; and if he will make a statement on the support offered by British industry and to scientific research in educational establishments.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department does not collect this information. We do, however, welcome support for scientific research from both United Kingdom businesses and overseas companies with a base in the United Kingdom.

School Meals

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average subsidy paid by both local government and Her Majesty's Government for each paid school meal.

Mr. Fallon: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children are on the school roll in England and Wales; and how many of those receive free school meals in primary, secondary and special schools, respectively.

Mr. Fallon: A table showing provisional figures for the number of children on roll in maintained primary, secondary and special schools in England in January 1991 and, of those, the number receiving free school meals on the census date follows. Information on schools in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

	Pupils on roll	Free Meals
Primary Schools	4,099,607	562,993
Secondary Schools	2,848,224	235,107
Special Schools	82,952	23,273

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much it would cost to extend the provision of free school meals beyond children of families in receipt of income support to children of families in receipt of family credit.

Mr. Fallon: Family credit rates already include an allowance towards school costs. As the cost of a school meal is not fixed it is impossible to calculate the figure requested.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much it would cost to make free school meals available to all, assuming the current take-up rate of 75 per cent.; and what increase in the education budgets of both central and local expenditure this would represent.

Mr. Fallon: Provision of school meals and the level of charges for them are matters for local education authorities. In 1989-90 local education authorities in England collected some £296 million of income from customers as payment for school meals and milk. That represents some 1·9 per cent. of their total net recurrent expenditure on education.

GCSE

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) into how many streams he intends that students for the new GCSE courses should be divided; by what criteria the students concerned, including new entrants into each new school, are allocated into specific streams; and whether such allocation will be made by (a) school authorities, (b) parents of each student or (c) the students themselves;

(2) what extra resources will be made available by the Government to the local education authority in Devon in 1991 to enable separate streams of students in each GCSE to be instructed properly; how the need for such resources has been calculated, and upon what assumptions; and what specific provision has been made for streaming in small secondary schools.

Mr. Eggar: School organisation and the allocation of resources are matters for the schools and local education authorities themselves to decide.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what time interval he has allowed in his calculations for ordering and delivery of the necessary books and teaching aids by schools between the publication of the new GCSE syllabi and the commencement of the autumn terms of secondary schools in 1992.

Mr. Eggar: Syllabuses in the core subjects are expected to be in schools by April 1992. This should allow sufficient time for the ordering of those materials needed by the start of the autumn term, especially given that schools already have information on the curriculum and that not all books and aids are required from the start of the two-year GCSE courses.

Elmbridge Road School, Gloucester

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he received an application for Gloucestershire education authority for an allocation of capital funds for Elmbridge road infants school, Gloucester, on the grounds of exceptional need; and what action he proposes to take.

Mr. Fallon: Following my reply of 3 October to the hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. French), Gloucestershire submitted a request on 8 November for the proposed building work at Elmbridge county infants school to be considered as exceptional basic need in the allocation of annual capital guidelines for education (ACGs) for 1992-93. This is being considered in the light of bids from all local education authorities and of the resources available.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received regarding conditions at Elmbridge road infants school, Gloucester; and what action he proposes to take.

Mr. Fallon: Seven letters about conditions at Elmbridge county infants school have been received from the hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. French), as well as a petition from parents of children at the school. It is for the local education authority to decide the allocation of resources for building work at its schools.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what assumption has been made by the Government regarding the level of the teachers' pay award to be implemented from April 1992;

(2) what recognition is given in the standard spending assessment figures for 1992-1993 to the full year effects of last year's teacher pay settlement.

Mr. Eggar: The education standard spending total for 1992-93 takes account in broad terms of the range of pressures on the education service, including follow through from the 1991-92 teachers' pay settlement. It also takes general account of the scope that local authorities have to make efficiency savings. My right hon. and learned Friend has asked the school teachers' review body, in making its recommendations for teachers' pay for 1992-93, to have regard to affordability given the level of education standard spending for 1992-93.

Costs and Allowances

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what allowances in cash terms has been made for the additional costs in 1992-93 of implementing Government legislation for the (a) Education Reform Act, national curriculum and local management of schools, (b) introducing a regular programme of teacher appraisal, (c) vocational training arising from the introduction of non-vocational qualifications, and (d) additional education welfare officers required to cope with education supervision orders arising from the Children Act 1989;

(2) what allowance in cash terms has been made for further additional costs in 1992-93 to reflect (a) additional teachers for the projected increase in primary and secondary pupil numbers, (b) non-teaching staff, books, equipment, and home-to-school transport for these additional pupils, (c) additional lecturers and associated running costs due to the projected increase in student numbers in higher and further education, (d) the 2·2 per cent. increase in discretionary awards to reflect the projected increase in the number of further education students, (e) increased maintenance of school buildings, (f) increases in number of statemented pupils and pupils with special educational needs, (g) salary increments and incentive allowances and (h) commitments on capital projects.

Mr. Eggar: The 1992-93 RSG settlement allows for local authorities in England to spend £18,730 million on education, some £1,245 million or 7·1 per cent. more than allowed for in this year's RSG settlement. In setting the total of £18,730 million, the Government have taken general account of demographic and other pressures on the service and of the scope for making savings and re-deploying spending to meet new priorities. Within the settlement, the Government are providing specific grant support to help implement their reforms through the combined programme of education support grants and LEA training grants. This will support £377 million earmarked expenditure in 1992-93, including £176 million on implementation of the national curriculum; £82·5 million on school management, including local management of schools, and teacher appraisal; and £10 million on training for NVQs in further education and to help schools and sixth form colleges offer vocational qualifications post-16.

Budget, Wolverhampton

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assumption has been made regarding the level of inflation throughout 1992-93 in the allocation of the education budget for Wolverhampton borough council.

Mr. Eggar: It is for Wolverhampton metropolitan borough council to decide the basis on which to draw up its educational budget for 1992-93.

Reading Standards

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to establish, in respect of children shown as unable to read at the age of seven years, the correlation with (a) the socio-economic conditions of their home background and (b) the provision of under-fives schooling.

Mr. Eggar: The results of the 1991 assessments of seven-year-olds once published may provide the basis for further studies of the kind outlined by my hon. Friend.

Research Councils

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidance he has offered to research councils on the desirability of raising revenue from their activities and projects; and if he will place the text of such guidance in the Library.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Within their charter responsibilities, the terms of their financial memoranda with the Department, and central guidance on fees and charges, the research councils are free to raise revenue from their activities and projects, and are encouraged to do so where appropriate. In particular, they are expected to protect and exploit fully any intellectual property that they own.

Pupil Testing

Dame Janet Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many local education authorities have received the full results for the tests for seven-year-olds and have submitted them to his Department.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will now publish the aggregate test results for the standard assessment tests at key stage 1 for each local education authority and nationally.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend intends to publish the national results of this summer's tests on seven-year-olds, together with the results of LEAs in England, as soon as the outstanding results, submitted by LEAs to the Department by the end of November, have been checked and analysed.

Exclusion from School

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the number of children on (a) permanent and (b) indefinite exclusion from school; and if he will list this in tabular form by local education authority.

Mr. Fallon: The Department is collecting data on permanent exclusions in the two-year period from May 1990. It is not yet possible to provide data by local education authority on a standard basis.

No information on indefinite exclusions is collected centrally.

School Governors

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the proposals to prevent teachers from being school governors at the school which their own children attend.

Mr. Fallon: Representations have been received from local education authorities and other interested bodies about the proposed amendments to the Education (School Government) Regulations 1989.

Higher Education

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the Scottish total of degrees and higher diplomas awarded per 100 of relevant age group in Scotland on the same basis as used in figure C on page 4 of "Higher Education: Meeting the Challenge" (Cm. 114).

Mr. Alan Howarth: In 1988-89, on the same basis as used in figure C on page 4 of "Higher Education: Meeting the Challenge", it is estimated that 26 per cent. of the appropriate age group in the United Kingdom, and 31 per cent. of the age group in Scotland, achieved first degrees or other undergraduate higher education qualifications.

NATIONAL FINANCE

BT (Share Sale)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Government's sale of part of its residual shareholding in British Telecommunications plc.

Mr. Maude: I am pleased to report that the BT share sale was successfully completed this morning, when dealings started in the partly paid shares on the London stock exchange.

Reflecting bids received in the international tender, the price of the third instalment was set at 105p per share.

Accordingly, the offer price for United Kingdom public applicants was 335p per share—comprising 110p paid on successful application, 120p to be paid by 7 July 1992, and 105p to be paid by 2 March 1993—and the offer price for applicants in the international tender was 350p per share—comprising 125p paid on successful application, 120p to be paid by 7 July 1992, and 105p to be paid by 2 March 1993.

Some 2·8 million applications were received in the United Kingdom public offer for a total of some 1·760 million BT shares. This represented some two and a half times the 675 million shares initially expected to be sold in the United Kingdom public offer.

In response to this level of applications, the Government took advantage of their ability to increase the total number of offered shares from 1,350 million to 1,575 million. The Government also decided—within this figure—to make 1,050 million shares available to applicants in the United Kingdom public offer. The remaining 525 million shares were made available to bidders in the international tender.

The number of shares to which I have referred does not include any shares that S. G. Warburg Securities may have over-allotted in connection with the international tender offer, and the extent of any such over-allotment is not to be disclosed. As already announced, S. G. Warburg Securities may also effect stabilisation transactions.

For this reason, details of the numbers of shares taken up by each of the 10 regional bidding syndicates cannot be given until after 7 January 1992. However, I can say that the United Kingdom represented more than half the shares sold by Her Majesty's Treasury in the international tender offer, and that individual investors bidding in the United Kingdom retail tender bid for some 125 million shares.

In addition to the shares sold in the offers, S. G. Warburg Securities, as global co-ordinator for the sale, holds an option to acquire from HM Treasury up to a further 118·125 million shares for the purpose of meeting any over-allotments made by it in connection with the international tender offer. This option must be exercised by 7 January 1992.

Under the United Kingdom public offer, the number of shares applied for represented some 1·7 times the 1,050 million BT shares sold. Almost 99 per cent. of applicants received an allocation of BT shares, and some 43 per cent. of applicants had their applications met in full. Some 88 per cent. of applications were made through share shops, stockbrokers or other financial intermediaries.

More than 400,000 qualifying BT shareholders and more than 50,000 eligible BT employees made applications in the United Kingdom public offer, all of whom received an allocation of BT shares.

Total gross proceeds from the sale of the offered shares amount to some £5·35 billion, of which some £1·81 billion are received in this financial year.

Total gross proceeds, and proceeds this year, may be further increased—up to maxima of £5·77 billion and £1·96 billion respectively—depending on the extent, if any, to which S. G. Warburg Securities exercises its option to acquire further shares.

Details of the costs of the share sale will be published in the new year.

Following the share offer, the Government will hold some 1,366 million BT shares, approximately 22 per cent. of the total currently in issue, before deducting any BT shares that may be purchased by S. G. Warburg Securities pursuant to its over-allotment option and the BT shares that may be needed to meet share bonus entitlements under the United Kingdom public offer.

VAT

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the changes to the VAT system since 1978-79, including both changes in the rate of VAT and changes in classification of goods and services.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: From 18 June 1979, the higher rate of VAT, which was applied at the rate of 12½ per cent. to petrol, domestic electric appliances, radios, televisions and hi-fi equipment, pleasure boats and aircraft, towing caravans, photographic equipment, furs and jewellery, was abolished and the standard rate of VAT was increased from 8 to 15 per cent. On 1 April 1991 the standard rate was increased to 17½ per cent.

Other major changes to the VAT system are listed in the "Financial Statement and Budget Reports" for each year.

National Insurance

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for each Budget since May 1979 if he will list each of the changes to national insurance contributions and income tax which raised more than £5 million in revenue, in 1991-92 prices, giving for each change the full-year yield in 1991-92 prices.

Mr. Maude: Information in terms of money of the day is available in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" and the autumn statement for the years in question.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) basic rate and (b) higher rate taxpayers would be affected in 1991-92 by extending national insurance contributions to all employee taxable benefits in kind, for employees who earn over £8,500; and if he will give the average annual cost per individual with gross incomes between (a) £10,000 and £20,000, (b) £20,000 and £30,000, (c) £30,000 and £40,000, (d) £40,000 and £50,000 and (e) over £50,000, respectively.

Mr. Maude: Estimates of those who would be subject to such a charge for 1991-92 are as follows:

Total Income	Basic Rate Taxpayers Numbers (000s)	Average cost[1] £
below £10,000	200	120
£10,000—£19,999	1,300	120
£20,000—£29,999	500	200
£30,000 and over	—	—
Total	2,000	140

[1]Assuming the contracted-in contribution rate of 9 per cent.

In addition, some 100,000 higher rate taxpayers would face an additional charge averaging £570.

Most higher-rate taxpayers and some basic rate taxpayers have earnings above the upper earnings limit for employee national insurance contributions and therefore would not be subject to an additional charge on their benefits.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the revenue yield in (a) the first year, (b) a full year, assuming this is introduced at the beginning of 1991-92, (c) the first year and (d) a full year, assuming this is introduced at the beginning of 1992-93, of extending national insurance contributions to all employee taxable benefits in kind, for employees in (1) Great Britain and (2) Northern Ireland who earn over £8,500, distinguishing between employee and employer contributions and listing the revenue from each benefit.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 5 December 1991]: The additional revenue for the United Kingdom in a full year at 1991-92 levels is shown in the table, which gives the available analysis by type of benefit. The estimates are based on an employee contribution rate of 9 per cent. and an employer contribution rate of 10·4 per cent. and take account of the fact that many taxpayers who receive taxable benefits have earnings above the upper earnings limit. The estimates are calculated using the taxable value of the benefits. The yield in the first year would depend on the administrative arrangements made to collect the new charge. The yield for 1992-93 would depend on the level of employer-provided benefits in that year. Separate estimates are not available for Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

Revenue yield for 1991-92

Type of benefit	From employees £ million	From employers £ million
Car	200	[1]0
Car fuel	20	[1]0
Private medical insurance	10	40
Home telephone	—	10
Beneficial loans	—	20
Other benefits	110	230
Total	340	300

[1] These items are already subject to employer contributions.

Income Tax

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on Treasury revenues in 1991-92 and in a full year of introducing an upper limit on all income tax allowances and reliefs of (a) £10,000, (b) £15,000 and (c) £20,000 a year, with (i) the current tax allowances and reliefs and (ii) limiting the following allowances and reliefs to the basic rate (1) the married couple's allowance, (2) age allowances, (3) relief on contributions to personal pensions and (4) relief on employee's contributions to occupational pension schemes, giving the revenue from each relief separately, the total revenue and the numbers of people affected, for Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Maude: It is estimated that at 1991-92 levels of income the introduction of the upper limits specified would yield the following:

	£	£	£
Upper limit for total allowances and reliefs	10,000	15,000	20,000
Yield in a full year under the current tax regime (£ million)	590	240	140
Yield following the restriction of specified reliefs and allowances to the basic rate (£ million)	410	180	110

The estimated yield from restricting all allowances, except the basic personal allowance, to the basic rate is about £300 million. The estimated yield from restricting relief on occupational pension contributions to the basic rate is about £250 million in a full year. About 800,000 people would lose as a result of this change. For personal pensions the yield would be about £150 million with some 300,000 people losing.

The number of people with total allowances and reliefs in excess of £10,000 is about 635,000. The corresponding figures for £15,000 and £20,000 are about 75,000 and 35,000 respectively. The estimates of revenue yield do not take account of any behavioural effects which might result from the introduction of such a limit.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the revenue yield from the introduction of a 50 per cent. top rate of income tax on annual taxable incomes of (i) £31,705, (ii) £33,705, (iii) £36,705, (iv) £39,705 and (v) £42,705, (a) in the first year and (b) in a full year, assuming this is introduced at the beginning of 1991-92, and (c) in the first year and (d) in a full year, assuming this is introduced at the beginning of 1992-93, with (1) the current system of tax allowances and (2) limiting all tax allowances and reliefs (except the single person's allowance) to the basic rate, in Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Maude: Estimates of the increase in liability to income tax are as follows. These do not allow for any behavioural effects that might result from such changes to the tax system and do not include capital gains tax.

Yield from introduction of a 50 per cent. income tax band

£ million

Threshold taxable income (£)	With current tax structure		Restricting allowances[1] and reliefs to basic rate
	1991-92	1992-93	1991-92	1992-93
31,705	2,330	2,540	3,650	3,960
33,705	2,170	2,360	3,460	3,740
36,705	1,960	2,130	3,210	3,470
39,705	1,790	1,940	3,010	3,240
42,705	1,640	1,780	2,830	3,050

[1] Except the personal allowance.

Approximately one half of the full year yield from such a 50 per cent. band would affect income tax receipts in the year of its introduction.

Third World Debt

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the value to the United Kingdom was of debt interest payments from developing countries in 1990-91.

Mr. Maples: The total of debt interest payments from developing countries to the United Kingdom Government during 1990-91 was £232 million, comprising approximately £228 million of payments to the Export Credits Guarantee Department on rescheduled debt and £4 million of payments to the Overseas Development Administration in respect of aid loans.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current total of outstanding debt owed to the United Kingdom by developing countries.

Mr. Maples: The total of developing country debt outstanding owed to the United Kingdom Government is £5,739 million, comprising £5,089 million of claims and outstanding interest on those claims owed to the Export Credits Guarantee Department and £650 million owed to the Overseas Development Administration.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current total of outstanding debt owed to United Kingdom commercial banks by developing countries.

Mr. Maples: I refer the hon. Lady to the figures contained in table 15 of the latest "Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin", published in November 1991.

Operation Scotcheck

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the involvement of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in Operation Scotcheck carried out in Scotland on 13 November.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 5 December 1991]: Officers of Customs and Excise carried out tests of the fuel in vehicles' tanks during Operation Scotcheck. The operation, which was primarily a police check on vehicles carrying dangerous substances, was conducted between 0930 and 1600 on Wednesday 13 November at eight separate locations. A total of 528 tests were carried out by two customs officers at each of the eight locations. One vehicle, which was found to be running on rebated fuel, was seized under section 141 of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 and restored for the sum of £200.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when this year's public expenditure exercise was completed.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 6 December 1991]: This year's public expenditure plans were announced on 6 November in the autumn statement and published on 13 November in Cm. 1729.

TRANSPORT

Air Fares

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority to discuss the level of fares charged by British Airways on its European routes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have no present plans to do so. The Commission has taken a decision on certain fares which the CAA judged to be too high and which we accordingly referred to the Commission under the current EC Air Fares Regulation. The Commission appears to have agreed with us, at least to some extent. But the decision has not yet been received, and we shall need, in conjunction with the CAA, to study it carefully once we have it.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the EC Transport Commissioner to discuss the reduction of European air fares; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have no plans to do so. The Commission has taken a decision on certain fares which we referred to it under the current EC Air Fares Regulation as being too high. It appears to have agreed with us, at least to some extent. But the formal decision has not yet been received and we shall need to study it carefully once we have it.

Multi-airline Business

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in establishing a more competitive multi-airline business in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government have continued to pursue policies of increasing the scope for competition in all aviation markets, so that a variety of United Kingdom airlines have as many opportunities as possible to offer services to the public. Both internationally and domestically this has been reflected in the competition between two or more United Kingdom operators on a substantial number of routes, and in the benefits that that has brought to the consumer. Between 1985 and 1990, the number of domestic routes served by two or more United Kingdom airlines rose from 22 to 38. The Government have been successful in negotiating more liberal bilateral agreements with a number of foreign Governments, and will vigorously continue to seek further opportunities to do so. Within the European Community the United Kingdom is prominent in pressing for a truly liberal aviation regime after 1992, so that all British airlines have full and fair opportunities to compete in the single market.

Marine Accident Investigation Branch

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to review the work of the marine accident investigation branch of his Department with a view to strengthening its powers to include the initiation of prosecutions against those who break maritime laws.

Mr. McLoughlin: Although the marine accident investigation branch has no powers to prosecute, it can and does recommend to the Department's marine directorate that legal proceedings should be instituted if such a course of action is practicable and warranted.

As the regulatory body it is proper that the initiation of prosecution proceedings should be exercised by the marine directorate and not by the MAIB.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he proposes to make in the running of the marine accident investigation branch of his Department following the accidents involving the Wilhelmina J and the Zulfikar; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: No changes to the marine accident investigation branch inquiry procedures are necessary following the Wilhelmina J/Zulfikar accident. Administrative procedures concerning the general release of information gained from an investigation are, however, under review and if, as a result, changes in statutory provisions are required, these will be made and placed before Parliament.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the work, powers and responsibilities of the marine accident investigation branch of his Department.

Mr. McLoughlin: The work of the marine accident investigation branch is largely governed by the Merchant Shipping (Accident Investigation) Regulations 1989. The powers of inspectors, which are wide, are set out in section 27 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1979. The principal responsibility of the branch is to investigate marine accidents to determine their circumstances and causes with the aim of improving the safety of life at sea and the avoidance of accidents in the future. The chief inspector of marine accidents is required under the Accident Investigation Regulations to publish from time to time collective summaries of investigations and, where an inspectors' inquiry has taken place, to make a report to the Secretary of State.

Ocean Hound

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assistance is being offered by his Department to the widows of the fishermen on the trawler Ocean Hound to salvage the ship and bring the bodies home for burial.

Mr. McLoughlin: Sadly, the Ocean Hound is not the only fishing vessel to have sunk in recent months with the loss of all on board. The Department cannot justify paying for, or contributing towards the costs of, raising the wrecks in the hope (and it can only be a hope) that the bodies might be recovered.

Motorway Lighting

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will examine the feasibility of providing increased lighting on motorways.

Mr. Chope: Lighting is installed on motorways where the predicted night-time accident savings due to lighting outweigh the installation and future maintenance costs, taking account of possible environmental effects. The increase in traffic now forecast and current proposals to widen much of the motorway system will result in increased lighting provision on motorways.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has had over the standard of lighting on motorways.

Mr. Chope: Representations are received from time to time on motorway lighting standards, which are required to comply with British and international standards.

Marine Pollution

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on the implementation of annex II of Marpol 73/78; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Merchant Shipping (Control of Pollution by Noxious Liquid Substances in Bulk) Regulations 1987 came into force on 6 April 1987. They apply to United Kingdom ships wherever they may be and to other ships while they are in the United Kingdom or its territorial waters.

The regulations were updated with effect from 1 January 1991 to take into account additional noxious substances.

A1 (Upgrading)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the schemes in preparation for the upgrading of the A1 to motorway, indicating in each case the position reached and the future timetable.

Mr. Chope: Listed in the table are details of all the schemes along the A1 which are either under construction or in preparation. Work is in hand to determine the scope and timing of further schemes to upgrade the remaining stretches of the route to motorway standard between London (junction with the M25) and Tyneside.

Rail Crossings

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many applications he estimates will be made in England in the five years following the coming into operation of the provisions in schedule 2 of the Transport and Works Bill for (a) rail crossing diversion orders in respect of bridleways, (b) rail crossing extinguishment orders in respect of bridleways, (c) rail crossing diversion orders in respect of footpaths and (d) rail crossing extinguishment orders in respect of footpaths.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for railway operators, primarily British Rail, but I understand that no comprehensive forecasts are currently available.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many crossings of (a) footpaths and (b) bridleways there are in England over railway lines where the line speed is 100 mph or higher;

(2) how many crossings of (a) footpaths and (b) bridleways there are in Scotland over railway lines where the line speed is 100 mph or higher.

Mr. Freeman: Full information is not available. I understand from BR that on the east coast main line there is a total of 139 footpath and bridleway crossings in England, and none in Scotland.

Road Contracts

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the 20 contractors who have received the largest share of motorway and trunk road contracts in each of the last three years, giving for each contractor the value of the contracts received.

Mr. Chope: Motorway and trunk road construction contracts valued at more than £1 million were awarded as attached.

A13 (Lane Closure)

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how long he expects the lane closure to be in effect on the A13 south of Barking.

Mr. Chope: The closure is necessary to reduce the loading on the old bridge over the River Roding which a recent assessment has shown to be overstressed. Investigations are being undertaken urgently to determine the extent of any remedial work. Until these are completed I am unable to say how long the closure will continue.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has had from driving instructors concerning the DVLA's mailing of provisional licences along with a British School of Motoring advertisement.

Mr. Chope: I have received many representations both direct from individual driving instructors and via Members of Parliament.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why it was decided to serve the compulsory orders for the east London river crossing roads before satisfying the European Commission about compliance with the directive on environmental assessment.

Mr. Chope: The decision to make all the outstanding orders was announced on 27 September. The making of these orders does not prejudice the outcome of the exchange with the European Commission on this matter. Major construction work will not start for some time. We intend to reply to the Commission shortly.

Driving Licence Fees

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy regarding charging drivers over 70 years of age a fee every three years to renew their driving licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 6 December 1991]: The driver licensing system is required to be self-financing. It is currently in deficit and will continue to be so unless the fee structure is revised. The main reasons for this are the sharp reduction in the number of 17-year-olds who are applying for first provisional driving licences—and provide the main source of income to the driver licensing system—and the increase in the number of drivers at age 70 and over who are renewing their licences.

Unless the fee base is broadened, the first applicants will have to pay a substantially higher fee and will bear an increasingly disproportionate amount of the cost of running the system.

The balance of equity within the new fee structure has been supported generally in public consultation. The new £6 fee for the over-70s renewal remains less than the average cost of dealing with applications from this age group. The cost of expensive medical examinations, often required at the Secretary of State's request, continue to be paid by DVLA. The over-70s are more likely to require these examinations and therefore benefit most from this continuing cross-subsidy within the system.

Provisional Car Licences

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the number of provisional car licences to be issued in 1992-93.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 6 December 1991]: It is estimated that 920,000 provisional car licences will be issued in 1992-93.

Road Advertisements

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield of 22 November, Official Report, column 319, what action he has taken following his receipt of a copy of a complaint to the Advertising Standards Authority regarding the placing of roadside advertisements with the slogan "Road Ahead Flooded".

Mr. Chope [holding answer 6 December 1991]: We are awaiting the adjudication of the Advertising Standards Authority.

ENVIRONMENT

Priority Homeless Statistics

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the proportion of all permanent lettings to new tenants in two-bedroom or larger dwellings going to the priority homeless for (i) lettings in the local authority's own stock, (ii) nominations to housing associations, (iii) nominations to mobility schemes and for each local authority all lettings (iv) in England and by his Department's regions in England in 1990-91.

Mr. Yeo: The information derived from English local authorities' annual housing investment programme returns is as follows:

Percentage of lettings of 2 bedroom or larger dwellings to households accepted as priority cases under homelessness legislation—1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991

DOE region	Local authority secure lettings to new tenants	Nominations to housing associations	Nominations to mobility schemes	All lettings of local authority dwellings[1]

Inland Waterways Amenities Advisory Council

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether a representative of the Government attends meetings of the Inland Waterways Amenities Advisory Council; when the last meeting between the Inland Waterways Amenities Advisory Council and a representative of the Government took place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: An official from the Department commonly attends meetings of the Inland Waterways Amenity Advisory Council. The chairman and the vice-chairman designate of the council met my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry), on 17 October 1991, and officials on 27 November 1991.

Noise Abatement

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to introduce any changes in the noise abatement zone procedures.

Mr. Baldry: The noise review working party last year recommended that noise abatement zone procedures would be more useful if they were to be simplified. We intend to consult a sample of local authorities next year on this proposition.

Housing

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of vacant dwellings by tenure for each local authority in England and Wales.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities report the number of their own dwellings which were vacant and estimates of the numbers of vacant dwellings owned by housing associations, by other public sector landlords and in the private sector in their annual housing investment programme (HIP1) returns. "Other public sector" includes dwellings owned by another local authority.

The available figures for 1 April 1990 and 1991 are in columns A71, A72, A73 and A74, respectively, of the "HIP1 All Items Print" for those years. For 1 April 1980 the figures for local authority dwellings are in column A81, for local authority-financed housing association dwellings in A82, for other housing association dwellings in A83, for other public sector in A84 and for private sector in A85 of the "1980 HIP1 All Items Print".

Copies of all these documents are in the Library.

For information about Wales I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority in England and Wales, in 1979-80, 1989-90 and 1990-91, the number of unfit dwellings and number of dwellings not unfit but in need of renovation, by tenure.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities provide estimates of the number of such dwellings at 1 April each year in their annual housing investment programme returns (HIP1). The available information for local authorities in England appears in the "HIP1 All Items Print" for the relevant year, at the column references stated. The figures are not necessarily comparable as authorities' criteria differ and they are generally best estimates based on available information rather than comprehensive surveys.

[1] The statutory definition of unfitness was changed in 1990. The revised definition brings more dwellings into this category which includes all those lacking amenities. Separate figures for dwellings that were fit under the old definition but lacked basic amenities were collected for previous years.
[2] The information collected for private sector dwellings that were not substandard but in need of renovation in 1991 relates only to dwellings whose owners were likely to be eligible for discretionary renovation grants.
[3] For 1980 there were separate estimates for local authority funded housing association dwellings and others.
[4] Other public sector includes dwellings owned by other local authorities, government departments and other public sector agencies.

Copies of all the documents are in the Library.

For information about Welsh authorities I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Disabled Facilities Grant

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the operation of disabled facilities grant under the Local Government and Housing Act 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Since the disabled facilities grant was introduced in July 1990, my Department has received about 150 representations from hon. Members and around 130 representations from local authorities and members of the public. A further 64 representations on the operation of the scheme have been received from local authorities and other bodies, in response to the Department's current review of the renovation grant system, and these are not being analysed. We hope to announce the results of this review in the new year.

Environmental Conferences

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many conferences Ministers or civil servants in his Department have attended on the environment from 1985 to date; and if he will list the conferences at which his Department will be represented in each of the next four years.

Mr. Trippier: Comprehensive information on the period from 1985 could not be made available except at disproportionate cost. Information for each of the next four years is not available.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much toxic waste in tonnes was produced by industries in the United Kingdom for every year since 1979.

Mr. Baldry: The amount of toxic wastes—that is, special waste as defined under the Control of Pollution Act (Special Waste) Regulations 1980—produced in industries in the United Kingdom in each year since 1986 were:

	thousand tonnes
1986-87	1,630
1987-88	[1]2,140
1988-90	2,320
1990-91	[2]2,000

[1] Not including Wales.
[2] Figures incomplete, awaiting final reports and validations.

Figures for years before 1986 are not readily available.

Rents into Mortgages

Mr. Soley: To ask The Secretary of State for the Environment how many properties have been sold to date under the rents into mortgages pilot schemes in (a) Basildon and (b) Milton Keynes; how many sales are expected in the remainder of the current financial year; and what is the total estimated cost of setting up, promoting and administering the respective pilot schemes.

Sir George Young: In Basildon, 28 sales have so far been completed and a further 53 are currently with solicitors; 67 properties were sold in Milton Keynes before the pilot scheme was concluded in preparation for the bulk transfer of the development corporation's housing stock to new landlords. In addition, a total of more than 100 applicants have decided instead to exercise their right to buy.

The pilot schemes were financed within the existing budgets of the Commission for the New Towns in Basildon and the Milton Keynes development corporation.

Household Waste (Burning)

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the emission limits and storage controls on electric power-generating plants which burn household waste.

Mr. Baldry: All plant burning household waste will require an authorisation under part 1 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. For plants designed to incinerate such waste at a rate of less than 1 tonne per hour the emission limits and storage controls are given in "Environmental Protection Act 1990, Part 1; Processes Prescribed for Air Pollution Control by Local Authorities; Secretary of State's Guidance" PG 5/4 (91) (ISBN 0-11-752397-6), available from HMSO. For plants designed to incinerate such waste at a rate of 1 tonne or more per hour the emission limits and storage controls are given in "Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution, Chief Inspector's Guidance to Inspectors. IPR 5/3". This guidance note is currently the subject of consultation and is scheduled for publication in April 1992. Copies of the draft note may be obtained from HMIP.

Corine Programme

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department received the Commission report SEC(91) 958 final on the Corine programme concerning the gathering, co-ordination and standardisation of information on the environment and national resources in the EC; and if he will make a statement on the programme's effects in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Baldry: A copy of the final Commission report was received by my Department in early June 1991.

The Corine programme has resulted in improved co-ordination in the environmental information field between all EC member states. In particular, common methodologies have been developed, and some data collection procedures established, thus enabling progress to be made towards a decentralised Community-wide environmental information system. These developments will contribute to the formulation and monitoring of EC environmental policy.

New Town Housing, Warrington

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the results of the ballot of former new town housing tenants in Warrington.

Mr. Yeo: The results of the ballot of new town tenants in Warrington on the future ownership of their homes were announced by the Commission for the New Towns on 2 December. A total of 85·5 per cent. of those eligible took part in the ballot and, of these, 81 per cent. (2,746) voted for a housing association as their future landlord and 19 per cent. (654) voted for their properties to be transferred to Warrington borough council. Each tenant was given the choice between the borough council and the housing association currently managing their estate for the commission on an agency basis, and the details for each housing association are:

(a) Grosvenor housing association and Warrington borough council

	per cent.
Rate of participation	79
Percentage voting for housing association	[1]74

Local Government Finance

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in determining the revenue support grant level for 1992-93, what recognition has been given to the fact that local authorities are experiencing difficulties in selling surplus assets at reasonable prices and that fewer tenants are willing to take on a mortgage to purchase their council house.

Mr. Key: Total standard spending for 1992-93 represents the Government's view of the appropriate amount of revenue spending by local authorities to provide services to a standard level taking account of what can be afforded nationally. Within that total, allowance is made for the revenue consequences of capital spending —any factors affecting the potential for generating capital receipts have been considered in reaching a view about that figure.

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the basis of his assessment that the need for revenue resources to finance capital expenditure by local authorities will fall by £133 million next year; and if he expects local authorities to reduce their capital programmes by this amount, or whether equivalent resources have been transferred to capital credit approvals for next year.

Mr. Key: Total standard spending (TSS) for 1992-93 has been determined to permit an appropriate level of revenue spending on all local authority services, bearing in mind the need for efficiency and taking a realistic view of what taxpayers locally and nationally can afford. Within that, the total amount allowed for capital spending financed from revenue represents the Government's view of the relative priority to be accorded to this type of financing. It is, however, for individual authorities to determine their spending priorities as between services and their preferred methods of financing that expenditure.

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the factors on which his assumption that the revenue support grant will enable local authorities to increase their interest received on cash flow balances etc. by £293 million are based.

Mr. Key: The element within standard spending assessments which takes account of the interest received on balances etc. will in fact be £292 million lower for 1992-93 on the basis of the proposals announced by my right hon. Friend on 26 November. This is because of a decrease in the assumed rate of interest on such receipts.

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when local authorities will receive their credit approvals for 1992-93.

Mr. Key: Local authorities' basic credit approvals (BCAs) are calculated by reference to each authority's annual capital guidelines (ACGs), which are issued by the Secretary of State responsible for each service block. I hope it will be possible for all 1992-93 ACGs to be issued by Christmas. BCAs will be issued as soon as possible thereafter.

Local authorities may also receive supplementary credit approvals (SCAs) for certain types of project or programmes, which may be issued by the appropriate Minister up to six months after the end of the financial year to which the SCA relates.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what facilities his Department has provided for staff from different local authorities to meet and exchange experiences of the use of bailiffs in poll tax recovery; and at what cost to public funds.

Mr. Key: None. However, the local taxation working party, on which my Department and the local authority associations are represented, has discussed on a number of occasions the use of bailiffs in community charge enforcement.

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of revenue support grant has been transferred to highways capital allocations; what is the overall financial impact; and why the transfer was necessary.

Mr. Key: Within the proposals for the 1992-93 revenue support grant settlement £100 million of expenditure on highway maintenance has been reclassified as capital rather than current spending. This represents 6 per cent. of the standard spending assessment for highway maintenance 1991-92. There will be a corresponding uplift in the available capital resources through an increase of £50 million in both transport supplementary grant and credit approvals. This switch is part of a phased programme announced by the Department of Transport in 1989. It will bring the treatment of local authority spending on structural maintenance into line with that of central Government, which is already treated as capital.

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the likely impact of the reduction in the standard spending assessment on the provision of services by local authorities.

Mr. Key: Under my right hon. Friend's proposals the total of standard spending assessments for local authorities in England will increase by 6·8 per cent.

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the basis on which the level of interest rate received on capital receipts is assumed by the standard spending assessment to fall by 12 per cent.

Mr. Key: The interest rate used to calculate the provisional 1992-93 SSA element for interest on capital receipts at 10 per cent. is 1 per cent. less than that used for the 1991-92 settlement. That rate is based on an average of short and long-term interest rates for August 1991. The precise weighting of the various rates reflects the pattern of borrowing by all local authorities.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue guidelines to local authority officers on their response to requests from district auditors to give examples of helpful and unhelpful actions by council members in regard to poll tax recovery procedures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: No.

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the impact on metropolitan districts of the changed methodology on the ability of different classes of authorities to generate interest receipts; how much shire counties and outer London boroughs benefited in real terms by this change; and how much metropolitan districts lost.

Mr. Key: The proposal to change the method by which the interest receipts element of the 1992-93 SSA is distributed results in a cash increase in SSA for the shire counties of £72·271 million; and slight decreases for the metropolitan districts and outer London boroughs of £0·709 million and £1·019 million respectively. The figures are expressed in cash terms rather than real terms as the effects relate to the same period and are directly comparable.

Mr. Dixon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the total level of Government grant per head of adult population for 1992-93 for (a) Wandsworth, (b) Westminster and (c) each metropolitan district council in Tyne and Wear.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 6 December 1991]: Under my right hon. Friend's proposals, the information for the total of revenue support grant and, where appropriate, area protection grant and inner London education grant per head of adult population is included in the list:

River Pollution

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has had over the levels of toxic chemicals found in fish due to high levels of contamination in rivers.

Mr. Baldry: Around 70 representations have recently been received concerning levels of chemicals in fish. Advice was issued to angling associations by the National Rivers Authority and MAFF earlier this year concerning the consumption of sport fish from contaminated waters.

Homelessness

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives of Shelter to discuss housing policy and resources needed to reduce the number of homeless people this winter.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 4 December 1991]: My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning meets representatives of Shelter regularly. My Department has discussed with Single Homeless in London (SHIL) the need for the provision of shelters for those sleeping out in central London this winter. Through SHIL, my Department is providing 325 additional places in shelters between 1 December 1991 and 31 March 1992, as part of a co-ordinated strategy which includes shelters, transportation and support services to those sleeping rough in central London.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Subsidiarity

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will publish his proposals to include in the European union treaty the principle of subsidiarity.

Mr. Garel-Jones: At the start of the political union negotiations we proposed that the principle of subsidiarity should be written into the treaty. That suggestion has been taken up and article 3B of the draft treaty, available in the Library of the House, now contains a justiciable text of this principle.

United Nations

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a statement of information available to him as to arrears of subscriptions to the United Nations by its various members.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The status of contributions by member states to the United Nations as at 31 October 1991 is contained in United Nations document ST/ADM/SER.B/361, a copy of which is being placed in the Library of the House.

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information is available to him as to the apportionment of responsibility for arrears of subscription by the former Soviet Union to the United Nations organisation and as to the payment of these.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The payment of the assessed contribution of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to the United Nations is the responsibility of the central Soviet authorities, who have been advised of our view that any arrears in their contribution should be paid promptly.

Western Sahara

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government, as a permanent member of the United Nations Security Council, are taking to ensure the effectiveness of United Nations officials in securing a fair and orderly referendum in the western Sahara.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As a permanent member of the Security Council, we are naturally concerned to ensure the success of the United Nations settlement plan. We have already contributed towards the cost of the United Nations mission for a referendum in the western Sahara. We have also provided 15 military observers. We shall continue to give our full support to the Secretary General's efforts to bring this long-standing dispute to a peaceful conclusion.

Zionism

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether the United Kingdom ambassador to the United Nations this year had raised the issue of UN resolution 3379 with all the members of the Security Council or whether there are any plans to do so; and whom the ambassador has met to discuss this issue;

(2) with which countries he intends to discuss the issue of repealing UN resolution 3379 in his forthcoming bilateral contacts;

(3) if he will list the states with which he has raised the issue of rescinding UN resolution 3379 in bilateral contacts.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom permanent representative to the United Nations in New York is currently discussing with his EC colleagues and representatives of other UN missions how best to secure the repeal of this odious resolution. We have said that we are ready to co-sponsor a draft resolution which revokes it. We expect to discuss the matter with a wide range of countries at the United Nations and shall be seeking the support of other delegations before a repealing resolution is put to a vote. The repeal of a General Assembly resolution is not, however, a matter for the Security Council.

Japan (Plutonium)

Mr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what studies have been undertaken by his nuclear non-proliferation department into the requirement of the Japanese nuclear industry for the return of plutonium separated at Sellafield prior to agreeing to give an export licence for the plutonium; and if his Department has received any recent representations from non-governmental organisations on the problems and risks of the international commerce in plutonium.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. The matters raised in the first part of the question are more properly an issue for the Department of Energy. However, the basic guidelines of British policy on exports and transfers of nuclear materials were announced by Lord Callaghan, then Foreign Secretary, in a parliamentary answer on 31 March 1976. The topic of international commerce in plutonium was raised at my recent meeting with 34 non-governmental organisations on 26 November.

Ukraine

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received for the recognition of Ukraine's independence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Following Ukraine's declaration of independence on 24 August, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister received a letter from Mr. Kravchuk expressing his hope for Britain's recognition of the independence of Ukraine and the establishment of diplomatic relations. This wish also has been conveyed in official correspondence from Ukraine and at meetings between British and Ukrainian rerpresentatives. We are consulting closely our EC partners and NATO allies on the question of recognition, with a view to exploring with the Ukrainian Government how they intend to approach such key practical issues as the Soviet Union's foreign debt and control of nuclear weapons. I draw my hon. Friend's attention to the declaration on Ukraine by EC Foreign Ministers on 2 December which called upon Ukraine to take these matters forward with the centre and other republics in a peaceful, democratic and orderly way.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations between the United Kingdom and the Ukraine.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We seek close, friendly relations with Ukraine and aim to broaden our contacts at all levels. A British representative is now in Kiev to help establish a permanent British mission. The British Council is also establishing a presence.

Romanian Children (Adoptions)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information is currently being issued to prospective adopters of Romanian children by the British embassy in Bucharest; if this advice is currently being revised following the Romanian Government's decision to permit foreign adoptions from 1 January 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Romanian adoption law, which came into effect on 17 July this year, continues to allow adoption of Romanian children by non-Romanians living abroad. The Department of Health has discussed the new adoption procedures with the Romanian authorities. Those seeking advice and assistance from the British embassy in Bucharest are told that all adoption applications will in future be processed through the Romanian Committee for Adoption; that though currently closed for reorganisation the committee will resume its work in early 1992; and that the Department of Health will in future act direct with the committee on behalf of prospective adopters.

Pakistan

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Government of Pakistan on the current investigation by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise over the illegal sale to Pakistan of computers with a military use by United Kingdom-based companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None. Investigations into a possible export by a Norwegian company via the United Kingdom are being pursued by the Norwegian authorities with our assistance.

Iraq (Nuclear Scientists)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what entry visas his Department issued for Iraqi nuclear scientists for each year from 1979.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested is not available.

Pearl Harbour

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department has taken to mark the 50th anniversary of the Japanese attack on Pearl harbour and to commemorate the allied service men and civilians killed in the war by the Japanese; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have not marked this anniversary. We fully recognise how much the nation owes to all those who fought and died during the second world war. We shall never forget this great debt nor the terrible sufferings of so many in Japanese prison camps.

Lockerbie

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he delivered his message to the Libyan Government over the alleged participants of the Lockerbie bombing; and what reply he has received or been notified of.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Lord Advocate issued a warrant for the arrest of two Libyan officials on 14 November. On that day we passed a copy of the warrant and a detailed statement of the facts to the Libyan permanent representative to the United Nations. These documents, together with our demand for the surrender of the two accused, were also conveyed to the Libyan Government by Italy, who act as our protecting power in Libya. On 27 November we issued two statements: one in conjunction with the United States and the other in conjuction with the United States and France. Copies are being place in the Library of the House. Both statements were conveyed to the Libyan Government by the Italians. We have so far received no indication from Libya that it is willing to accede to our demands.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he has given to the Nuclear Testing Moratorium Act (HR 3636) introduced to the United States Congress on 29 October by Representative R. Gephardt and Representative M. Kopetski in regard to the effect it would have on United Kingdom access to the Nevada nuclear test site for the continued testing of British nuclear warheads.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: United Kingdom nuclear tests take place at Nevada under the terms of the agreement between the United Kingdom and United States Governments signed in 1958. The United States Government share our view that, for the foreseeable future, testing will remain essential to maintaining a safe and effective nuclear deterrent.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Government-funded Projects

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on how many subcontractors suffered financial loss as a result of main contractors on Government-funded projects going into receivership in each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Contract Law

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will initiate a change in contract law to give greater protection to sub-contractors in the event of main contractors going into receivership.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. The problems faced by sub-contractors in such circumstances do not arise from deficiencies in the law of contract itself but from the contractual relationships into which they have entered.

Catholic Maintained Schools

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) for each of the last 10 years, what percentage of all the costs, capital and recurring, of maintained schools, other than those now associated with the Council of Catholic Maintained Schools, were paid by the trustees of such schools;

(2) for each of the last 10 years, what percentage of all the costs, capital and recurring, of the maintained schools now associated with the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools, were paid by the trustees of such schools.

Dr. Mawhinney: The establishment of the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools had no bearing on the recurrent or capital costs borne by the trustees of maintained schools. All recurrent costs in maintained schools in the last 10 years were met by the education and library boards: 15 per cent. of approved capital costs were met by the trustees.

Women-only Employment Courses

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action the Department of Education for Northern Ireland has taken in relation to the provision of women-only courses and to the provision of courses on non-traditional skills; and what support services have been provided to enable women to attend such courses.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is a matter for further education colleges to determine what courses they should provide. However, the Department of Education has encouraged colleges, when making course provision, to consider the particular needs of women who wish to re-enter the work force following absence owing to family and home responsibilities. A number of colleges provide child care arrangements to facilitate the enrolment of women.

RUC Holding Centres

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to introduce lay visitors to RUC holding centres.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no plans to introduce lay visitors to the RUC holding centres. However, the Government are currently considering the appointment of an independent commissioner to monitor procedures governing the treatment of terrorist suspects in police custody.

Non-traditional Skills

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many colleges of further education are organising courses in non-traditional skills for women; and how many such courses are funded by the European social fund.

Dr. Mawhinney: None of the colleges in Northern Ireland organises courses specifically designed to equip women with non-traditional skills. However, over the last four years there has been a 40 per cent. increase in the numbers of women enrolling in courses in a number of subject areas, such as engineering and construction, which have in the past been largely male dominated.

Ms. Pauline Quinn

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the outcome of the internal inquiry held on 2 May 1991 into an incident involving Ms. Pauline Quinn in Her Majesty's prison, Maghaberry, on 26 April 1991.

Dr. Mawhinney: The inquiry into the enforced full search of Ms. Pauline Quinn in Her Majesty's prison, Maghaberry on 26 April 1991 found, inter alia, that:

(i) the incident and its unfortunate aftermath would have been avoided if Ms. Quinn had co-operated as she had done on other occasions before and after this particular incident;

(ii) in carrying out the search, the officers concerned acted properly on the basis of orders which they were given; and

(iii) no internal search had taken place.

The inquiry also recommended some local procedural changes and these have now been implemented.

Information Service

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library a copy of the review of the information service, conducted by his Department.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. The review of the information services, which was completed in 1988, is an internal management document.

Right of Silence

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what research has been done in Northern Ireland comparing the exercise of the right of silence by suspects detained under the Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order and those detained under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act; and if he will publish the findings.

Dr. Mawhinney: A modest research programme is being undertaken in relation to the operation of the Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order. The results of this research are not yet available.

Schoolchildren (Statistics)

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many children are on the school roll in Northern Ireland; and how many of those receive free school meals in primary, secondary and special schools, respectively.

Dr. Mawhinney: The figures for January 1991 were as follows:

Schools	Enrolments	Pupils receiving free meals
Primary	189,548	47,302
Secondary	141,146	25,237
Special	3,987	3,518
Total	334,681	76,057

Northern Ireland Block

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the management of the Northern Ireland block in the current financial year.

Mr. Brooke: Expenditure across a wide range of programmes within the Northern Ireland block has been running ahead of plans in this financial year. I have, therefore, initiated a pause in spending on new capital contracts and on some maintenance works for the remainder of the financial year. However, the public expenditure position will be kept under close review.

SERPS

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will estimate (a) the first year and (b) the full year total cost to the national insurance fund in (i) 1991-92 and (ii) 1992-93, of allowing people to contract out of the state earnings-related pension scheme into money purchase personal pension schemes giving figures separately for (1) people contracting out of the state earnings-related pension scheme in 1991-92 and (2) all schemes.

Mr. Hanley: The information is not available in precisely the form requested. However, such information as is available is shown below:

Social Fund

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people received (a) crisis loans, (b) budgeting loans and (c) community care grants in each year since 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1991 and 1 April 1991 to 31 October 1991; what amounts were paid out at each social security office in South Down; and how many were refused and for what amount.

Mr. Hanley: Social security operational matters are the responsibility of Mr. Alec Wylie, chief executive of the Social Security Agency. He will write to the hon. Gentleman and copies of his reply will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

English Teaching

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums are available and projected for the current financial year and the next two financial years for the training enterprise and education directorate; when it is proposed to release finance to fund students' course fees and expenses for the current term for English for speakers of other languages; how many ESOL students there are in Northern Ireland for the current year; what are his projections for the following two years; what were the sums available and expended in the last two years; and how many students were assisted in each of those years.

Mr. Needham: The training enterprise and education directorate is an arm of the Department of Employment and its remit does not extend to Northern Ireland.

Children at Risk

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many children are registered at risk in each social services department in the constituency of South Down in each year since 1985.

Mr. Hanley: The constituency of South Down includes the Down unit of management of the Eastern health and social services board and part of the Craigavon and Banbridge and the Newry and Mourne units of management of the Southern health and social services board. Information is not available below unit of management level.

Health and social services boards are at present redesignating their child abuse registers, which did not contain an "at risk" category, as child protection registers.

The latter will record the names of children who have been abused or are at risk of abuse and who are the subject of a child protection plan.

Separate statistics on children at risk are not yet available for all areas. The total numbers of children known to have been, or suspected of being abused, on the registers for the three units of management in the period 1985 to 1991 are as follows:

Number on register at	Down	Craigavon and Banbridge	Newry and Mourne
31 December 1985	50	97	50
31 December 1986	[2]n/a	94	47
31 December 1987	133	109	45
31 December 1988	155	95	55
31 March 1989[1]	170	108	61
31 March 1990	166	77	55
31 March 1991	153	84	38

[1] From 1989 the maintenance of child abuse registers changed from a calendar to a financial year basis.
[2] In 1986 the Eastern health board did not provide statistics for individual units of management.

Travellers

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the percentage of travellers in Northern Ireland accommodated on serviced sites.

Mr. Needham: A total of 30 per cent. of travellers in Northern Ireland are presently accommodated on serviced sites. That figure will rise to 54 per cent. when sites currently under construction are completed and to 82 per cent. when sites for which district councils have already been given approval for grant purposes are also brought into use.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many serviced sites for travellers there are in Greater Belfast.

Mr. Needham: Belfast city council has two sites currently under construction which are due to be completed in April and August 1992 respectively. Two further sites have been given approval for grant. When complete these four serviced sites will provide 80 permanent pitches and cater for about 95 per cent. of the travellers in Greater Belfast.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any plans to ensure that sufficient accommodation is available for all travellers in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Yes. While responsibility for the provision of serviced sites for travellers lies with district councils such provision is actively encouraged with 100 per cent. grants available for land acquisition and construction costs.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to improve conditions in roadside camps for travellers in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment encourages district councils which have not yet provided serviced sites to alleviate conditions on unapproved encampments through the provision of temporary amenities. The Advisory Committee on Travellers, with the active co-operation of health and social services boards, attempts to ensure that adequate medical and social services are available.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to amend the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 to ensure that serviced sites for travellers are provided by local authorities.

Mr. Needham: There are no plans at present to do so. The possibility of introducing a statutory obligation on district councils to provide serviced sites is, however, kept under review in the light of the progress being made in site provision.

Housing (Security Improvements)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what payments for security improvements to houses of persons considered to be at risk from paramilitary groups are taken from the social fund; how much has been spent in this way; what steps are being taken to retrieve these payments from the security budget; and if he will make a statment.

Mr. Hanley: Under the social fund scheme, help in the form of a loan or a grant, generally only to those on income support, may be considered towards the cost of locks, bolts, chains and viewers for outside doors and windows where there is a need for such items. Information about the total amount paid is not available. Loans are recovered direct from applicants in the usual way. Grants are not recouped from any source and there are no plans to change existing policy.

One-Parent Families

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many one-parent families were registered for benefit at each of the social security offices in South Down in each year since 1985.

Mr. Hanley: Social security operational matters are the responsibility of Mr. Alex Wylie, chief executive of the Social Security Agency. He will write to the hon. Gentleman and copies of his reply will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

HEALTH

NHS Charges (Exemptions)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the percentage by each sub-division shown in his answer of 22 October 1991, Official Report, column 597, of people in the United Kingdom exempt from paying for (a) eye tests, (b) dental examinations and (c) prescription charges.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is as follows:

(A) Sight Tests

The percentage of the population in England estimated to be eligible for free NHS sight tests in 1990-91 is as follows:

Categories	Percentage

Income support and family credit recipients and adult dependants	11

Adoption

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to issue his discussion paper on inter-country adoption as part of his review of adoption laws.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We intend to issue the discussion paper by Christmas.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the recent visit by officials to meet the Romanian Adoption Committee.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Officials from the Department of Health and Home Office visited Romania in November at the request of the Romanian authorities in connection with the adoption of Romanian children by citizens of the United Kingdom.

Visits were made to children's homes in Bucharest and a children's hospital in Alexandria. Meetings took place with the chairman and executive secretary of the Romanian Adoption Committee as well as officials from the Ministry of Health, Ministry of Labour and Social Protection and the Ministry of Education.

Officials were also able to learn about the work being done by British and other voluntary agencies in the field of adoption and child care and had the opportunity to see at first hand some of the work carried out by the Romanian Orphanage Trust.

One of the successful outcomes of the visit was establishing strong links with the Romanian Adoption Committee and assisting it to set up effective procedures for processing applications from people in the United Kingdom who wish to adopt Romanian children.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has yet finalised the format for presenting the case of prospective adopters of children from overseas to foreign Governments; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has no plans to prepare a format for presenting cases to foreign Governments when United Kingdom citizens apply to adopt children from overseas. Cases are handled on a discrete basis and vary according to the country concerned.

Cot Death

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will obtain a copy of the report, "Must Babies Still Die?" published by Mr. Barry Richardson in November for his departmental library.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A copy of the report has been received and been very carefully studied by professional staff. The data it contains were available to and considered by the independent expert working group whose report on sudden infant death syndrome was published in June, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether there is a significant risk of poisonous gases being given off from previously soiled cot mattresses; and what plans he has to warn parents of this risk to second babies.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The independent expert working group which considered the hypothesis that poisonous gases given off from mattresses were a cause of sudden infant death syndrome (SIDS) found no link between the mattresses, microbial contamination and the generation of toxic volatile gases. The factors associated with SIDS are listed in its report, a copy of which is in the Library, and have been publicised by the Chief Medical Officer. Nursing a baby on a mattress that has been used by another baby is not one of these.

Quest Cancer Test

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington, of 4 December, Official Report, column 159, when he now expects to reach a conclusion on the application by Quest Cancer Test for a re-assessment of its application for funding.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no current formal request for research funding for projects from Quest Cancer Test.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the proportion of originating debt covered by public dividend capital for each of the first wave national health service trusts.

Mr. Dorrell: The proportion will be determined individually for each trust on the basis of their opening valuations. It is likely that in almost every case it will be 50 per cent.—which is the figure trusts have used in their financial assumptions.

GPs (Computers)

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to refund the costs incurred by general practitioners in Hampshire who have computerised their operations.

Mr. Dorrell: This is a matter for health authorities. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Sir Robin Buchanan, the chairman of Wessex regional health authority, for details.

Expenditure Statistics

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what allowance in cash terms has been made for the additional costs in 1992-93 of implementing Government legislation for (a) additional residential and day care facilities, (b) improvements to standards in line with social services inspectorate reports and Audit Commission reviews, (c) funding the care element of hostel dwellers' fees and secure accommodation for alleged young offenders on remand under proposals contained in the Criminal Justice Bill and (d) the need for mentally disordered offenders to be kept out of prison;

(2) what allowance in cash terms has been made for additional costs in 1992-93 to reflect the (a) forecast increase in the numbers of elderly people and children, (b) increasing rate of dependency among elderly people, (c) child protection and preventative work, (d) unaccompanied child refugees and asylum seekers, (e) joint finance-tapering and time-expired projects, (f) inner city time-expired projects, (g) the impact of section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966, (h) commitments on capital projects and running costs and (i) incentive allowances;

(3) what allowance in cash terms has been made for the additional costs in 1992-93 of implementing Government legislation for (a) the Children Act 1989, (b) development of home care management under the White Paper "Caring for People", (c) advocacy service for people with special needs, (d) provision for new cohorts of disabled people leaving special education under sections 5 and 6 of the Disabled Persons Act 1986, (e) AIDS and HIV and (f) staff training in respect of community care, the Children Act 1989, child care and non-vocational qualifications;

(4) whether the 1992-93 standard spending assessment figures recognise the full-year effects of last year's pay settlement to social workers and other staff employed in social services; and what assumption has been made by the Government regarding the level of next year's pay award settlements and inflation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Earlier this year the local authority associations were invited to take part in discussions with central Government in order to inform the Government's decision on total standard spending for the purposes of the 1992-93 revenue support grant settlement. These questions were considered in the discussions. The scope for increased efficiency in existing services and for other expenditure savings was also discussed. The Government's decisions, in detail, were announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 26 November at columns 779-95.

Central Government do not specify in detail how local authorities should allocate the overall resources available to them but rather indicate their view of appropriate spending through standard spending control totals. Personal social services standard spending for 1992-93 has been set at £4,850 million, a cash increase of £347 million over 1991-92. Within this total, to improve the distribution of the revenue support grant, separate standard spending totals exist for the broad client groups: of services for elderly people at £2,225 million, a cash increase of £165 million; for children at £1,654 million, a cash increase of £113 million; and for other clients at £971 million, a cash increase of £69 million. Also within these totals are the new and increased specific grants for personal social services. These are for social services training £29 million, a cash increase of £4·2 million; for AIDS and HIV £15·3 million, a cash increase of £5·1 million; for mental illness £31·4 million, a cash increase of £10·4 million; for services for alcohol and drug misusers £2·1 million, a cash increase of £0·7 million; a new grant for guardians ad litem of £5·7 million; for services in connection with Commonwealth immigrants £8·5 million, a cash increase of £3·5 million; and for the urban programme £23·4 million, a cash increase of £0·6 million.

Meat and Bonemeal

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, further to his answer of 28 November, Official Report, column 593, if he will now issue guidelines to ensure that any vehicle having transported meat and bonemeal is regarded as insanitary for the purpose of the Food Hygiene (Market Stalls and Delivery Vehicles) Regulations 1966, as amended.

Mr. Dorrell: The Food Hygiene (Market Stalls and Delivery Vehicles) Regulations 1966 (as amended) require food businesses to keep delivery vehicles clean and to protect food in order to prevent the risk of contamination. A vehicle used to transport meat and bonemeal would not be insanitary if it were effectively kept clean and foods were placed so as to be protected from any risk of contamination.

ENERGY

Oil Industry

3. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what efforts he has made to assist the United Kingdom oil industry in securing business overseas.

Mr. Wakeham: I have recently returned from the far east where I visited Vietnam, Hong Kong, Japan and Korea in order to promote the United Kingdom's wide-ranging expertise in the energy sector. I hope that my visit will provide opportunities for the United Kingdom oil industry to participate in the development of oil and gas fields in the region.

Coal Industry

13. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to meet the chairman of British Coal to discuss the Rothschild report; and if he will make a statement.

17. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he intends to meet the chairman of British Coal to discuss the future of the coal industry.

Mr. Wakeham: I meet the chairman of British Coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

27. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the current status of the Rothchild's report on British Coal.

Mr. Wakeham: Rothschild, along with the Government's other advisers on coal privatisation, are analysing options for the sale of the industry. No decision on the form or timing of privatisation will be taken until after the general election.

28. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many pits were working in January 1984; and how many are still in operation.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: At the beginning of the financial year 1984-85 British Coal had 170 producing collieries. There are currently 54 collieries in operation.

22. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next intends to meet representatives of the Scottish TUC to discuss the future of the coal industry.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have no immediate plans to meet representatives of the Scottish Trades Union Congress to discuss the future of the coal industry.

Wood

19. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what initiatives he is undertaking to promote the use of wood as a fuel.

Mr. Moynihan: The latest Government initiative to promote the use of wood as fuel is a project to demonstrate the first commercial application of short rotation arable coppice as an energy crop. My Department is also co-funding feasibility studies to promote the use of the residues from forestry operations to fuel power stations with a proposed total installed capacity in excess of 20 MW.

Waste Incineration

20. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress has been recently made in generating electricity by the incineration of waste products.

Mr. Moynihan: Orders made under the non-fossil fuel obligation have so far set an obligation to secure a declared net capacity of 375·63 MW from a total of 21 schemes for waste incineration.

Energy Conservation

21. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will visit the Findhorn Foundation to discuss matters relating to energy conservation.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I am aware of the good work of the Findhorn Foundation on sustainable development and, in particular, their commendable efforts in constructing highly energy-efficient housing. Officials working on behalf of my Energy Efficiency Office are keeping in touch with the Foundation's initiatives.

Coal Mining (Productivity)

23. Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy by how much British Coal's productivity has changed since 1984-85.

Mr. Wakeham: Productivity in 1984-85 was exceptionally low due to the miner's strike. Compared to 1983-84, the year preceding the strike, productivity in British Coal mines has increased by an impressive 105 per cent.

Energy Efficiency

24. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any new initiatives under preparation to improve Britain's record on energy efficiency.

Mr. Wakeham: Several substantial new initiatives are currently under way to improve energy efficiency. These include the "Making a Corporate Commitment Campaign" that I announced on 16 October, the "Helping the Earth begins at Home" campaign which the Secretary of State for the Environment and I launched on 4 November, the voluntary scheme for labelling of domestic appliances which I announced on 12 November, and the energy management assistance scheme which will come into effect next year.

Pylon Lines

25. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received about the construction of pylon lines in Teesside.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend is considering applications for his consent to install two such lines on Teeside—between Norton and Saltholme and between Lackenby and Picton. In respect of the Norton—Saltholme proposals, four objections have been received from individuals within the time allowed for such objections and three objections, including one from a relevant planning authority, outside that time. In the case of the Lackenby—Picton proposals, two objections have been received from relevant planning authorities, and over 400 other objections from individuals, together with nine petitions.

Domestic Heating and Insulation

26. Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has about the improvement in heating and insulation levels in domestic properties since 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has about the improvement in heating and insulation levels in domestic properties between 1981 and 1990.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Between 1981 and 1990 the level of loft insulation increased from 75 per cent. to 90 per cent, the level of cavity wall insulation increased from 9 per cent. to 22 per cent. and the level of central heating ownership increased from 59 per cent. to 79 per cent.

Energy Prices

29. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the change in the price of gas and electricity, respectively, since privatisation compared to the retail prices index.

Mr. Wakeham: Since privatisation in 1986, the average price for all supplies of gas from British Gas has increased by 10 per cent., compared with an increase in the retail prices index (RPI) of 30 per cent. over the same period. The average price of all electricity sold has increased by 3·7 per cent. since the regional electricity companies in England and Wales were privatised in the fourth quarter of 1990, whereas the RPI has increased by 3·2 per cent.

Redundant Pipelines

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any proposals to modify the Petroleum Act 1987 in relation to the dismantling of redundant structures and pipeline networks.

Mr. Moynihan: The Offshore Safety Bill makes provision for those powers in the Petroleum Act 1987 which relate to the ability to make safety regulations for the abandonment of offshore installations and pipelines to be made an "existing statutory provision" of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974.

Wind-generated Electricity

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress has been made with regard to establishing a schedule of commencement dates for the additional wind-generated electricity capacity recently announced by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Details of the commissioning dates associated with individual projects which obtained contracts under the 1991 Renewables Order are commercially confidential. However, all wind projects included under this order are planned to commission by mid-1993.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether his Department's Energy Technology Support Unit has been invited to attend or make a presentation at the European wind energy conference to be held in Amsterdam.

Mr. Moynihan: The European wind energy conference was held in Amsterdam on 14-18 October 1991. Officials from my Department and the Energy Technology Support Unit attended and contractors to our programme contributed papers.

Energy Policy

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Library a copy of his Department's memorandum on energy policy which was submitted to the National Economic Development Council earlier in the current year.

Mr. Wakeham: I have today placed in the Library of the House a copy of the memorandum I submitted to the NEDC earlier this year. This addressed energy efficiency rather than general energy policy. For a succinct statement of the latter, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 1 December 1989 at column 451.

Nuclear Facility Attachments

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many of the 40 agreed nuclear facility attachments mentioned in the European Commission reply 1358/90 of 14 March 1991, Official Journal of the European Communities C168, volume 34, of 27 June 1991, were negotiated for facilities in the United Kingdom; and if he will list the current number of any such agreements.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: At 14 March 1991, one facility attachment was in force at the Capenhurst works. A further facility attachment came into force for plutonium store 9 at Sellafield on 1 May 1991.

Euratom Safeguards

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has received any indication from Euratom as to when the second bi-annual report on the operation of Euratom safeguards will be released; and what information was requested from, and through, his Department in preparation for this report.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have received no such indication.

Euratom has sought no information from my Department specifically in connection with this report.

Energy from Waste

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what contribution was made by his Department to the conference on "Energy from Waste, Clean, Green and Profitable", held at the CBI in London on 9 October 1991.

Mr. Moynihan: The energy technology support unit, on behalf of my Department, gave a paper and helped to organise and publicise the conference on energy from waste. An official from my Department attended.

Euratom

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy who are the United Kingdom appointees to the scientific and technical committee of Euratom.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A list of all appointments to the current Euratom scientific and technical committee was published by the Commission in the Official Journal of the European Communities on 23 February 1989 (OJ 89/C44/02, volume 32). The United Kingdom members are:

Mr. H. J. Dunster (formerly Director, National Radiological Protection Board).
Dr. F. Feates (formerly Chief Inspector, Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution).
Dr. D. Pooley (Managing Director, Nuclear Business Group, AEA Technology).
Dr. B. Woodfine (formerly Managing Director, ANS Consultants Ltd.).
Dr. J. K. Wright (formerly Director of Health and Safety, Nuclear Electric).

Nuclear Energy

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will obtain for his Department's library a copy of "The International Politics of Nuclear Waste", by Andrew Blowers et al, published in August 1991; and if he will arrange for the library to subscribe to the newsletter "Soft Energy Europe" published by Ove of Copenhagen.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A copy of "The International Politics of Nuclear Waste" is in my Department's library. My Department is also on the mailing list of the free newsletter, "Soft Energy Europe".

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consideration he has given to the implications for the work of his Department in its monitoring of the activities of the United Kingdom civil nuclear industry of the statement made by the Director-General of the International Atomic Energy Authority at its 35th conference.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Director-General's interesting and important statement to the 35th conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency covered a wide range of issues affecting all aspects of the agency's activities. The Government are reflecting on the implications of this statement, especially those aspects which may have an impact on our own nuclear industry. The United Kingdom will continue to take an active part in the discussions of the agency, on the questions raised by the director-general.

Monktonhall Colliery

Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assurances were given to the Midlothian consortia, in discussions on Monktonhall colliery, in respect of a possible dispensation by the mines inspectorate on the permitted manpower that can be employed in private mines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The limit on the number of men who may be employed below ground in a licensed mine was increased from 30 to 150 by the Coal Industry Act 1990. British Coal may therefore issue licences only in conformity with this manpower limit. Any changes to the limit would require primary legislation.

Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy who arranged the meeting between the Minister with responsibility for coal with the Midlothian consortia to discuss Monktonhall colliery in Midlothian; and who was present at the meeting.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I and my officials met representatives of the Monktonhall mineworkers consortium following a request from the leader of the City of Edinburgh council Conservative group.

Sizewell

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about safety at Sizewell power station, Suffolk, in the light of recent flooding.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The incident to which my hon. Friend refers occurred on 3 December when two out of the station's four sea water cooling pumps were flooded. Both reactors were shut down normally by station staff and all post shut-down safety functions operated satisfactorily as intended. There were no injuries and there was no release of radioactivity.

The incident has been rated as a level 1 on the international nuclear event scale—the lowest rating.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has had about both safety and life expectancy of the Sizewell power station, Suffolk, in the past six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My hon. Friend wrote to me about this recently and I will reply shortly. That apart, I have received one other representation from a constituent of my right hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, South (Mr. MacGregor).

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had about the continued use of Sizewell A power station in Suffolk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This is a commercial matter for Nuclear Electric plc, which must of course continue to satisfy the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate that the very high standards of safety required by them are being met.

Nuclear Waste (Accidents)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether his Department has made any notifications to the EC on accidents involving nuclear waste in the United Kingdom since the decision of the European Council on this matter on 14 December 1987.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No. The situation warranting a formal report under the EC decision has not arisen in this country.

EMPLOYMENT

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of Government expenditure on tourism is accounted for by grants to the British Tourist Authority, the English tourist board, Scottish tourist board and Welsh tourist board, respectively.

Mr. Jackson: Of the £60·9 million total in grants in aid which the Government have allocated in 1991-92 to these four statutory tourist bodies, some 48 per cent., £29·2 million, is for the British Tourist Authority; 24 per cent., £14·9 million for the English tourist board; 15 per cent., £9·1 million for the Scottish tourist board and the remaining 13 per cent., £7·7 million for the Wales tourist board.

Training (North-West)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are on youth training schemes in the north-west.

Mr. Jackson: In October, the latest date for which information is available, there were about 48,000 young people on youth training in the north-west region.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many job club entrants and leavers there were in the north-west between January and September 1991;

(2) how many young people in the north-west region have had their entitlement to bridging allowances terminated;

(3) how many people from the north-west region attended restart interviews between January and June 1991.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Youth Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the number of accidents on the youth training scheme, fatal, major and minor for the period from January to March 1991.

Mr. Jackson: Table A gives the YT accident figures.

Quarter	Fatal	Major	Minor
January-March 1991	3	100	359

Notes:

(a) Employment Department figures for trainees have been compiled on a similar basis to those prepared by the Health and Safety Executive for employed persons. However, the Employment Department's figures include a number of accidents to trainees in educational establishments, and road traffic accidents, which would not have been reportable to the Health and Safety Executive had the individuals been employed.

(b) Major injuries are classified according to the severity criteria laid down in the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985. These regulations, which came into force on 1 April 1986, reclassified fractured wrists and ankles as major injuries. These were not classed as major injuries in the previous regulations, the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1980 (NADOR).

Public Holidays

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, further to his answer of 2 December, Official Report, c. 27, what status is accorded to the Queen's birthday and Liberation day as public holidays in the Netherlands.

Mr. Jackson: According to the Royal Dutch embassy in London the Queen's birthday and Liberation day are holidays taken by Netherlands' civil servants and some shops and offices. They are not considered national public holidays and their status appears to be similar to that of Her Majesty the Queen's official birthday on 15 June, for which United Kingdom civil servants are allowed a "privilege day" holiday.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list public holidays in each of the European Community member states, using the same definition as the European Commission in the Official Journal of 30 January 1991, OJ 91/C22/02.

Mr. Jackson: I am not aware of any general definition of "public holidays" used by the European Commission and the publication referred to by the hon. Member does not contain one. This is an area where member states' custom and practice varies considerably and illustrates the difficulties in putting forward hasty proposals for harmonisation.

Redundant Mineworkers

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many miners made redundant since 1985 (a) gained full-time employment within one year of redundancy and (b) remained unemployed for one year or more after redundancy.

Mr. Jackson: The information is not available.

Iraqi Nuclear Scientists

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what applications for temporary employment permits have been issued through his Department since 1970 for Iraqi nuclear scientists to work in (a) the United Kingdom nuclear industry and (b) nuclear research at United Kingdom academic institutions.

Mr. Forth: Since 1984, prior to which date information is not available, the Department's records show that no work permits have been issued for Iraqi nationals to work as nuclear scientists in either the United Kingdom nuclear industry or in nuclear research at United Kingdom academic institutions.

Special Needs Training

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consideration was given to the training needs of people with special needs when the contracts with each training and enterprise council were negotiated by his Department.

Mr. Jackson: Training for people with special needs was covered in each training and enterprise council's business plan which formed part of its contract with the Department.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether any allowance is made in funding provided to training and enterprise councils to take account of the extra costs of providing training for people with special needs.

Mr. Jackson: Training and enterprise councils are contractually required to provide suitable training for people with special needs. The funding which the TEC receives from the Department takes account of the level of special training needs.

Accident, Isles of Scilly

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will direct the Health and Safety Executive to interview the crane driver injured in the accident which occurred on 13 July 1991 at St. Mary's, Isles of Scilly.

Mr. Jackson: No. The Health and Safety Executive already had sufficient information from its investigation to take up with the company the necessary action to prevent a recurrence of the accident.

Mr. A. A. Binns (Accident)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the actions taken by the Health and Safety Executive in connection with the fatal accident to Mr. A. A. Binns on 6 November 1990 at Beeston, Nottingham, in the premises of Boots plc; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Health and Safety Executive investigation into the fatal accident on 6 November 1990 to Mr. A. A. Binns at Boots plc., Beeston, Nottingham started on the day of the accident. HSE examined the nature of the task being carried out at the time of the accident and the working procedures being followed, interviewed witnesses, including the man working with Mr. Binns when the accident happened, examined the technical evidence available and also considered the experience of the fitters involved.

In addition, HSE prepared a report on the investigation for HM coroner and provided evidence and assistance at the inquest.

Earnings

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many people in each of the constituencies of Edmonton, Hornsey and Wood Green and Tottenham, are earning less than £3·40 an hour broken down by (a) gender, (b) manual and non-manual work and (c) age, expressed as numbers and as percentages of each group at all wage levels;

(2) how much many people in each of the constituencies of Edmonton, Hornsey and Wood Green and Tottenham, are earning less than £3·40 an hour for (a) full-time and (b) part-time work, expressed as numbers and as percentages of each group at all wage levels.

Mr. Jackson: The information available from the 1991 New Earnings Survey is given in the following table.

Notes:
(1) "—" denotes sampling error too large or sample size too small for reliable estimate.
(2) Due to small sample numbers, the information may be unreliable.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will show for part-timers the number of women earning less than £2 per hour, £2·20 per hour, £2·40 per hour, £2·50 per hour, £2·80 per hour, £3 per hour, £3·20 per hour, £3·40 per hour, £3·50 per hour, £4 per hour, £4·40 per hour, £4·50 per hour, £4·80 per hour, £4·90 per hour, £5 per hour and £5·10 per hour for (i) manual, (ii) non-manual and (iii) all women in (i) West Yorkshire, (ii) South Yorkshire, (iii) North Yorkshire, (iv) Humberside and (v) Great Britain;

(2) if he will show for full-time workers the percentages with hourly earnings less than £2·50, £3, £3·40, £3·50, £4, £4·40, £4·50, £4·80, £4·90, £5 and £5·10 per hour, giving the information for (a) women and (b) men, (i) manual, (ii) non manual and (iii) all, both including and excluding overtime in the following regions (1) West Yorkshire, (2) South Yorkshire, (3) North Yorkshire, (4) Humberside and (5) Great Britain;

(3) if he will show for full-time workers the percentage earning less than (a) £100, (b) £110, (c) £120, (d) £130, (e) £140, (f) £150, (g) £160, (h) £170, (i) £180, (j) £190 and (k) £200 giving the ratio for (i) women and (ii) men, (1) manual, (2) non-manual and (3) both including and excluding overtime in the following regions (A) West Yorkshire, (B) South Yorkshire, (C) North Yorkshire, (D) Humberside and (E) Great Britain.

Mr. Jackson: In view of the considerable amount of information requested, I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of employees who earn less than (a) £5,000, (b) £7,500, (c) £10,000, (d) £12,500, (e) £15,000, (f) £17,500 and (g) £20,000.

Mr. Jackson: The information available closest to that requested is published in table 14 of part A of the 1991 New Earnings Survey results, a copy of which is in the Library.

Health and Safety

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the Health and Safety Executive's policy with regard to interviewing injured persons when investigating an accident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Health and Safety Executive inspectors use their professional judgment and discretion when deciding whether it is necessary to interview injured persons as part of their investigations into accidents. It is the policy of HSE's field operations division that, wherever possible, injured persons should be interviewed if legal proceedings are proposed or where it is alleged that the injured person has made a substantial contribution to the cause of the accident.

Schools

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much funding is allocated to individual compacts operating in urban areas; and what consideration is being given to providing additional funding in response to the increasing numbers of schools now included in the original schemes.

Mr. Jackson: A compact operating in an urban programme authority (UPA) area in England receives up to £450,0000 of pump-priming funding over five years to assist its establishment. The existing funding arrangements encourage the expansion of the compact to cover further schools in the area, and to raise resources which will lead to self-sufficiency after Government funding ceases.

SCOTLAND

Haddington Bypass

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his plans for the extension of the A1 dual carriageway from Tranent to Haddington will incorporate a new Haddington bypass; and if he will make a further statement on the time scale for this work.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The provision of a bypass of Haddington has been included as part of the feasibility study being conducted by consultants. The report which has been submitted will have to be considered very carefully and no decisions can yet be taken on whether or not a bypass should be incorporated in the first phase of the proposed extension of the A1 dual carriageway between Tranent and Haddington. Once a preferred scheme has been identified, decisions on the timing of the work will be dependent on satisfactory completion of the public consultation and statutory procedures. The views of those directly affected by the detailed proposals will be a major factor in how quickly the scheme can be taken forward. However, the Government are keen to see early progress on this route and, subject to the conclusions of the consultants' report, I expect to be able to publish draft orders for the scheme in the first half of next year.

Schoolchildren (Statistics)

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children are on the school roll in Scotland; and how many of those receive free school meals in primary, secondary and special schools, respectively.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested, taken from the 1991 annual school meals census returns, is as follows:

Number of pupils

	On school register	Present on census day: Total	Present on census day: Receiving free meals
Primary	[1]438,688	[1]404,910	[1]72,437
Secondary	[1]283,326	[2]245,986	[2]23,505
Special	7,984	7,042	4,418

[1] Includes 9 special departments where special data has been included in primary school figures.
[2] Includes 10 special departments where special data has been included in secondary school figures.

CAP

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he proposes to make in respect of the Scottish agricultural college's preliminary report on common agricultural policy reform and its impact on the Borders region of Scotland.

Mr. Lang: My Department has received a copy of this report which was commissioned by Borders regional council. Its findings on the initial impact of the reform proposals are broadly in line with the Government's assessment and help to illustrate why the Government have opposed the discriminatory features of those proposals.

Crime Rates, Strathclyde

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide an updated version of the tables on the change in crime rates in Strathclyde since 1979 published in his answer of 30 October, Official Report, column 475-78.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is given in the following table.

Number of crimes and offences recorded by the police and percentage change: 1979-90
K Division, Strathclyde Regional Police Authority

Notes:
Data for 1979 have been regrouped on the basis of the current Scottish Office Home and Health Department classification of crimes and offences which was revised in 1980.
Prior to 1980, the return included crimes and offences reported to the Procurator Fiscal by agencies other than the police in which a prosecution was taken. Since 1980, these cases have been excluded. In 1982, there were about 6,400 such cases in the whole of Scotland, of a total of 762,483 crimes and offences.
Most of the increase in crimes in Group 5 is in recorded cases of re-offending while on bail which may in part be explained by changes in recording practice.

Stobhill Hospital

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future of the urology department at Stobhill hospital.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Greater Glasgow health board's acute services strategy approved by my right hon. Friend in February this year envisaged the rationalisation of urology services on three sites, instead of the present five, by 1996. Thereafter, urology services currently provided from Stobhill hospital would be withdrawn.

Catholic Schools

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for each of the last 10 years which was the percentage of all the costs, capital and recurring, of all Catholic church schools paid by the trustees of such schools.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In Scotland, denominational education is provided in local authority schools, the costs of which are fully met by the authorities.

Disability

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many disabled people are currently employed in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Office and associated departments currently employ 89 registered disabled persons as well as an unrecorded number of disabled persons who have chosen not to register.

The Scottish Office is fully aware of its obligations in this area. In common with other Government Departments it implements the policies set out in the code of practice on the employment of people with disabilities, and participates in the Employment Service's "More Than Just a Symbol" initiative.

Knitwear and Textiles

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he intends to make to ensure that Scottish knitwear and textile businesses receive adequate and fair support from the European Community.

Mr. Lang: The EC Commission is giving consideration to a Community initiative (RETEX) to provide European structural fund grants in textile areas. I am drawing the Commission's attention to the high dependence on textiles employment in the right hon. Gentleman's constituency. It is not yet clear how far the proposed initiative may offer assistance to textiles businesses themselves, but in that event I would attach importance to avoiding any unfair competition against Scottish producers.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the capital expenditure on central institutions in cash and constant prices in every year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is set out in the table:

£ million

	Cash	1990-91 prices
1979-80	3·4	7·3
1980-81	4·8	8·8
1981-82	6·6	11·1
1982-83	6·0	9·4
1983-84	6·7	10·0
1984-85	7·0	10·0
1985-86	9·1	12·3
1986-87	17·2	22·4
1987-88	15·9	19·7
1988-89	10·5	12·1
1989-90	12·2	13·2
1990-91	14·9	14·9

Notes:

1. Capital expenditure includes expenditure on buildings and major items of equipment.
2. The 12 central institutions together with the five colleges of education form the grant-aided colleges and are treated as one sector for funding purposes.
3. The figures reflect the transfer into the grant-aided colleges sector of Napier Polytechnic of Edinburgh and Glasgow Polytechnic on 1 September 1985 and the transfer to the local authority sector of Leith Nautical College with effect from 1 August 1987.
4. The figures reflect the inevitably uneven pattern of expenditure on capital projects.

DEFENCE

Verification Demands

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his verification research centre at Blacknest has made any recent substantive contribution to the outstanding verification demands of (a) the START 1 agreement, (b) a comprehensive nuclear test ban draft and (c) an international fissile material store for materials removed from redundant nuclear warheads.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Blacknest facility of the Atomic Weapons Establishment continues to conduct work of international importance in exploring how seismology can contribute to the verification of a comprehensive test ban treaty.

Scientists Against Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what publications produced by Scientists Against Nuclear Weapons are held in his Department's library; and in what numbers.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: MOD headquarters library can find no record of any publications produced by Scientists Against Nuclear Weapons, but holds one copy of three publications produced by Scientists Against Nuclear Arms (SANA): "Ground Zero"; "Star Wars"; and "Nuclear Illusions". It also holds two copies of the SANA publication "Nuclear Winter". Two of these titles, "Nuclear Winter" and "Star Wars", later formed the basis of expanded commercial publications and two copies of "Nuclear Winter" (Polity Press, 1985) and three copies of "Star Wars" (Penguin, 1985) are held by the MOD headquarters library.

Nuclear Testing

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his oral replies to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Rutherglen (Mr. McAvoy) of 19 November, Official Report, column 136, if he will list all the relevant international treaties on nuclear testing; what are the reasons for the practice of refusing to confirm or deny that a British nuclear warhead test is to take place; how the operational safety of nuclear weapons benefits from nuclear tests conducted at the Nevada nuclear test site; and what proportion of British nuclear tests conducted at Nevada have been for the purpose of safety tests.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: International treaties related directly to nuclear testing are:

a. The Partial Test Ban Treaty;
b. The Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty;
c. The Threshold Test Ban Treaty.

The United Kingdom is party only to the first of these. The second and third are bilateral between the United States and Soviet Union. As United Kingdom nuclear tests are carried out at the United States test site in Nevada, however, we invariably respect their provisions. In addition, nuclear testing is covered in the preamble to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

For reasons of safety and national security it has been the practice of successive Governments not to make a prior announcement of forthcoming United Kingdom nuclear tests. The development of new safety features is an important element of the United Kingdom nuclear test programme, but I am not prepared to give further details.

Environmental Exhibition

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration was given to using recycled or recyclable materials and low energy lighting at his Department's exhibition stall at the recent environmental exhibition at Olympia,

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In accordance with the Department's policy of promoting recycling and the use of recycled products, the MOD publications made available to the public at the Olympia environmental exhibition were all printed on some form of recycled paper. The exhibition stand itself was fitted with energy-saving lighting.

Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give further details concerning paragraph 323 of the Annual Statement on the Defence Estimates vol. I, stating that a final consensus document on the fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty was blocked by the Mexican delegation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing further to add to the statement made at paragraph 323 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1991.

Territorial Army Volunteer Reserve

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be able to announce the percentage changes in the TAVR in Northern Ireland, Wales, Scotland and England.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Consultations with those concerned about the proposed restructuring of the Territorial Army were completed recently. Recommendations are being prepared as a result. It is hoped to make a further announcement on the future organisation and structure of the TA shortly.

Royal Naval Reserve

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what savings in actual and real terms have been produced by cuts in the Royal Naval Reserve in the last three years; and what savings he projects in the future by cuts that are now under consideration by the Admiralty board;

(2) what sum has been identified as the cost of the Royal Naval Reserve in each of the last 10 years, in actual and real terms;

(3) what he estimates will be the cost of the Royal Naval Reserve in the year ending 31 March 1992.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to my hon. Friend.

Household Division

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the broad outline of his plan to cut the public duties of the Household Division.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave my hon. Friend on 14 October at columns 60-61.

Armed Forces (Injuries Compensation)

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will bring forward proposals to amend the present legislation concerning injuries compensation for armed forces personnel so as to put the onus of proof for negligence upon the Ministry of Defence rather than on the injured personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no plans to introduce such legislation.

Pearl Harbour

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department has taken to mark the 50th anniversary of the Japanese attack on Pearl harbour and to commemorate the allied service men and civilians killed in the war by the Japanese; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department has not been invited to participate in any activities organised by the United States to mark the Japanese attack on Pearl harbour. It is our usual practice to remember personnel killed in past conflicts at the annual Remembrance day ceremony at the Cenotaph.

HMS Revenge

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his plans for the future of HMS Revenge.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: HMS Revenge will be paid off at the end of her present commission.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Means-tested Benefits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what number and proportion of his Department's work force, including its agencies, have recourse to means-tested benefit top-ups.

Mr. Jack: On 31 October 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 684 families receiving family credit where the main earner or their partner was a member of staff of the Department of Social Security. Staff might have an entitlement to housing benefit and community charge benefit, but as these benefits are administered by local authorities, figures for the numbers of departmental staff receiving them are not available.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families with children will be brought into means-tested benefits in 1992-93 as a result of the benefit uprating statement of 21 October 1991.

Mr. Jack: Estimates of those unable to receive income-related benefits immediately before the uprating, but who could qualify for awards, often for very small amounts, as a result of the statement are as follows:

	Number
Income Support	15,000
Community Charge Benefit	25,000
Housing Benefit	5,000
Family Credit	70,000

These figures are rounded to the nearest 5,000 benefit units and are derived from modelling using data drawn from the 1986-87-88 family expenditure surveys.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans the Government have to publicise the changes to the cold weather payment system announced last June.

Mr. Scott: On 14 June we announced major improvements to the cold weather payments scheme including automatic payment, removal of the need to make a claim, abolition of the capital rule and introduction of a forward trigger. On 23 July we announced improvements to the weather station linkages. All these improvements were publicised again at the launch of the "Keep Warm Keep Well" campaign on 16 October. Each Benefits Agency district office will place announcements in the local press informing people when payments are to be made under the scheme.

Pensions

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans he has to enable the retirement pension to be paid from the date on which a person reaches pensionable age, rather than from the first payday; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what would be the additional expenditure incurred by paying the state pension from the date of retirement in terms of (a) payments of retirement pension and (b) additional costs of administration.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to do so. Retirement pension is a regular weekly payment and is not paid for part weeks. The current provisions ensure that everyone is entitled to a full week's pension within a week of retirement. Having fixed pay days for different benefits enables the Post Office to spread the load over the week and ensure that it has the necessary cash available to provide a satisfactory service.

The additional expenditure incurred by paying the state pension for the odd days between the 60/65th birthday and the first pay day is estimated to be £9 million[1]. This figure does not include any corresponding savings in income support. The additional administration costs are estimated to be £10,000.

[1] Costs are at April 1992 benefit rate terms and are for 1992-93.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will conduct an inquiry into how much housing benefit has been paid to tenants towards the cost of their accommodation which has then not been paid to their landlords;

(2) what information he has as to the amount of money owing to private landlords as a result of the failure of tenants receiving housing benefit to pay their landlords for rent due.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department does not collect information relating to third parties, such as the level of debts owed to landlords. Representations received from landlords and their organisations indicate that the number of housing benefit recipients who persistently default on rent payments is relatively small. Regulations already give local authorities powers to pay benefit direct to a person's landlord, for example where rent arrears have accrued or where social or medical problems clearly indicate that help with budgeting is needed. We therefore have no plans to conduct an inquiry into the alleged misuse of housing benefit by private tenants.

Carer's Premium

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether details of the carer's premium have now been entered on to the mainframe computer system; and whether this information is available to all his Department's officers who consider income support claims.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the transitional arrangements for claimants currently in receipt of mobility and attendance allowance after April 1992 when the disability living allowance and disability working allowance benefits come into being.

Mr. Scott: The arrangements are set out in the Social Security (Introduction of Disability Living Allowance) Regulations 1991. All current beneficiaries will be sent a mailshot in January about the introduction of disability living allowance in April. People who are in receipt of either mobility allowance or attendance allowance or both will be automatically transferred to the comparable components and rates of disability living allowance. People who are in receipt of one or other of the current benefits will also be invited to claim the other component if they think they will be entitled to it. If they do wish to claim, they will be able to do so on a special "one component" claim form, rather than needing to request a general review of their benefit.

No transitional arrangements are needed for disability working allowance as it is an entirely new benefit.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for invalid care allowance were received in 1988, 1989 and 1990; and how many people are currently in receipt of invalid care allowance.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is shown in the table.

Year	Claims	Numbers in Receipt
1988-89	53,000	112,000 (31 March 1989)
1989-90	53,000	123,000 (31 March 1990)
1990-91	63,000	136,000 (31 March 1991)
		155,000 (31 September 1991)

Family Credit

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families receiving family credit are (a) tenants or (b) homeowners.

Mr. Jack: This information is not available from family credit records. A survey by NOP for the National Audit Office report about support for low-income families published in January 1991 suggests that around two thirds of families receiving family credit are tenants and around one third are owner occupiers.

Algebra Group

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he last met the Algebra group; who attended; what was discussed; when he will next meet its members; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The "Algebra" group comprises officials from several central Government Departments and representatives of local authority associations. Its discussions are part of the process of implementing the Government's community care reforms as set out in the White Paper "Caring for People". Meetings are held at official level only; Ministers do not attend. I understand the next meeting will take place on 12 December.

Income Support

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what savings have resulted from the abolition of income support for 16 and 17-year-olds in each year since 1988.

Mr. Jack: For the individual the value of training allowance at the time of the policy change was greater than the income support payable to the young people concerned. Expenditure on youth training amounted to £1 billion in the first full year. As a consequence this meant that benefit payments to 16 and 17-year-olds were reduced by £51 million in 1988-89, £88 million in 1989-90 and £83 million in 1990-91.

Young People (Benefits)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the total income of an unemployed person aged 18 to 24 years through income support and housing benefit would be if he had taken a room at £40 per week.

Miss Widdecombe: The income support applicable amount for a single person aged between 18 and 24 years who is not entitled to any premiums is £31·40. A person in receipt of income support is usually entitled to maximum housing benefit, that is, 100 per cent. of eligible rent. The overall benefit entitlement of such a person with housing costs of £40 would therefore be £71·40. This assumes a rent of £40 which is fully eligible for housing benefit and is not considered unreasonably expensive by the local authority.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what were the findings of his Department's research into 16 and 17-year-olds, and their benefits about the means they used to survive;

(2) if he will review his decision to withdraw benefits from 16 and 17-year-olds who are unable to obtain a youth training place to take account of the findings of the fifth report of the Select Committee on Employment, 1990-91, about training and enterprise councils and the youth training guarantee;

(3) what plans he has to review severe hardship applications following the large increase in applications between July 1990 and September 1991;

(4) what plans he has to change the rules regarding severe hardship payments in response to his Department's research into 16 and 17-year-olds and their benefits with particular reference to young pregnant women;

(5) what his Department's research into 16 and 17-year-olds and their benefits found about the incidence of physical or sexual abuse they had suffered;

(6) whether his proposal to make a specific assistant manager in each of his Department's district offices responsible for services to 16 and 17-year-olds has been implemented.

Mr. Jack: The vast majority of the 1·4 million young people between the age of 16 and 17 are able to exercise their positive choices by remaining in full-time education, getting a job, or entering youth training. However, the Government recognise that a minority need particular help. Income support is available at any time to particular groups such as lone parents, couples with children, carers, or those incapable of work through disablement. Pregnant young women are also automatically entitled to income support during the 11 weeks immediately prior to their expected date of confinement as well as at any time during their pregnancy if they are incapable of work or attending YT. However, pregnancy is not itself an incapacity and training and enterprise councils are expected to provide suitable training to meet the needs of this group.

Additionally, help is also available to young people seeking a YT place but who are at risk of severe hardship. Of the 1·4 million 16 and 17-year-olds, fewer than 5,000 are in receipt of income support under the severe hardship provision at any one time. When this policy was introduced the Government agreed to monitor its operation and as part of the exercise commissioned research from the MORI organisation. The findings were detailed in their report "A Survey of 16 and 17 year old applicants for Severe Hardship Payments" and a copy of this work was placed in the Library in July. The study comprehensively analysed all aspects of this policy.

Also in July I announced in response to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson) on 16 July at columns 134-36 that the Benefits Agency would be taking a series of measures to make further improvements in the operation of the severe hardship provision, including the assignment of responsibility for 16 and 17-year-olds to a specific assistant manager in each district. Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, has informed me that all these changes have been put into effect. In addition the Benefits Agency is holding a series of conferences for the assistant managers concerned to share good practice and to encourage effective liaison with other agencies concerned, including the careers service, which was also represented. It is likely that these will generate further ideas for improvements in service to young people.

The Government remain committed to ensuring that the YT guarantee is met. A suitable youth training place remains the sensible and positive option for young people who have not had the opportunity of taking up a job. In the light of the foregoing, we have no plans to review the policy on 16 and 17-year-olds, although we continue to monitor the operation of the policy closely and seek administrative improvements wherever possible.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the entitlement to housing benefit of (a) a person aged 18 to 24 years with an income of £2,265 who had taken a room at £40 per week for accommodation and (b) a person in the same position with a debt of £580.

Miss Widdecombe: The housing benefit entitlement of a single person aged 18 to 24 years not entitled to any premiums, with an income of £2,265 and a rent liability of £40 would be £35·42. This calculation is based on the assumption that the income quoted is net earnings to which a disregard of £5 a week is appropriate. It also assumes that the amount of rent for which the person is liable is fully eligible for housing benefit and is not considered to be unreasonably expensive by the local authority. The benefit entitlement of a person in the same circumstances with a debt of £580 would be identical.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide details of the costs of administering the severe hardship payment scheme and the amount of severe hardship benefit paid out in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jack: The information on these costs of income support paid to 16 and 17-year-olds under the severe hardship provisions is not separately identifiable.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the charges being levied on attendance allowance for local authority services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: No restrictions are placed upon the uses to which attendance allowance may be put once it is in payment. Where extra costs are incurred because of a person's disability the allowance is intended to be available to help meet them.

Local authorities have discretionary powers to charge for domiciliary and day care services. If charges are made authorities must take into account what it is reasonably practicable for an individual to pay. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health proposes to issue guidance to authorities about the use of these powers. We would not expect local authorities to make charges which undermine the purpose of attendance allowance, and after April 1992 disability living allowance.

Social Fund Manual

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for the future format of the social fund manual.

Mr. Scott: The revised social fund manual has been published today. In the new manual, the Secretary of State's directions and guidance to social fund officers have been separated from the purely procedural and administrative matters. The opportunity has also been taken to revise the style of English used, to make it simpler and easier to understand.

Three changes of substance have been made in the course of the revision. Social fund direction 4 has been revised to clarify the fact that people can apply for community care grants for the care of prisoners on home leave. Direction 16 has been revised so that full-time students will be eligible for crisis loans throughout the year only to alleviate the consequences of a disaster. This is in line with the Government policy to fund students through the educational maintenance system rather than through social security benefits. Finally, the guidance on suggested amounts to award for community care grants has been deleted.

Copies of the revised social fund manual, comprising the social fund officer's guide, the social fund administration guide, the funeral and maternity payments guide and the cold weather payments booklet, have been placed in both Libraries today. The new manual is effective from 16 December 1991.

TRANSPORT

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the precise alignment and siting of stations along the proposed high-speed rail link.

Mr. Freeman: As my right hon. and learned Friend explained in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett) on 5 December at column 188, work on defining the line should begin in the new year. That will include the location of stations. The proposals will be published for consultation when they have been developed in enough detail.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what facilities will be constructed to connect the east coast line with passenger and freight traffic from the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Freeman: Both passenger and freight trains will be able to run initially from the channel tunnel on to the east coast main line via existing lines. British Rail plans to link the proposed new line between the tunnel and London to lines north of London, including the east coast main line, by constructing an international station at King's Cross. The Bill containing the powers for this station and the connecting lines is before Parliament.

London Underground Stations

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much London Underground Ltd. have spent on capital works at each of Bounds Green, Finsbury Park, Highgate, Manor House, Seven Sisters, Tottenham Hale, Turnpike Lane and Wood Green tube stations in the periods 1980-85, 1985-90, and 1990-91.

Mr. Freeman: The Government do not hold information on investment at individual underground stations.

Lane Rental Road Maintenance

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the economic savings from lane rental road maintenance.

Mr. Chope: We estimate that lane rental has resulted in traffic delay savings of some £70 million, at a cost in contractors' bonuses of some £13 million, from its introduction in 1984 to the end of 1990, the latest date for which figures are available.

Navigational Aids

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what information is available on the value of traffic and the degree of risk associated with navigational aids in United Kingdom waters in accordance with the obligations of the Salas convention 1974; and if he will publish it;

(2) what are his estimates of the number of users of navigational aids in the following categories (a) merchant ships calling at United Kingdom ports, (b) merchant ships not calling at United Kingdom ports, (c) fishing vessels, (d) leisure craft from United Kingdom ports, (e) leisure craft from foreign ports, (f) naval vessels and (g) other vessels; and the amount of financial contribution made by each category.

Mr. McLoughlin: The need for navigational aids in relation to the volume of traffic and the degree of risk is regularly reviewed by the general lighthouse authorities in consultation with the users and the Department of Transport. Estimates of user numbers by category are not available. In 1990-91, light dues collected in the United Kingdom from merchant shipping calling at United Kingdom ports were about £42 million; from fishing vessels £1·1 million; from tugs £65,000—United Kingdom —and £47,000—foreign; and from pleasure craft £23,000 —United Kingdom—and £1,000—foreign. Dues are not collected from ships which do not call at United Kingdom ports. The Ministry of Defence also contributed £1·4 million for use of the Decca service, of which £0·3 million related to 1990-91.

A45 (Traffic Flows)

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the traffic flows along the A45 (a) between Stowmarket and Ipswich, (b) over the Orwell bridge and (c) between Ipswich and Felixstowe in 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991, respectively.

Mr. Chope: The information is not available in exactly the format requested. The following figures are the average annual daily traffic—AADT—flows between each of the major junctions on these sections of the trunk road.

	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	[1]1991

Gisburn Bypass

Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when proposals to construct a bypass around the village of Gisburn in Lancashire will be announced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: There are no proposals to bypass Gisburn in our current forward programme.

Copster Green (Traffic)

Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to introduce a speed limit along the A59 through the village of Copster Green.

Mr. Chope: No.

Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for introducing traffic calming measures along the A59 through the village of Copster Green.

Mr. Chope: None, but we shall keep the needs of this road under review.

Trust Ports

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether he will ensure that the sale of the successor company by a trust port board will be subject to sufficient safeguards to prevent the subsequent reorganisation of the successful bidder's other business in such a manner as to allow any of their debt repayments to be funded by the revenue and profits of the successor company;

(2) what advice he has given to trust port boards to ensure that any successful bid for a trust port does not lead to revenue and reserves being used to fund debt payments for other trading enterprises;

(3) what steps he has taken to ensure that the subsequent actions of a successful bidder for a trust port do not lead to the assets, revenue or profits of the successor company being used to fund debt incurred in another company in which the successful bidder or his backers have a substantial stake;

(4) whether he will require any successful bidder for a trust port to demonstrate that any other company in which he or his backers have any stake does not contain repayment schedules for interest on debt which might in due course prejudice the successful operation of that company.

Mr. McLoughlin: The advice given to trust port boards makes it clear that, where trust ports intend to sell their undertakings to a single bidder, they are expected to prepare and agree with my right hon. and learned Friend a statement of objectives for the sale. These objectives will include the desirability of encouraging the disposal of the whole or a substantial part of the equity share capital of the successor company to managers or other employees of the company, and the obtaining of the best open market price for the port, taking into account any other agreed objectives, for example plans for the future of the port. In assessing complete bids, trust port boards will clearly wish to satisfy themselves that a bidder is both prepared and able to meet these objectives.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether, in relation to the privatisation of ports, he intends to operate a price preference in favour of bids from management and employee buy-out teams; what discussions have taken place, and are taking place, with potential management and buy-out teams; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is meant by the term substantial employee share ownership in respect of the current trust ports privatisation programme; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether it is his policy to support the principle of employee share ownership in the current trust ports privatisation programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Under section 5(3) of the Ports Act 1991 my right hon. and learned Friend is obliged to "have particular regard to the desirability of encouraging the disposal of the whole or a substantial part of the equity share capital of the successor company to—

(a) managers of other persons employed by the company; or

(b) another company the whole or a substantial part of whose equity share capital is owned by managers or other persons so employed."

It is for the trust port boards in the first instance to assess the bids for their ports, including those from management and employee buy-out teams, and to put their recommendation as to the successful bidder to my right hon. and learned Friend for his consent. The term "substantial" occurs frequently in legislation and falls to be interpreted in the particular context and circumstances of each case. Each trust port board will need to consider each bid against the overall objectives of sale agreed for its port, including those relating to employee share ownership. My right hon. and learned Friend has made it clear that he is prepared to consider a limited price preference for a management and employee buy-out team in individual cases and in the light of the particular circumstances of each case.

Plutonium

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he holds regarding the outcome of the recent study by the International Atomic Energy Authority into the need for more stringent tests on fire resistance and impact damage of packages used for the air transport of plutonium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 9 December 1991]: The IAEA review of the transport of radioactive materials by air is still taking place. Any proposals for a more stringent test regime for air transport will be submitted for inclusion in the comprehensive revision of the transport regulations, due for publication in 1996.

Ship Accident (Radioactive Materials)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will obtain a copy for his departmental library of the study by the International Union of Marine Insurers on the financial impact of an accident in the southern sector of the North sea involving a ship carrying radioactive materials.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 9 December 1991]: A copy of this study is on order.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Magistrates (Briefing)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Attorney-General what information he has on the nature and extent of training or briefing for magistrates in the Coventry area in connection with the poll tax.

The Attorney-General: No training was provided centrally for magistrates. In the Coventry area the justices' clerk arranged a seminar for magistrates and a note was sent to those magistrates who were unable to attend.

Maxwell Companies

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Attorney-General if the Official Solicitor will use his powers on behalf of the beneficiaries of the pension funds of (a) Mirror Group Newspapers plc and (b) Maxwell Communication Corporation to obtain a Mareva injunction and an Anton Piller order to secure a freeze of all assets and bank accounts and documents of all companies, trusts and family members associated with the late Robert Maxwell.

The Attorney-General: The Official Solicitor has no general power to intervene on behalf of the beneficiaries of a trust. The primary duty of safeguarding and recovering assets lies with the trustees of the pension fund who have the right to take action for injunctive relief.

ENVIRONMENT

Property Services Agency

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those buildings held for occupation by the Property Services Agency which are vacant; and if he will indicate those premises that have been vacant for more than one year.

Mr. Yeo: The following vacant buildings are currently held for occupation by PSA Services:

(1) TCS Workshop, Poston Road, London
(2) TCS Workshop, Gypsey Lane, Keynsham
(3) TCS Workshop, London Road, Biggleswade
(4) TCS Workshop, Mitchell Way, Portsmouth
(5) TCS Stores, Milton Park, Didcot
(6) Lafone House, Leather Market Street, London
(7) 34/36 St. Leonards Road, Eastbourne
(8) 54/56 Compton Street, London EC1

Items (1) to (5) are vacant following the decision to close the Crown Suppliers. Items (6) to (8) are vacant following rationalisation of accommodation held by PSA Services.

Only item (8) has been vacant for more than 12 months.

Priority Homeless Statistics

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority, and by region in England since 1979-80, the total number of priority homeless acceptances where there was a child or pregnant adult, and the total number of two-bedroom or larger dwellings available to local authorities for new permanent secure tenants, excluding transfers, but including nominations to housing associations.

Mr. Yeo: I have placed in the Library a table showing the information derived from local authorities' annual housing investment programme returns for 1989-90 and 1990-91, the only years for which it has been collected. The total number of two-bedroom or larger dwellings available has been taken as the number let in each year and does not include any dwellings kept vacant for repairs or for other reasons.

House Construction

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide his estimate of the current average construction cost for (a) a council house in each of his Department's regions and (b) a housing association house in each housing corporation region.

Mr. Yeo: The average construction costs, based on accepted tenders, of council houses and bungalows—excluding flats—in each of the Department's regions for the year July 1990 to June 1991 were:

North	43,400
Yorkshire and Humberside	40,400
East Midlands	33,400
Eastern	43,300
Greater London	71,500
South East	47,900
South West	40,200
West Midlands	37,700
North West (including Cumbria)	54,900

The figures available for housing associations represent the total cost, including land acquisition and on-costs, and cover flats as well. They are not therefore directly comparable with those for council property. With that proviso, the average unit costs for housing association self-contained new build schemes approved under the Housing Corporation's approved development programme in the year April 1990 to March 1991 were:

	Average total unit cost £	Average public funded cost £
London and Home Counties (North East)	96,900	80,400
London and Home Counties (North West)	111,200	92,900
London and Home Counties (South)	89,700	73,500
West Region	62,900	49,400
East Midlands	54,900	41,100
West Midlands	54,600	39,500
North East	52,400	39,200
North West	54,000	40,700
Merseyside	55,300	42,300

Rents-to-Mortgages Scheme

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he has issued to the Commission for the New Towns in Basildon about publicising the rents-to-mortgages scheme by advertising on local television.

Mr. Yeo: It has not been necessary to advertise on television: the Commission for the New Towns, whose responsibility it is to publicise the scheme in Basildon, is in direct contact with all the eligible households.

British Waterways Board

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for the privatisation of the British Waterways Board.

Mr. Trippier: There are no such plans, but privatisation is always an option to be considered for public undertakings.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the chairman and the chief executive of the British Waterways Board commissioned management consultants to consider ways in which the board could be privatised; and what were the total fees paid to the consultants for this assignment.

Mr. Trippier: There has been no such commission.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the chlorine loading potential of all CFCs and HCFCs for the time intervals of 10, 20 and 50 years.

Mr. Baldry: Chlorine loading potentials, calculated on a steady state emission basis, have been published in report No. 20 of the World Meteorological Organisation global ozone research and monitoring project, "Scientific Assessment of Stratospheric Ozone: 1989", as follows:

Species	Chlorine loading potentials
CFC-11	1·0
CFC-12	1·3
CFC-113	1·11
CFC-114	1·8
CFC-115	2·0
HCFC-22	0·14
HCFC-123	0·016
HCFC-124	0·04
HFC-125	0·0
HFC-134a	0·10
HFCF-142b	0·14
HFC-143a	0·0
HFC-152a	0·0
CCl_4	1·0
CH_3CCl_3	0·11

The Montreal protocol scientific assessment, due to be published early next year may provide some time dependent values for either chlorine loading potential or the related ozone depletion potential.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the studies he has undertaken or commissioned on the human and environmental effects of ozone depletion over the United Kingdom; and whether he has any plans for future research in this area.

Mr. Baldry: In 1989 my Department placed a research contract with the University of Lancaster, worth £220,000 over three years, to investigate the effect of increased UVB radiation on the ecophysiology of plants and to identify a range of sensitive UVB indicator species. A scientific meeting will be held in April 1992 on UVB effects on biota with support from my Department. Assessment of the effects of UVB on health or agriculture are matters for the Department of Health and the Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food, respectively.

Sellafield

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will obtain for his Departmental library a copy of the transcript and videocassette of the "World in Action" programme on radioactive pollution from Sellafield broadcast on 2 December.

Mr. Heseltine: The Department has a videocassette of the programme.

Construction Products Regulations

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the implementation of the construction products directive; and what staffing and administrative resources are available for the supervision of the construction products regulations 1991, SI 1991, No. 1620, and circular 13/91 from his Department.

Mr. Yeo: The Construction Products Regulations 1991 —SI 1991 No. 1620—come into force in the United Kingdom on 27 December this year. The enforcement of these regulations is the responsibility of weights and measures authorities in Great Britain and of district councils in Northern Ireland.

The manpower and expenditure implications for enforcement authorities were taken into account in determining the 1991-92 provision for total standard spending by English and Welsh local authorities. For Scotland account was taken in the Scottish local authority aggregate external finance settlement for 1991-92. In Northern Ireland the Department of the Environment

(NI) has agreed to reimburse councils towards the 1991-92 costs of additional enforcement measures arising from the regulations.

The level of provision of staff and administrative resources in individual authorities is, of course, a matter for local determination.

In addition some central Government resources are being committed in support of the supervision of the regulations. In particular the Department of the Environment is required to inform the European Commission of action taken by enforcement authorities that restricts the free movement and marketing of construction products subject to the regulations.

Homelessness

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies he has made of homelessness in Leicester.

Mr. Yeo: The primary responsibility for dealing with homelessness in Leicester rests with Leicester city council. The hon. Member will recall that I met him on 24 July, together with a delegation from Leicester city council, to discuss homelessness in Leicester, and that my hon. Friend, the Minister for Housing and Planning visited the city on 25 September. On the question of people sleeping rough in the city, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 26 November at column 476.

Building Regulations

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to implement the conclusions of his Department's review of the Building Regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has today laid regulations to revoke and replace the Building Regulations 1985 and to consolidate all subsequent amendments to those regulations.

The Building Regulations 1991 implement the final conclusions of a major review of both the technical and procedural requirements of the Building Regulations.

The main changes arising from the technical review relate to part A—structure, part B—fire safety, part C—site preparation and resistance to moisture, part E—resistance to the passage of sound, part G—hygiene, part K—stairs, ramps and guards and part M—access and facilities for disabled people and a new part N—glazing, materials and protection.

The fire safety requirements—part B—and their supporting guidance document have been revised to reflect changes in building form and fire protection technology. These requirements maintain, and in certain respects enhance, the existing level of life safety. The replacement of the mandatory rules on means of escape in case of fire by guidance which is much wider in scope will introduce flexibility in this important area of building control, as will changes to the guidance on structural fire precautions and the introduction of provisions for sprinklers. Guidance on the fitting of smoke detectors in all new dwellings is included, and there is a new requirement on the provision of access and facilities for the fire service which will assist firefighters in the protection of life.

New guidance on the requirements concerning contaminated land—part C—in conjunction with two new Building Research Establishment publications, gives advice on dealing with the risks associated with radon and landfill gas when building in those areas likely to be affected by these gases.

The provisions relating to access and facilities for disabled people—part M—have been extended to cover all floors of non-domestic buildings and most extensions, and now address some of the needs of people with hearing and sight impairments.

The introduction of a new requirement—part N—seeks to reduce the risks associated with glazing in buildings, and will apply to all conservatories and porches whether or not they are otherwise exempt from the regulations.

Other important changes include extending the requirement relating to large span roofs to shopping malls, the extension of sound insulation requirements to flat conversions, new guidance on stairs and the risks associated with young children, and the revision of provisions governing the installation of unvented hot water systems.

The procedural review resulted in a number of detailed changes, the most significant of which is the introduction of completion certificates. This new requirement will enable people undertaking building work to request that the local authority provide a compliance certificate on the satisfactory completion of the controlled work. Such certificates, which are already being issued by some local authorities on a voluntary basis, should provide reassurance to future building owners and to people buying and selling houses.

It is intended that the new regulations should come into force on 1 June 1992, to allow time for builders and others to familiarise themselves with the new requirements. Revised approved documents, which provide practical guidance on meeting the requirements, are being published today by HMSO. Copies of these documents have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

European Environment Commissioner

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many telephone conversations he has had with the European Environment Commissioner regarding EC directive 85/337; what were the dates of the conversations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 6 December 1991]: There have been a number of exchanges between the Government and the Commissioner on this matter.

Greenhouse Effect

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the implications for the United Kingdom of the proposals in the 1990 report EUR-12707 on the European impact of the greenhouse effect; and what collaboration on research to mitigate the dangers of global warming has been undertaken by his Department.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 9 December 1991]: In January this year, the Department's climate change impacts review group published its report, "The Potential Effects of Climate Change in the United Kingdom", copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. The report dealt with twelve areas from agriculture and the natural environment to socio-economic issues. It used climate change scenarios very similar to those proposed in the report EUR-12707.

The principal focus of co-operation for research on all aspects of global warming is the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, in which the United Kingdom leads the science assessment working group and makes strong contributions to the working group on impacts and response strategies.

Development Plans

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to commence the development plans provisions of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his answer 6 November 1991, c. 160-61.]: We have today made the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 (Commencement No. 5 and Transitional Provisions) Order 1991. This includes provisions to commence the new development plans system on 10 February 1992. The Department is today writing to all local planning authorities in England to confirm that date. The Welsh Office is writing similarly to authorities in Wales.

Heveningham Hall

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his policy towards Heveningham Hall.

Mr. Heseltine [pursuant to his answer 4 December 1991, c. 176-77]: I have decided not to exercise my right to purchase Heveningham Hall. I fully recognise the outstanding importance of this grade I building, and the need to maintain the integrity of the house, its decorative scheme and the grounds, but I firmly believe that these objectives should be met, where possible, by responsible private ownership. It is for the receivers to explore this possibility. The hall will remain subject to the full rigour of planning and listed building controls; and the outstanding restoration work to the house and grounds should be well within the capacity of a new owner, with advice from English Heritage and the local planning authority.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Vehicle and Fuel Taxes

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was (a) the yield in 1990-91, (b) the estimated yield in 1991-92 and (c) the forecast yield in 1992-93 from (i) petrol duty, (ii) derv duty, (iii) vehicle excise duty, (iv) VAT on petrol and derv sales, (v) VAT on vehicle sales and (vi) car tax.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information is as follows:

	1990-91 Outturn £ billion	1991-92 Estimate £ billion
Petrol duty	7·0	8·2
Derv duty	2·5	2·7
Vehicle excise duty (total)	2·9	3·0
VAT on petrol and derv	1·3	n/a
VAT on vehicle sales	2·9	n/a
Car tax	1·4	1·2

Information on the outturn yield in 1990-91 and the estimated yield in 1991-92 is provided in the table. The forecast for receipts in 1992-93 will be published in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" for that year but will not be available before then.

No direct figures are available for the VAT spent on petrol and derv and on vehicle sales. The table contains estimates of the outturn on VAT yield that can be attributed to these items on the basis of national accounts data on expenditure. For petrol and derv the figure covers only consumer expenditure—the yield from business expenditure is highly uncertain because the majority of businesses can reclaim input tax. The relevant data are not available for 1991-92.

Taxation, Scotland

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the most recent figures available for the sums collected in Scotland in respect of (a) income tax, (b) national insurance, (c) value added tax, (d) capital gains tax, (e) capital transfer tax, (f) stamp duties, (g) inheritance tax, (h) road tax, (i) duties on alcohol, (j) duties on tobacco, (k) duties on petrol and (l) duties on new vehicles; and how much this represents in each instance as a percentage of the United Kingdom total tax take.

Mr. Maude: The details are as follows.

(a) No information is available on total income tax collected, but total income tax liabilities in 1988-89, the latest available year, are estimated to be £3·5 billion for taxpayers resident in Scotland, 7·5 per cent. of the total for the United Kingdom.

(b) No information is available on national insurance contributions collected in Scotland. However, total contributions for Great Britain were £34·2 billion in 1990-91. Our latest estimate is that 9 per cent. of the Great Britain figure relates to people resident in Scotland.

(d) No information on capital gains tax yields is available separately for Scotland.

(e) and (g) The amount of estate duty, capital transfer tax and inheritance tax collected in 1990-91 for Scotland was £71 million—5½ per cent. of the total for the United Kingdom.

(f) Stamp duty received by the Edinburgh stamp office in 1990-91 was £69 million—4 per cent. of the United Kingdom total. Virtually all of the receipts in Scotland arise from property transfers as almost all share transfers are accounted for through the London stock exchange.

(h) Vehicle excise duty revenue, net of repayments, collected in Scotland was £228 million in 1990-91—a little under 10 per cent. of the United Kingdom total.

Information on the tax collected in Scotland in respect of value added tax, car tax and alcohol, tobacco and petrol could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table to show the public sector borrowing requirement in actual figures, and as a percentage of gross domestic product for each of the years 1978-79 until the latest available year indicating for each year the projections given in the autumn statements, the Budget and the actual outturn.

Mr. Maples: The figures requested are shown in the table.

PSBR	Forecast made in preceding budget		Forecast made in autumn statement		Outturn
	£ billion	Per cent. of GDP	£ billion	Per cent. of GDP	£ billion	Per cent. of GDP
1978-79	8·5	5¼	7·9	4¾	9·2	5·4

[1]June 1979 Budget

[2]Data for the outturn and forecast up to and including 1983-84 are based on a definition of the PSBR which treats bank deposits and other liquid assets of the public sector as contributing to rather than financing the PSBR.

[3]Not stated in the Industry Act forecast.

Income Tax

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the proportion of the total sum raised in income tax which is paid by the lowest 10 per cent. of taxpayers (a) now and (b) in 1979-80.

Mr. Maude: It is estimated that, in 1991-92, the bottom 10 per cent. of taxpayers will be liable to pay less than 1 per cent. of the total yield of income tax. This is the same figure as in 1979-80.

Personal Savings

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the current level of personal savings; and what were the comparable figures for each of the past 15 years.

Mr. Maples: During the first half of 1991 the personal sector is estimated to have saved at an annual rate of £42·3 billion, representing about 10½ per cent. of disposable income. Figures for the level of saving and personal disposable income for the past 15 years may be found in table 3.1 of the CSO Blue Book, 1991 edition.

Parliamentary Questions (Cost)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current average cost of preparing answers to written and oral parliamentary questions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples: Following a survey conducted by Treasury in 1991 and spanning six Departments, the average cost of preparing an answer to a parliamentary question—PQ—is assessed as £87 for a written PQ and £202 for an oral PQ. These figures represent costs within the civil service only; the costs of Ministers and their offices are not included. These figures are not directly comparable with the costs increased by indexation from the 1972 survey which were previously published at £64 and £106 for written and oral PQs respectively, because the cost of staff accommodation was previously excluded. Accommodation costs account for around 15 per cent. of these 1991 costs. The substantial rise in the average cost of oral PQs mainly reflects the restriction in numbers introduced from the start of the 1990-91 Session. These are down from around 24,000 per Session to around 6,000 and the costs per unit reflect the fact that costs are no longer spread over the former large numbers. On the one hand there is a substantial saving in aggregate costs because replies are no longer given to the very large number of oral questions which were formerly tabled, not reached and answered as written PQs. On the other hand, there is no reduction in the briefing required for oral questions which are likely to be reached and full briefing for supplementary questions is still needed for these. However, the figures show a substantial cost saving overall because the numbers have fallen by 75 per cent. whereas costs per unit are less than twice their previously published level. In the light of the new figures, consideration is being given to the advisory level above which written PQs may fall into the disproportionate cost category and an announcement will be made in due course.

Industry (Net Added Value)

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the net added value in industry, excluding services and agriculture, expressed in United States dollars of (a) the Federal Republic of Germany, (b) France, (c) Italy, (d) Spain and (e) the EC in total for each of the last three available years;

(2) what was the net added value in industry, excluding services and agriculture, expressed in United States dollars, of Japan, in each of the last three available years;

(3) what was the net added value in industry, excluding services and agriculture, expressed in United States dollars, of the United Kingdom for each of the last three available years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Data for net value added in industry for the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Italy, Spain, the United Kingdom and Japan are published by the OECD in "National Accounts 1977-89". The total for the European Community is not available.

Valuation Procedures

Mr. Ward: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rights of entry district valuers and local estate agents have into people's homes for the purposes of valuation for the council tax.

Mr. Maude: None, but clause 26 of the Local Government Finance Bill, if enacted, would provide a power of entry for the valuation officer and any servant of the Crown authorised by him in writing.

Retail Prices Index

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the individual components of the retail prices index and the respective weightings given to each.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 9 December 1991]: The information requested was published on pages 351 to 353 of the June 1991 issue of "Employment Gazette", a copy of which is in the Library.

VAT

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the estimated yield in 1991-92 of the imposition of VAT at (a) 5 per cent., (b) 17·5 per cent. and (c) 22 per cent. on (i) books, (ii) newspapers, (iii) magazines, (iv) rent, (v) house purchase (new buildings), (vi) house purchase (second-hand buildings) and (vii) fares on passenger transport.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 9 December 1991]: Information on the estimated revenue from standard rating zero rated goods in 1990-91 was published in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report", annex B table 4B.1 . Similar data for 1991-92 will be published in the 1992 FSBR when expenditure estimates for 1991-92 will be firmer. The following estimated yield is for 1990-91:

£ billion

Estimated yield from the imposition of VAT at:	(a) 5 per cent.	(b) 17·5 per cent.	(c) 22 per cent.
Books	0·1	0·3	0·3
Newspapers	0·1	0·4	0·5
Magazines	0·1	0·2	0·2
Rent[1]	0·5	1·9	2·4
House purchase[2]	0·5	1·8	2·2
Passenger transport	0·3	1·1	1·4

[1] Domestic rent is exempt rather than zero rated.
[2] Figures for expenditure on second hand houses are not available.

These figures have been rounded to the nearest £100 million. The items have been costed separately and cannot be added together to give a meaningful total.

The figures make no allowance for changes in behaviour and are likely to overstate the actual yield.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total yield from VAT in 1978-79; and what is the expected total yield in 1991-92, in cash and in 1991-92 prices.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 9 December 1991]: The relevant information is provided in the table.

£ billion

	Cash	1991-92 prices
1978-79 outturn	4·8	12·9
1991-92 estimate	36·2	36·2

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what, in the latest year for which information is available, is (a) the total number of people, (b) the number of people over state retirement age and (c) the number of one-parent families who pay (i) income tax and (ii) VAT.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 9 December 1991]: It is estimated that, in 1991-92, 25·1 million individuals will be liable to income tax. Of these an estimated 2·5 million are aged 65 or over and 0·5 million are single parents.

VAT is chargeable on a wide range of consumer expenditure and it is likely that everybody has to pay some in the course of a year.

Tobacco

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what sum has been raised in taxation of tobacco and tobacco products for each year from 1964 to 1990 inclusive; and what proportion of turnover of the tobacco and tobacco products retailing industry this sum represents for each of those years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer on 9 December 1991]: The table shows the total estimated yield from indirect taxes on tobacco products, and the percentage this represents of consumers' expenditure on tobacco.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Assay Marks

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take all necessary steps to protect the public with regard to its purchase of gold and silver by ensuring that British goldsmiths and silversmiths are able to continue the use of assay marks on articles for sale in the United Kingdom and exported for sale in the member countries of the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The Government have made it clear that they regard the British hallmarking system as the best means of ensuring that the public have adequate protection with regard to its purchase of precious metal articles. There are currently differences in member states' precious metals regimes. In any future negotiations to develop a common system the Government's objective will therefore be to retain as much as possible of the United Kingdom hallmarking system.

Maxwell Companies

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will appoint inspectors to examine the Maxwell Communication Corporation and related companies.

Mr. Lilley: My officials are in close consultation with the Serious Fraud Office over the progress of the SFO's inquiries.

I will not hesitate to use available powers to investigate any matter which may emerge from consultations as requiring separate inquiry, so long as that would not impede the work of the SFO.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) whether he will conduct an inquiry into the Mirror group pension fund;

(2) if he will appoint inspectors to inquire into the affairs of the Maxwell Communication Corporation and the Maxwell private companies.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 9 December 1991]: My officials are in close consultation with the Serious Fraud Office over the progress of the SFO's inquiries.

I will not hesitate to use available powers to investigate any matter which may emerge from consultations as requiring separate inquiry, so long as that would not impede the work of the SFO.

Regional Aid

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those companies in the Corby area which have qualified for regional selective assistance in the last five years, and the value of regional selective assistance for each year since 1985-86.

Mr. Leigh: In the period 1 April 1986 to 31 March 1991 the following companies in the Corby travel-to-work area accepted offers of regional selective assistance:

Advanced Textile Printers plc
Alfred Englemann Ltd.
Austin Productions Ltd.
Cheminex Laboratories Ltd.
Du Bois Ltd.
Ion Deposition Ltd.
Johnson and Jorgensen (Plastics) Ltd.
Lincolt Ltd.
NCT and S Ltd.
Oxford University Press
Sias Foods (UK) Ltd.
Solway Foods Ltd.
Taurostone Ltd.
Tradesource Ltd.
Weldon Stone Enterprises Ltd.

The list is limited to those companies where details of their projects were publicised in "British Business" until 29 September 1989 and thereafter in the "Employment Gazette".

The table shows the value of regional selective assistance—RSA—accepted by companies in the Corby travel-to-work area since 1985-86:

Year	Value of RSA accepted £000
1985-86	1,816
1986-87	1,007
1987-88	388
1988-89	750
1989-90	312
1990-91	50

Hackney Task Force

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the key benefits and objectives of the Hackney task force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The Hackney task force started work on 11 November, so it is too early to assess its achievements.

Like the Government's other inner city task forces, it will seek to secure jobs for local people, improve their employability through work related training, encourage and facilitate local enterprise, and support environmental and crime prevention initiatives where these can be linked to the reintegration of local people into mainstream economic activity.

It will support pump-priming collaborative projects to target the resources of main Government programmes on the most disadvantaged residents of that area, and lever in funding from the local authority and the private and voluntary sectors.

Textile Industry

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to oppose a phase-out of the multi-fibre arrangement until the necessary strengthening of GATT rules and the ending of all barriers to British exports has been agreed.

Mr. Lilley: The Secretary General of GATT, Mr. Dunkel, has made clear that any final Uruguay round settlement must involve stronger GATT rules, a new framework for implementing results, a general opening of markets and specific commitments to return textiles to GATT.

Footwear Industry

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has made to the European Community concerning the level of duty for non-leather footwear categories in the GATT negotiations.

Mr. Lilley: We are aware of the concerns of the United Kingdom footwear industry about tariff barriers against non-leather footwear and have drawn them to the attention of the European Commission, which is taking them into account in the GATT Uruguay round negotiations.

Footwear Labelling

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the EC directive on footwear labelling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: Representations on the EC directive on footwear labelling have been received from a number of bodies representing the interests of manufacturers, retailers and consumers and the comments made have been relayed to the Commission. The directive has undergone several revisions in the light of these comments. However, although there is general support for the aim of the directive, we regard certain of the provisions as unsatisfactory as currently drafted. My officials will continue to press for amendments to these provisions in Community discussions.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to support footwear consumer information labelling consisting of either lettering or symbols, instead of only symbols.

Mr. Leigh: The Government do not consider that the symbols which have been proposed by the Commission are satisfactory. We have indicated to the Commission that in our view the use of symbols should be optional and not obligatory and that it should be permissable to label footwear either text or symbols. We shall continue to press for an amendment to this effect.

Racal Electronics

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 29 November, Official Report, column 692-93, if he will state the latest position over the Government's decision over the bid by Williams Holdings for Racal Electronics.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 4 December that he had accepted signed undertakings from Williams Holdings plc requiring the divestment of Racal Electronics plc's lock and safe businesses in the United Kingdom within 15 months should Williams gain control of Racal.

Highlands and Islands Airports Ltd.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he intends to refer the operations of Highlands and Islands Airports Ltd. to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Redwood: Highlands and Islands Airports Ltd.—HIAL—is one of the bodies subject to investigation by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission under section 11 of the Competition Act. The Secretary of State is considering whether to refer HIAL, among other eligible bodies, for investigation in due course.

"Bradford Task Force News"

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many issues of the "Bradford Task Force News" have been published; where they were printed; what is the total cost, to date, of design, production and printing; how many further issues are planned; and what is the estimated total cost.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 9 December 1991]: Two issues of the "Bradford Task Force News" have been published to date. The first edition was printed in Bradford; the second, through HMSO, Norwich. The total cost to date, including distribution, is £9,952. Further issues will be considered as occasions demands. The total cost of future editions is therefore not known at this stage.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 10 December.

Mr. MacGregor: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is attending the European Council in Maastricht.

Nuclear Testing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will obtain for the Library at 10 Downing street a copy of the book, "Radioactive Heaven and Earth", on the history and legacy of nuclear testing, published in August 1991 by International Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War.

Mr. MacGregor: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has no plans to do so.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) basic rate and (b) higher rate taxpayers would be affected in 1991-92 by extending national insurance contributions to all employee taxable benefits in kind, for employees who earn over £8,500; and if he will give the average annual cost per individual with gross incomes between (a) £10,000 and £20,000, (b) £20,000 and £30,000, (c) £30,000 and £40,000, (d) £40,000 and £50,000 and (e) over £50,000, respectively.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 9 December, at columns 301-2.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the invalid care allowance unit to become fully computerised; and when this is due to be linked to the disability benefits computer system.

Mr. Scott: The administration of invalid care allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Destination Tables

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to publish with reference to the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Bill, the Social Security Administration Bill and the Social Security (Consequential Provisions) Bill, a destination table showing where current provisions can be found in the new legislation.

Miss Widdecombe: We are considering publication of a destination table.

Council Tax

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to his answer of 28 November, Official Report, columns 598-600, on benefit arrangements under the proposed council tax, if he will make it his policy in the year's uprating that income support will rise by not less than the retail prices index in 1993-94.

Miss Widdecombe: The reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 28 November confirmed that the April 1993 uprating of income-related benefits will be based on the revised Rossi index, including water charges and miscellaneous housing costs, and that there will be no reduction in their value to reflect the fact that recipients of income support will no longer be expected to meet their 20 per cent. liability for the community charge. This will mean that from April 1993, income support levels will be at least £1·40 a week higher for single people, and £2·80 a week higher for couples, than they might otherwise have been.

At the 1992 uprating income-related benefits will be increased by at least 7 per cent., nearly 3 per cent. more than the increase in the retail prices index over the period used to determine the uprating increase; over-80s and disabled pensioners will receive considerably more. It is impossible to predict at this stage how the actual uprating in April 1993 will compare with movements in the retail prices index in 1993-94.

Benefit Entitlement

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will specify the conditions for receipt without time limit of the following benefits during absence in another European Community country once entitlement has been established in the United Kingdom to (a) invalidity benefit, (b) severe disablement allowance, (c) mobility allowance, (d) attendance allowance and (e) invalid care allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Payment of all these benefits may continue for recipients who are abroad temporarily. It is for the independent adjudicating authorities to determine whether or not a particular absence is temporary. Apart from invalid care allowance, all these benefits may continue indefinitely for those who move to another Community country, provided that they are covered by European Community regulations and are, or have been, subject to United Kingdom legislation as workers.

Occupational Diseases

Mr. Crowther: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the Government have completed their consideration of the European Commission recommendation of 22 May 1990 concerning the adoption of a European schedule of occupational diseases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We are still considering the recommendation. We are being assisted in our consideration by the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council, the independent body which advises the Secretary of State on occupational diseases. The council hopes to report back in late 1992.

HEALTH

Skin Cancers and Cataracts

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimates he has made of the financial impact on the health service of the increasing number of skin cancers and cataracts:

(2) what provisions he has made to deal with an increase in the number of people with skin cancer and cataracts; and whether he has any plans for public awareness or screening campaigns.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No specific assessment has been made of the financial impact of increasing numbers of skin cancers and cataracts. Since they currently account for a very small proportion of total NHS expenditure it is unlikely that even a considerable increase in numbers would impose a critical burden on the health service.

The Health Education Authority is committed to the 10-point European code against cancer which advises against excessive exposure to the sun. The HEA has also organised public awareness campaigns and produces leaflets both specifically on dangers from exposure to the sun and generally on how to avoid cancer.

Population screening for skin cancers is not regarded as cost effective even in countries such as Australia with a very high incidence of skin cancer.

Cot Deaths

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will assist with the funding of the leaflet, "Reduce the Risks of Cot Deaths" produced by the Foundation for the Study of Infant Deaths.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government have today launched the "Back to Sleep" campaign, an information campaign aimed directly at parents and others who care for young babies. The campaign will centre on a Department of Health leaflet which will be promoted in the national and specialist press, and on television. People will be invited to obtain the leaflet which sets out the main steps to reduce the risks of cot death. The leaflet will also be available in ethnic languages.

The Foundation for the Study of Infant Deaths has, separately, produced its own leaflet. We have no plans to assist directly with the funding of the foundation's leaflet but, as we anticipate that the foundation's advice and counselling helpline will face an increased demand during the period of the Government's campaign, we have decided to provide further section 64 funding to cover its additional costs.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each regional health authority the capital sums raised by the closure and sale of hospitals for each year since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: Total capital receipts, for each regional health authority, from all sales of land and buildings since 1979 are shown in the table.

Trafalgar Medical Service, Sheffield

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if patients retain their rights under the national health service complaints procedure when being seen by consultants working for Trafalgar Medical Services in Sheffield.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett), on 11 June at columns 498-99.

Under the provisions of the patients charter all those receiving NHS-funded treatment, regardless of where that treatment is delivered, will have access from 1 April 1992 to the NHS, or similar, complaints procedures. Arrangements are currently being made to have suitable procedures in place for all providers of NHS-funded care.

Dental Services

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many anaesthetic extractions have been carried out on children over each quarterly period since the inception of the new dental contract.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 26 November 1991]: The number of general anaesthetics or sedations administered in the general dental services in connection with extractions of teeth in children is shown in the table. Figures for similar treatment provided within capitation and for all such treatment provided by the community dental service are not available.

Computer Reimbursement Scheme

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding has been made available to the general practitioners' computer reimbursement scheme in Hampshire; what claims have been made against the scheme; and if he will make a statement about its operation.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 27 November 1991]: The figures requested are not held centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Sir Robin Buchanan, the chairman of Wessex regional health authority, for details.

ENERGY

Civil Nuclear Programme

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the last date that uranium originating from (a) South Africa and (b) Namibia was delivered to the United Kingdom, in any form, for use in the civil nuclear programme.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Uranium for the United Kingdom's civil nuclear programme has not been imported from South Africa since 1973. Imports of uranium from other countries, including Namibia, are a commercial matter for the industry.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the date upon which safeguards were first applied to uranium delivered to the United Kingdom for use in the civil nuclear programme.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Safeguards were applied under the Euratom treaty to imports of natural and enriched uranium from 1 January 1973.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the nature and function of the civil uranium procurement directorate; in what year it was established; what is its annual operating budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The British civil uranium procurement directorate—BCUPD—was formed in July 1979 by the Central Electricity Generating Board, the South of Scotland Electricity Board and British Nuclear Fuels Limited. The BCUPD was responsible to these organisations for ensuring that uranium was available to meet the needs of the civil nuclear programme. Its administration was handled by the CEGB. Following the changes in the organisation of the electricity supply industry, it was agreed by Nuclear Electric plc, Scottish Nuclear Limited and British Nuclear Fuels plc that the individual organisations would be responsible for their own procurement. The BCUPD was accordingly disbanded in March 1991.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy from which countries uranium is currently imported for use in the British civil nuclear programme.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This is a commercial matter for Nuclear Electric plc, Scottish Nuclear Limited and other users of civil uranium.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all building works approved by his Department for (a) the Sellafield and Calder works and (b) Chapelcross since 1979, indicating which of these projects, once complete, would be subject to Euratom safeguards.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Building works at the sites mentioned by the hon. Member are operational matters for British Nuclear Fuels plc—BNFL—subject to planning and other consents. All civil nuclear material in British Nuclear Fuels plc facilities is subject to Euratom safeguards and to the terms of the UK-IAEA-Euratom safeguards agreement.

Nuclear Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to require British Nuclear Fuels plc to install a plant to remove radioactive krypton prior to the opening of the THORP reprocessing plant.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The question of discharges of radioactivity from the THORP plant is a matter for discussion between British Nuclear Fuels plc, the chief inspector of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in the context of authorisations required under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960.

Electricity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what consultations he has had with the Director-General of the Office of Electricity Regulation concerning the management of the generator-distributor pool and its rules concerning the withdrawal of declared capacity on the prior to generation day and its subsequent redeclaration on the day; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consultations he has had with the Major Energy Users Council and the directors-general of OFFER and the Office of Fair Trading concerning the operation of the pool in September and October 1991 and its implications for electricity prices generally and for heavy users in particular; if he will use his powers regarding a reference to the Office of Fair Trading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend and I meet the Director-General of Electricity Supply from time to time and we discuss a range of issues. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has offered to meet the Major Energy Users Council to discuss electricity prices. We have had no consultations with the Director-General of Fair Trading. The Director-General of Electricity Supply has initiated an inquiry into the recent behaviour of the pool prices. It would not be appropriate for me to prejudge the outcome of that inquiry.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with the Director-General of OFFER concerning the operation of the electricity futures market since its inception on 1 November and the number of contracts traded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend and I meet the Director-General of Electricity Supply from time to time and we discuss a range of issues.

Energy Efficiency Levy

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations he has had with the Director-General of Gas Supply concerning his proposal for a three pence per week per gas consumer energy efficiency levy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend and I meet the Director-General of Gas Supply from time to time, I am aware of his proposed modifications to the tariff formula and his discussions with interested organisations, although I have not discussed these particular proposals with him.

Nuclear Generating Capacity

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's current estimate of the installed nuclear generating capacity in England and Wales in the year 2000.

Mr. Wakeham: The principal operator of nuclear capacity in England and Wales is Nuclear Electric plc. Decisions regarding capacity are mainly a commercial matter for the company. Nuclear Electric will operate its existing portfolio of plant as long as it remains both safe and economic to do so.

Research Expenditure

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy further to his answer of 4 December, Official Report, column 141-43, if he will give the figures for 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 excluding technology transfer and dissemination expenditure.

Mr. Wakeham: Figures for the years requested are as follows:

	£ million Money terms	£ million 1991-92 real terms	Percentage of total research and development expenditure
Coal technology
1989-90	1·7	2·0	1·0

Notes:

1. In addition to excluding technology transfer and dissemination expenditure from the above figures, the 1989-90 and 1990-91 figures for nuclear power exclude restructuring costs associated with R & D programmes.
2. 1989-90 and 1990-91 figures are final outturn.
3. 1991-92 figures are provisional.

Technology Transfer and Dissemination

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what items are covered by his Department's definition of technology transfer and dissemination

Mr. Wakeham: The Department's technology transfer and dissemination programmes are:

—the Offshore Supplies Office's publicity programme;
—the Renewables technology transfer programme;
—the Renewables publicity programme;
—the non-R and D aspects of the Energy Efficiency Office's (EEO) Best Practice programme (about two-thirds of expenditure in the current year);
—the non-R and D aspects of work done for the EEO by the Energy Technology Support Unit (ETSU) and the Building Research Energy Conservation Support Unit (BRECSU), relating mainly to demonstration and marketing;
—the EEO's Monitoring and Targeting programme;
—residual payments from the EEO's former Demonstration Scheme;
—non-R and D aspects of the Enhanced Oil Recovery programme;
—non-R and D aspects of the Reservoir Simulation programme.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications for money under the aid and trade provisions were received, and how many were granted, in 1989-90 and 1990-91; how much money was allocated, and to which companies, under the aid and trade provision in 1990-91; and what is the total sum of money available to United Kingdom companies under the aid and trade provision during the current financial year.

Mrs. Chalker: A total of 151 aid and trade provision —ATP—applications were received in 1989-90, and 111 in 1990-91. Forty-two ATP offers were made in 1989-90 and 33 in 1990-91 in respect both of these and of earlier ATP applications.

The ATP budget in the current financial year is £97 million.

In 1990-91 aid agreements were concluded with Governments of developing countries for projects involving the following lead United Kingdom contractors:

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to which United Kingdom companies during 1990-91 undertakings were given that money would be made available under the aid and trade provision for 1991-92.

Mrs. Chalker: Undertakings are not given in this way. Aid and trade provision offers are made to Governments of developing countries, not to United Kingdom companies. A list of companies involved in projects for which aid agreements were signed with Governments of developing countries in 1990-91 is given in my answer to my hon. Friend of 10 December.

Aid Budget

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the planned level of total United Kingdom aid to (a) developing countries, (b) eastern Europe and the Soviet Union and (c) global environmental assistance, at constant prices, for the years 1991-92, 1992-93, 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mrs. Chalker: The planned level of ODA expenditure, as provided for in the autumn statement and at constant 1991-92 prices, is as follows:

£ million

	1991-92	1992-93	1993-94	1994-95
Aid to developing countries	[1]1,721	1,750	1,750	1,770
Assistance to eastern Europe and the Soviet Union[2]	65	180	210	200
Global environment assistance	5	10	10	10

Notes:

1992-93 to 1994-95 figures are to the nearest £10 million.

[1] Since increased to £1,786 million, by a £65 million in-year addition from the reserve, mainly for disaster relief.

[2] Includes, from 1992-93, the United Kingdom's share of European Community assistance to eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, which is to be attributed to the ODA.

Indonesia

Mr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Basingstoke, Official Report, 29 November, column 671, on aid and trade provision, he will set out the details of the investigation made into the proposed provision of a flight simulator by aeronautical systems designers to the Government of Indonesia to ensure that such technology could not be used to enhance the Indonesian military air force capability to pursue internal repression in (a) Indonesia and (b) in the occupied territories of East Timor.

Mrs. Chalker: The project concerned involves the supply and installation of a flight simulator for training pilots of the Indonesian domestic civil airline, Merpati, on a new short haul piston-engined passenger aircraft being manufactured in Indonesia under a joint venture in agreement with a Spanish company. The ODA engaged the United Kingdom Civil Aviation Authority as its technical adviser on the project.

The flight simulator, like all aircraft simulators currently produced, is designed to be aircraft-type specific. It would be impracticable to convert it for use on an alternative aircraft. Under the terms of the concessional loan which is providing finance for the project, the Indonesian Government have accepted that items purchased under the loan will not be used for military defence purposes.

Amazon Rain Forest

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made on the proposals for collaboration with Brazil over the conservation of the Amazon rain forest since the London economic summit.

Mrs. Chalker: Since the London economic summit the Government of Brazil with the assistance of the World bank and the European Commission have further developed their proposals for a pilot programme to conserve the Brazilian tropical rain forest. These proposals were discussed at a meeting in Geneva on 7 and 8 December between representatives of the Government of Brazil, the World bank, the European Commission, the G7 countries and some other potential donors.

The British Government indicated their general approval of the revised programme and, as part of the broader G7 contributions, undertook to make available up to £18·8 million to the end of 1994. This is in addition to our share of the commitment of $15 million made by the European Commission on behalf of the Community. The British commitment is subject to the production by the World bank of detailed operational arrangements acceptable to the donors. These must provide for satisfactory co-ordination of activities in the overall programme and arrangements to assure good quality projects.

The British Government are making the second largest contribution, after Germany, to the $250 million pledged in total at the Geneva meeting. The funds will be used to promote sustainable development of the living standards of the people of the Amazon within the context of environmental conservation. Activities will include measures to safeguard biodiversity; demarcate and protect national parks, reserves and indigenous areas; strengthen both federal and state environmental agencies; promote the sustainable exploitation of forest resources; support scientific research and disseminate its results; promote environmental surveillance and monitoring; support ecological zoning; develop environmental education; and support innovative, community-based initiatives concerned with the relationship between the environment and local communities.

The Government of Brazil representatives expressed their satisfaction with the outcome of the discussions at Geneva.

Contract Legal Personnel

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the ODA monitors the performance of contract legal personnel overseas.

Mrs. Chalker: The ODA monitors the performance of all aid-funded personnel overseas, through our own in-house or contract advisers, through overseas posts, and through reports from recipient institutions. Arrangements for legal personnel follow this pattern.

Baltic States

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money has been allocated to date to the know-how funds for (a) Estonia, (b) Latvia and (c) Lithuania; how much is budgeted for each fund respectively for the coming financial year; and how much has been expended to date in each of those countries.

Mrs. Chalker: Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania qualify for know-how fund assistance but no individual country allocation has been made. In financial year 1991-92 a total of £400,000 has so far been committed to projects in these countries. This will increase substantially in the coming financial year.

Aid Review

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost of publishing the 1991 annual review of British overseas aid.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Sir D. Steel) on 9 December, at column 280.

Somalia

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to assist non-governmental organisations in their efforts to deliver humanitarian aid to (a) Northern Somalia and (b) Mogadishu and other areas of the south.

Mrs. Chalker: We are providing humanitarian assistance to Somalia through United Nations and voluntary agencies. This calendar year we have committed a total of £3·47 million bilateral emergency aid to Somalia including £1·46 million for the north. Recent grants include £300,000 for an essential mine-clearing project in northern Somalia and £50,000 for emergency medical supplies for Mogadishu. We contribute towards the operational costs of non-governmental organisations' relief activities in both north and south Somalia.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk Deliveries

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether from 1992 milk delivery vehicles that supply small retail outlets will be required to have milk stored in refrigerated compartments on the vehicle during transit.

Mr. Curry: The European Commission's proposals for harmonised milk hygiene standards, which are intended to come into force on 1 January 1993, would require that the temperature of pasteurised milk must not exceed 6°C during transport. Member states would be permitted to derogate from this requirement only in relation to milk delivered to the doorstep.

NORTHERN IRELAND

National Insurance

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what would (a) the first year and (b) the full year revenue yield be from abolishing the national insurance upper earnings limit in Northern Ireland in (i) 1991-92 and (ii) 1992-93, for (1) both employees and the self-employed and (2) just employees, and giving figures separately for the number of men and women who would be affected in each case.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is set out in the table:

	Revenue yield = £ million		Numbers of people affected
	First year	Full year	Men	Women
1991-92 (employees and self-employed)	25	30	45,000	5,000
1991-92 (employees only)	4	10	10,000	—
1992-93 (employees and self-employed)	30	35	50,000	5,000
1992-93 (employees only)	4	10	10,000	—

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what changes he has made to ministerial responsibilities in his Department.

Mr. Brooke: Further to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) on 5 December 1990, Official Report, column 122, the right hon. Lord Belstead, Her majesty's Paymaster General and deputy Secretary of State, is now responsible for the Department of Finance and Personnel and for the central community relations unit and has relinquished his responsibilities for law and order.

Dr. Brian Mawhinney MP, Minister of State, is now responsible for law and order and has relinquished his responsibilities for the Department of Finance and Personnel and for the central community relations unit.

These are the only changes in responsibilities from those set out in my earlier answer.

I will, of course, continue to have overall responsibility for the work of the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments.

National Criminal Intelligence System

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Royal Ulster Constabulary will have direct access to the proposed integrated national criminal intelligence system.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 29 November 1991]: Consultations are currently under way with the Royal Ulster Constabulary with regard to this matter.

Castlereagh Holding Centre

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will list in the Official Report. such information as he has available of the sums paid for alleged ill-treatment of inmates in the Castlereagh holding centre for each of the past two years to the earliest convenient date in the bands (a) £1 to £1,000, (b) £1,000 to £2,000, (c) £2,000 to £3,000, (d) £3,000 to £4,000, (e) £4,000 to £5,000 and (f) above £5,000, respectively.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 9 December 1991]: Information in the form requested is not available from existing records.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Lockerbie

Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 29 November, Official Report, column 685-86, if he will seek the extradition of Abdul Baset Ali Mohmed Al Megrahi and Al Amin Khalifa Fhimah through the alternative method of sending to the Libyan authorities the formal documents normally issued by British courts in such cases including copies of the evidence on which the Scottish court issued its arrest warrants.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have provided the Libyan authorities with copies of the warrant containing the charges and a detailed statement of facts in support of the charges, sufficient to enable them to respond positively to the demand for surrender of the two accused persons.

Gibraltar

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will make it his policy to secure a more effective form of representation for Gibraltar in the European Parliament.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No. Gibraltar is well served by the present arrangements.

EC Treaty of Union

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what consideration Her Majesty's Government has given to the establishing of European Union citizenship of the nationals of European Community member states, and for the determination of the rights and obligations of European citizens of the Council of Ministers on propositions by the European Commission as set out in the draft treaty of union dated 8 November 1991 Ref: 1845/91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We support the concept of citizenship of the union. The draft treaty on European union under discussion at Maastricht lists existing rights which are subject to existing conditions and limitations, and establishes certain new rights. If these provisions are agreed, the Commission may make proposals to strengthen or add to these rights. Any such proposals would require the unanimous agreement of the Council and subsequent national ratification.

India

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the statement of the hon. Member for Watford, of 29 November, Official Report, column 1248, if he will request from the Indian Government information on how many police officers and other ranks from the Punjab police force have been prosecuted for crimes up to 31 March 1991; and if he will list the types of crimes committed and the punishment made.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In response to our expressions of concern the Indian Government have told us that, up to 31 March 1991, a total of 157 police officers and other ranks have been punished for human rights violations in Punjab.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will request information from the Indian Government on how many (a) officers and (b) other ranks, serving in the army, police and other security forces in Indian Kashmir have been (i) discharged, (ii) prematurely retired or (iii) prosecuted for crimes; and if he will list the types of crimes committed and the punishment made.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In response to our expressions of concern the Indian Government have provided us with the following information on 68 members of the security forces who have been punished for human rights violations in Kashmir:

(a) Army. Two officers have been given prison sentences of 10 and 11 years respectively, 11 officers severely reprimanded and two other ranks dismissed.

(b) Central Reserve Police Force. Twenty-three personnel have been suspended.

(c) Border Security Force. Fourteen personnel have been imprisoned, 10 suspended, and six others reprimanded.

Hong Kong

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Vietnamese migrants in Hong Kong.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: On 10 December, 28 Vietnamese illegal immigrants were repatriated from Hong Kong to Vietnam. This is the second repatriation since the announcement on 29 October of the signature by the British, Hong Kong and Vietnamese Governments of a statement of understanding on principles relating to the return of Vietnamese illegal immigrants from Hong Kong.

The group of 28 comprised 12 who arrived in Hong Kong after 29 October, and 16-double-backers—those who, having returned to Vietnam once, thereby benefiting from United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees —UNHCR—cash assistance, have entered Hong Kong illegally a second time. All the double-backers were rescreened. The 12 new arrivals also underwent the full screening and appeal procedure and were found not to be refugees and eventually volunteered to return to Vietnam. The repatriation was carried out in accordance with international practices and the internationally agreed comprehensive plan of action, in particular the provision that all those found not to be refugees should return to their country of origin.

More than 12,500 Vietnamese have returned to Vietnam from Hong Kong under the UNHCR run voluntary repatriation scheme. We hope that all Vietnamese illegal immigrants will volunteer to return but recognise that there will be some who will not. It will therefore be necessary from time to time for further repatriation flights to be arranged. There has not been a single substantiated case of persecution of any of the returnees.

Somalia

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to promote action in the international community to assist Somalia towards peace and reconstruction.

Mrs. Chalker: We maintain regular contact with partners in the EC and the UN regarding Somalia. On 28 November the EC and member states issued a statement urging the parties to seek peace and reconciliation.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his current assessment of the situation in Somalia.

Mrs. Chalker: There is no government in Somalia commanding national acceptance. Factional fighting continues, and is particularly heavy in Mogadishu. The north of Somalia, which is relatively peaceful and stable has purported to declare independence. Local leaders have promised a referendum and elections in 1993. We have not recognised the north's purported secession.

DEFENCE

Crown Proceedings (Armed Forces) Act

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide figures showing the amount of money (a) budgeted for and (b) actually paid out for claims settled under the Crown Proceedings (Armed Forces) Act 1987 for each of the years since the Act came into force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to my hon. Friend.

Royal Air Force

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further changes are planned to the deployment of the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since the measures announced in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1991"—SDE 91 —a number of further decisions have been taken as follows:

The move of the two Tornado squadrons from their present base at RAF Marham to RAF Lossiemouth will begin in early 1993 and the transition to a maritime Tornado force equipped with Sea Eagle missiles will be complete by the end of 1994. These two maritime Tornado squadrons will be designated Numbers 12 and 617 Squadrons.

The Tornado weapons conversion unit will redeploy from RAF Honington to RAF Lossiemouth from mid 1993. The groundcrew reconnaissance training facility and the Tornado electronic warfare maintenance school will transfer from RAF Honington to RAF Marham. Other RAF roles for RAF Honington are being considered.

No 55 Squadron, equipped with Victor tankers and now based at RAF Marham, will be disbanded by the end of 1993. The RAF's air-to-air refuelling capability will be provided by VC10 and Tristar aircraft. RAF Marham will continue as a base for two Tornado GR1a squadrons.

It is now planned to disband No. 42 Squadron (Nimrod maritime patrol aircraft) based at RAF St. Mawgan from October 1992, and to move the Nimrod operational training unit from RAF St. Mawgan to RAF Kinloss in mid 1992. RAF St. Mawgan will remain a forward operating base for Nimrods, and have other roles.

RAF Mount Batten will close at the end of 1992, when the school of combat survival and rescue and No. 3 maritime headquarters unit will move to RAF St. Mawgan.

SDE 91 announced that a reduced force of Puma and Chinook support helicopters would be redeployed from RAF Gutersloh to RAF Laarbruch. It has now been decided that this force will comprise a single mixed squadron.

RAF Wattisham will be closed as an active Royal Air Force flying station when the Phantom aircraft now based there are withdrawn from service, by the middle of 1993. Other defence uses for the station are being evaluated.

The US Army has decided to deactivate the 47th area support group (its headquarters in the United Kingdom), based at RAF Burtonwood, in July 1992. The US Army reserve storage depot at RAF Burtonwood will, however, remain.

It has been decided that the No. 60 Squadron (Andovers) currently based at RAF Wildenrath, will disband on 1 April 1992, when flying operations from RAF Wildenrath cease. Its air transport and communications aircraft and crews will deploy to Northolt as part of No. 32 Squadron which is currently based there.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Security Guards

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Group 4 security guards, once licensed to work at The Wolds prison, will be allowed to work at all prisons.

Mrs. Rumbold: Under the Criminal Justice Act 1991, staff who have been certified by the Secretary of State as prisoner custody officers can undertake custodial duties only at a contracted-out prison.

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of the contract payment made to Group 4 at The Wolds prison will be withheld if (a) operational capacity is not reached or (b) the standards outlined in the contract document are not met.

Mrs. Rumbold: All contracts between the Secretary of State and outside agencies are subject to commercial confidentiality and the commercial conditions of the Wolds contract with Group 4 cannot therefore be made public. However, the contract provides for variations to be made in the service required of the contractor and for payment to be subject to fair and reasonable adjustment. Action to secure compliance with the contract can take a number of forms including the withholding of payment. The appropriate response in any one case would depend on the circumstances and nature of the default.

Departmental Relocation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he has any plans to relocate Home Office departments to sites in Scotland; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what proposals are currently being considered to move Home Office jobs out of Scotland to relocated sites in England;

(3) if he will make a statement on the future of the hearing section of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board currently located in Glasgow.

Mr. John Patten: There are no plans to relocate any Home Office departments to or from Scotland.

The future structure and staffing of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board is under consideration, in the first instance by the board, in the light of a recent wide-ranging management review by Government and private sector management consultants. This could have implications for work loads and staffing levels in both the London and Glasgow offices in due course, but no decisions have yet been taken.

EC Bail Schemes

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on bail schemes in other European Community countries which are seeking to reduce pressure on the prison system.

Mr. John Patten: No systematic information is available on this subject, although it is known that similar kinds of work are carried out by probation officers in France and the Netherlands, and by non-profit organisations and social workers in Germany.

Directorate of Telecommunications

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total annual cost to the taxpayer of grants or subsidies given to the Directorate of Telecommunications.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Provision for DTELS is made in the Government's public expenditure plans and, in common with other parts of the Home Office, the directorate is funded from moneys voted by Parliament. Since 1 April 1989, DTELS has charged for its services, including those provided to police forces and fire brigades. In the financial year 1990-91, these services generated income worth £16·4 million; the cost of operations was £19·2 million. It is expected that the trading activity will break even by 1995-96.

In addition to its trading activity, DTELS is responsible for the operation of the Home Office wireless rental scheme, under which radio equipment was supplied to police forces and fire brigades. Income from the scheme in 1990-91 was some £9 million.

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what conditions the Directorate of Telecommunications had access to detailed drawings, designs and specifications of telecommunication equipment designed and manufactured by Sonic Communications of Castle Bromwich, Birmingham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: In order to enable DTELS to install and maintain telecommunications equipment manufactured by Sonic Communications, the company has for many years provided DTELS with technical information and training under arrangements which are the normal commercial practice in the telecommunications services industry.

Police

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the police forces considered as (a) under provided and (b) over provided with police officers according to the calculations undertaken as part of the recent Home Office review of police manpower, together with (i) the number of officers plus or minus and (ii) the number shown as a percentage of that force's manpower;

(2) if he will list for each police force in England and Wales the figures used by the recent Home Office review of police manpower in respect of (a) crime and (b) road traffic injuries.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the anticipated crime figures for 1991 in each police force area in England and Wales, and of the percentage increase this represents in each case; and whether this was taken into account in the recent review of police manpower needs.

Mr. John Patten: No estimates have been made for 1991. Figures for the 12 months up to June 1991 are published in "Home Office Statistical Bulletin 18/91", a copy of which is in the Library.

Gaming

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice he has received from the Gaming Board of Great Britain on changes in the law that will stem from the recent proposals from the European Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The European Commission is currently examining the gambling sector in the context of the single market, but has not so far produced any formal proposals. We are in touch with the Gaming Board about the progress of the Commission's study, and we would naturally seek the board's views if formal proposals requiring changes in the law are made in due course.

Brixton Prison

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the decision was taken by the police liaison unit in the prison department and by officials in the directorate of custody not to pass on information about the February Brixton escape plan to (a) the Metropolitan police and (b) the anti-terrorist squad.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information about the prisoners' intention to escape was passed to the police adviser attached to the directorate of custody by the Metropolitan police, of which the anti-terrorist branch is part.

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he was given about the involvement of the Staffordshire police in the 7 July Brixton escape on (a) the day of the escape and (b) the following day.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: As I made clear in my statement on 5 August at the time of the report on the Brixton escape by Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons, information became available from the police in February 1991 that the prisoners Pearse McAuley and Nessan Quinlivan were seeking to escape, and that in particular they had identified the Sunday chapel service as an opportunity and were seeking to acquire a firearm. That information was reported to Prison Service headquarters and to the governor of Her Majesty's prison Brixton in February, but, as I have already made clear, it was not reported to Ministers until after the escape. I was given no information on the day of the escape, Sunday 7 July, about the alleged involvement of the Staffordshire police. On the morning of Monday 8 July I was given an oral report by the Director General of the Prison Service that information had come to light from a prison officer, said to have been collaborating with the Staffordshire police some months before, that the prisoners had at that point been interested in acquiring a firearm. The information given to me in this report was incomplete and unconfirmed. Serious questions remained about the way in which this information had been processed and why no action had been taken at that time to make it more difficult for the prisoners to escape. These questions fell to be considered as part of the inquiry by Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons.

On the afternoon of Monday 8 July I reported to the House the established facts relating to the escape and announced Judge Tumim's inquiry into the circumstances. It would have been wrong to speculate in my statement about unconfirmed information that was itself one of the matters for the inquiry to look into. Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons had access to all the available information in the context of this inquiry. On Thursday 1 August I received Judge Tumim's report setting out the circumstances of the escape and the events prior to it. He found that the information known to the police was made available to Prison Service headquarters and the governor of HM prison Brixton in February 1991, five months before the escape. This information was not reported to Ministers at any time prior to the escape. Judge Tumim advised me that for reasons of security he believed that much of his report could not be published, and that to publish it as it stood would endanger the remaining security at Brixton and the safety of individuals. I accepted that advice, and the information which could be published was made publicly available on Monday 5 August.

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish the report compiled by the Governor of Brixton prison during February 1991 which dealt with the involvement of the Staffordshire police with that prison.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: No.

Sunday Trading

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will issue guidelines to chief constables about the action they should take towards those alleged to be thieving from stores and shops unlawfully trading on Sundays.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No guidelines are necessary. The investigation of alleged criminal offences and the decision whether to initiate proceedings in a particular case are operational matters for the chief officer of the police force concerned. The Home Secretary has no authority to intervene. It is my understanding, however, that the legal status of the victim is unlikely to affect a chief officer's decision.

Police Cells

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new action he intends to take to solve the problems of prisoners held in police cells.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has described on a number of occasions action which has been taken recently to contain the numbers of prisoners in police cells both in the short and longer terms. He is continuing to monitor the position and will consider what further action might be taken if it proves necessary.

Bangladeshi Nationals

Mr. Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for political asylum he has had from Bangladeshi nationals in 1990 and so far in 1991; and how many (a) have been refused, (b) have been accepted, or (c) are awaiting decision.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is given in the table.

Applications [1] [2] received for asylum in the United Kingdom by citizens of Bangladesh, and decisions[1] [2] 1990-91

	Applications received[3] [4]	Decisions[3] Granted asylum	Granted exceptional leave	Refused asylum and exceptional leave
1990	55	—	5	*
[5] [6]1991	480	—	5	105

[1] Excluding dependants.
[2] Provisional figures, rounded to the nearest 5 with * = 1 or 2.
[3] Decisions in a particular time period do not necessarily relate to applications in that period.
[4] At 31 October 1991, 430 applications were recorded as awaiting a decision. However, this figure may overstate because of under-recording of decisions.
[5] 1991 figures may understate because of delays in recording, particularly for decisions.
[6] January to October.

Prevention of Terrorism

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how observations from interested persons or organisations should be submitted for consideration by Lord Colville in his report on the operation in 1991 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Written observations should be submitted to Lord Colville, c/o room 647, Home Office, 50 Queen Anne's Gate, London SW1H 9AT, no later than Monday 6 January 1992.

Animals (Scientific Procedures)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has considered the evidence of possible breaches of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 by Professor Wilhelm Feldberg and Mr. John Stean at the National Institute of Medical Research; what action he proposes to take on this and other aspects of the report of the inquiry set up by the Medical Research Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: When the Medical Research Council inquiry's report was published, the Home Office accepted its finding that, as a result of failure by Professor Feldberg and Mr. Stean to maintain anaesthesia of sufficient depth, up to four rabbits were caused avoidable suffering.

In view of the responsibility placed on all holders of certificates of designation to ensure that the requirements of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 are properly observed at their establishments, officials discussed with the certificate holder for the National Institute for Medical Research a number of proposals for improving the management, control and monitoring of animal procedures following publication of the MRC report. The improvements agreed with the certificate holder have now been implemented. The chief inspector of the Home Office animals (scientific procedures) inspectorate has also written to all certificate holders reminding them of their responsibilities under the 1986 Act.

In its annual report for 1990, the Animal Procedures Committee recommended to the Home Secretary changes in policy on the issuing of personal and project licences under the 1986 Act to those who are past retirment age. The Home Secretary has accepted the recommendations. He has agreed that in future project licences should not be issued to those aged 70 or over, other than in exceptional circumstances, and that personal licences should be reviewed when it is known that the holder has retired. When personal or project licences are held by those over 70, they will be reviewed every 12 months. These revised arrangements, with which the Animal Procedures Committee agrees, will be introduced in April 1992.

We have now completed consideration of the evidence of possible breaches of the 1986 Act, including Professor Feldberg's notebooks, which the MRC forwarded to the Home Office.

We do not consider that, in all the circumstances of the case, there are grounds to justify referring the matter to the Director of Public Prosecutions. As soon as it was clear that avoidable suffering had been caused to animals, the Home Office took action to remove the personal and project licences held by Professor Feldberg and Mr. Stean, thus ensuring that they did no further scientific work involving the use of living animals. While there is prima facie evidence that there were breaches of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, we consider that, in the light of all the circumstances of the case, including the effective administrative action already taken, no further purpose would be served by asking the Director of Public Prosecutions to consider prosecution.

SCOTLAND

Police Statistics

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by police authority (a) the population covered by that authority, (b) the police force establishment of that authority, (c) the total arrests made in that authority, (d) the number of arrests per officer, (e) the total number of reported crimes, (f) the number of crimes per officer, (g) the total number of crimes per 1,000 population and (h) the total number of unsolved crimes per 1,000 population in each of the past three years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested at (a), (b), (e), (f) and (g) is set out in the tables 1 to 5. Information on arrests requested at (c) and (d) is not collected centrally. Neither is information on unsolved crimes collected centrally, but table 6 shows the total number of crimes cleared up per 1,000 population which may be compared with the number of crimes recorded.

Highlands and Islands Airports Ltd.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he is giving to the future operation of the airports currently within the control of Highlands and Islands Airports Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Highlands and Islands Airports Limited—HIAL—is a subsidiary of the Civil Aviation Authority which is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. Initial consideration is being given to the possibility of a transfer of responsibility for HIAL from the CAA to the Scottish Office, but no decisions have been made. Any such transfer may require legislation.

Enterprise Allowance

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the success rates for businesses started on enterprise allowance for each year from 1987 to date, giving figures for (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow and (b) Strathclyde.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 9 December 1991]: The information sought is not available in the form requested as it is possible to provide a breakdown only as a percentage of enterprise allowance scheme businesses which completed a full year on the scheme and only by the former Training Agency field office areas. Details for the financial years 1987-88 and 1990-91 are not available.

The information available for the Training Agency field office areas which encompass Greenock, Port Glasgow and Strathclyde is set out in the table below.

Enterprise Allowance businesses completing a full year on the scheme

Area	Financial years 1988-89 Per cent.	1989-90 Per cent.
Ayrshire, Dumfries and Galloway	81·22	81·52
Glasgow City	83·35	84·55
Renfrew, Dumbarton and Argyll	84·93	88·75
Lanarkshire	85·79	80·57

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have been on the enterprise allowance scheme each year from 1987 to date giving figures for (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow and (b) Strathclyde.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 9 December 1991]: The information sought is not available in the form requested as it is possible to provide a breakdown only by the former Training Agency field office areas. Details for the financial year 1991-92 are not available.

[2] The training field office area of Renfrew, Dumbarton and Argyll split into two areas in August 1990.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of business start-ups the enterprise allowance constitutes for each year from 1987 to date, for (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow and (b) Strathclyde.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 9 December 1991]: The information requested is not available.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what types of business have been created by enterprise allowance, broken down by standard industrial classification, or by manufacturing, construction, transport and distribution, retail, private services and others, giving details for (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow and (b) Strathclyde.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 9 December 1991]: The information requested is not available at any level of disaggregation below Great Britain as a whole.

Self-employment

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people are self-employed in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow and (b) Strathclyde, and if he will publish comparable figures from 1987 to date.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 9 December 1991]: Estimates of the number self-employed for areas within Scotland are available only from the censuses of population. At the time of the 1981 census there were 57,426 people recorded as self-employed in Strathclyde region and 904 recorded as self-employed in the Greenock and Port Glasgow constituency. Data from the 1991 census on the numbers self-employed in the Strathclyde region are expected to become available around 1992 and for the parliamentary constituency of Greenock and Port Glasgow in January 1993.

Health Boards

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide for each health board the total amount required for repairs and maintenance of health board property and equipment to bring it up to an overall condition which exhibits only minor deterioration.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 6 December 1991]: The Government already provide significant resources for this purpose. In addition to substantial capital investment in new building and improvements health boards have spent a total of £210 million on the repair and maintenance of property and equipment since 1983-84. Future allocations will enable health boards to invest further capital in improving the physical condition of the existing estate.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Aluminium Can (Recycling)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Lord President of the Council what decision was made by the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee regarding the implementation of a policy of recycling aluminium cans within the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 9 December 1991]: At the end of last Session, when the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee ceased to exist, there had been no opportunity for it to consider the question of collecting aluminium cans for recycling. The authorities of the House are however investigating what arrangements could be made for that purpose in order that the matter can be considered in due course by the Accommodation and Works Committee.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Research Library

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, how many persons currently work in the research Library of the House of Commons; of these how many are (a) British citizens, (b) citizens of other EC countries and (c) citizens of Commonwealth countries; and if he will make a statement on the policy of the Commission in making appointments to such posts.

Mr. Beith: There are 55 staff employed in the research division of the House of Commons Library. All are of British nationality.

Prior to 21 May 1991, in order to be eligible for appointment to the civil service and, in accordance with the provisions of the Race Relations (Prescribed Public Bodies) (Amendment) Regulations 1985, to the House of Commons Service, candidates had to be British citizens, Commonwealth citizens or citizens of the Republic of Ireland. The European Communities (Employment in the Civil Service) Order 1991, which took effect on 21 May 1991, allows nationals of other member states of the European Communities and certain members of their families to be employed in the civil service other than in the "public service" within the meaning of article 48(4) of the treaty of Rome.

By statute, conditions of service of staff of the House have to be kept broadly in line with those in the home civil service. Consequently, the Commission is considering the implications of the Order in Council for its own recruitment policy; and a survey of posts is being conducted to determine which may be classified as "public service" within the meaning of article 48(4) of the treaty of Rome.

WALES

Consultants (Waiting Lists)

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is (a) the highest, (b) the lowest and (c) the average of waiting lists for consultants with the health service in Wales, including where a consultant operates at more than one hospital or clinic; and what efforts are being made to transfer patients to consultants with shorter waiting lists.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not held centrally at present. The most detailed data currently available are for the main specialties at hospital level, as published in the Welsh hospital waiting list bulletin. However, the recently published patients charter sets out the Government's plans to improve the quality and range of information on healthcare services in Wales. In that is the guarantee that health authorities will make more widely available to GPs and patients information in respect of waiting times by consultant as well as by hospital and specialty. Patients from anywhere in Wales who are suffering from cataracts, varicose veins and hernias or who need hip or knee joint replacements may be referred to one of the four treatment centres we have established if they have been waiting for in-patient treatment for more than four months. When I visited in May the five hospitals which then had the highest in-patient waiting lists I discussed the problem with a wide range of staff. It appeared that there are marked differences in the length of lists between consultants and locations. Also there are instances where a consultant has out-patient clinics at two different hospitals within the same vicinity yet where the lengths of the two out-patient lists are markedly different.

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many set-aside agreements are operative in Wales; and if he will list the numbers by county.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

	Number
Gwynedd	4
Clwyd	4
Powys	5
Mid Glamorgan	—
South Glamorgan	1
West Glamorgan	3
Gwent	7
Dyfed	37
Total	61

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the operation of set-aside in Wales; what is the current amount of grant involved; and if he proposes to increase set-aside grants.

Mr. David Hunt: Payments under the set-aside scheme in 1991-92 are expected to be around £350,000. There are no plans to increase the grant rates at present.

Grant-aided Bodies (Deficits)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales further to his answer of 29 November, Official Report, columns 687-88, if he will list those non-departmental bodies, to which he offers a grant-in-aid, which are currently running operational deficits.

Mr. David Hunt: Grant in aid is paid to the following executive non-departmental public bodies:

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation
Countryside Council for Wales
Curriculum Council for Wales
Development Board for Rural Wales
Housing for Wales
National Library of Wales
National Museum of Wales
Sports Council for Wales
Welsh Development Agency
Wales Tourist Board

In all these cases grant in aid is provided to enable the bodies concerned to carry out those activities which cannot be financed from charges, rents and other sources of funding.

Rail Crossings

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many crossings of (a) footpaths and (b) bridleways there are in Wales over railway lines where the line speed is 100 mph or higher.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There are two crossings of footpaths and none of bridleways.

Bus Deregulation

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the volume of mergers and concentration in the bus industry in Wales following deregulation.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Comprehensive information on the volume of mergers in the bus industry in Wales is not available centrally.

Training

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what standards of training, including provision for on-the-job training, will be required of employers who may take young people's training credits.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Young people with a training credit are free to work with any employer. Training credits operate in the broad framework of youth training, including the requirement that all participant providers of training who are funded through the training and enterprise council should satisfy criteria at least equivalent to those for approved training organisations.

Schools Inspectorate

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed in Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools in Wales; and what increase or decrease is being proposed.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The number of HMI currently employed in Wales is 59. Until my right hon. Friend has completed his consideration of the future role and structure of HMI in Wales, I am not in a position to say whether there will be any change in numbers. We hope to announce our conclusions shortly.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what consultations have been held with local education authorities and parents about the proposed changes to Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools in Wales;

(2) whether he will list those organisations in Wales which have advocated the proposed changed role and status of Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In May this year my right hon. Friend announced his intention to conduct a review of the role and structure of HMI in Wales. That review has involved work by an external consultant who, in addition to inviting written evidence from teachers' unions, held discussions with head teachers, principals of colleges, a number of directors of education and local authority advisers, representatives of other interested organisations and the committee and officers of the HMI association.

The Education (Schools) Bill now before the House makes provision for a new statutory post of Her Majesty's chief inspector—HMCI—of schools for Wales to oversee arrangements for the new system of regular school inspections referred to in "Education: A Charter for Parents in Wales" which was published at the end of September. The HMCI will also be charged with providing advice to my right hon. Friend on the quality of education provided by schools in Wales and the educational standards achieved by them.

My right hon. Friend has not yet taken decisions on other aspects of HMI's current function in Wales, to which the report by the external consultant is relevant. My right hon. Friend hopes to announce his conclusions shortly.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next intends to meet Her Majesty's inspector of schools in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chief inspector as appropriate to discuss aspects of his work and the work of his staff.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has of the number of local education authority inspectors/advisers employed by each of the authorities in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not normally collected centrally. However, I understand that the numbers are as follows:

Authority	Number advisers/ inspectors
Powys	16
South Glamorgan	24
Mid Glamorgan	29
West Glamorgan	22
Dyfed	22
Gwent	30
Gwynedd	19
Clwyd	20
TOTAL	182

Roads

Mr. Grist: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales why there is an unused carriageway between the two carriageways in use of the A48(M) west of its junction with the M4; how long has it been there; what was the cost; what was its purpose; what is now intended; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The unused carriageway between the two A48(M) carriageways at Castleton—M4/A48(M) junction 29—was constructed when the carriageway resurfacing and strengthening work to the A48(M) were carried out in 1989. It was provided to enable westbound traffic—M4 to A48(M)—to be transferred to the eastbound carriageway, in contraflow, while works to the westbound carriageway were carried out. Because of the split between the two A48(M) carriageways at Castleton, junction 29, this contraflow arrangement would not otherwise have been possible.

On completion of the A48(M) works in 1989, the ends of this additional length of carriageway were stopped up using landscaped mounds. The carriageway has not been removed because it may, at some time in the future, be useful again should a contraflow arrangement be necessary to carry out further works.

The cost of the carriageway was £250,000.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the needs of each community or district in Wales in terms of crime prevention, and what initiatives he has taken as a consequence terms of the responsibilities of his Department.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Public law and order and matters of policy relating to crime prevention are the responsibilities of the Home Office. However, the Welsh Office supports a number of social projects which contribute to crime prevention or alleviate its effects.

Under the urban programme the Welsh Office invites applications for projects to help overcome economic, environmental and social deprivation in urban Wales. Support of over £500,000 has been approved for crime prevention initiatives during the current financial year, including £270,000 for 11 new projects. The Department has also assisted with the appointments of crime prevention co-ordinators in six of the eight Welsh counties.

As part of the funding of the voluntary sector, the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders—NACRO—is receiving some £180,000 over a three-year period to establish a juvenile crime prevention unit. The unit works with local authorities and other agencies in south-east Wales to develop strategies that combat juvenile crime.

The Welsh Office has also played a role in the widely acclaimed partnership approach to crime prevention, and has been associated with the launch of several successful initiatives in the Principality. These have included: the Cynon Valley crime prevention bureau on 14 February; an auto crime Project in north Wales on 15 April; the major campaign "Secured by Design", in Caernarvon castle on 18 June; "Vehicle Watch Wales" in Crossyceiliog on 11 September; and the Dyfed crime reduction initiative at Pembroke dock on 9 December.

The Department has also supported a youth crime seminar organised by NACRO in Cardiff on 5 July.

Partnership schemes bring together various agencies such as local authorities, the police, probation and social services, the youth services, NACRO and the commercial sector in order to develop carefully targeted and co-ordinated responses to specific problems.

On 1 October the Department also took part in an open day arranged by the Home Office in Cardiff which again highlighted the attention being given to crime prevention matters in Wales.

Needs and Deprivation

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales at what dates during the last 12 years his Department has reviewed the factors taken into account in assessing need or deprivation in communities and districts in Wales (a) in general and (b) in regard to eligibility for urban programme; and what changes have been made as a result of each review.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Since 1979 the factors used to assess deprivation in Wales for general purposes and to determine eligibility for urban programme assistance have been reviewed and recalculated in 1980, 1982, 1984, 1986, 1988 and 1990. Since 1988 the index based upon these factors has been calculated for all electoral wards in Wales. Following the 1984 review three districts were added to the original five designated under the Inner Urban Areas Act 1978; following the review in 1986, two more districts were designated; and following the 1990 review all districts in Wales containing at least one deprived electoral ward became eligible to apply for urban programme assistance.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the factors which are taken into account by his Department in assessing need or deprivation in communities and districts in Wales (a) in general and (b) in regard to eligibility for urban programme.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The factors which are used to indicate deprivation for general purposes and for eligibility to the urban programme are high levels of unemployment, low levels of economically active population, high levels of low socio-economic groups in a population; high loss of population in the 20 and 59 years age group, high levels of permanent sickness in a population; high levels of overcrowding in housing, low levels of basic housing amenities, and an above average standard mortality rate.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will announce the names of the hospitals and other health service units who are to be invited to proced to draw up applications to become opt-out national health service trusts.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: No hospitals or other health service units will be opting out of the national health service—a fact which the hon. Gentleman knows well. An announcement will be made soon on those health service units invited to prepare applications to become national health service trusts in 1993.

EMPLOYMENT

Tourism

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information his Department holds on the total Government expenditure on tourism in each year since 1986-87.

Mr. Jackson: The Department's best estimates of the total tourism related expenditure by Government-funded bodies for Great Britain between 1 April 1987 and 31 March 1992 are as follows:

	£ million
1987-88	404·7
1988-89	478·3
1989-90	486·0
1990-91	570·2
[1]1991-92	576·3

[1] Estimate.

It is not possible to give comparable figures for 1986-87 because of organisational changes. The above figures comprise Government provision to statutory tourist bodies, to English Heritage, to royal parks and palaces, to museums and galleries, to the Countryside Commission, to the Nature Conservancy Council, to the Rural Development Commission, to the Sports Council and analogous expenditure in Scotland and Wales. It is not possible to isolate the tourism element of spending for bodies with a remit wider than tourism, except for Highlands and Islands Enterprise, formerly the Highlands and Islands Development Board, where this has been done.

Earnings

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the proportion of (a) male, (b) female and (c) all employees working (i) 40 to 48 hours per week, (ii) 49 to 60 hours per week or (iii) over 60 hours per week for (1) manual employment, (2) non-manual employment and (3) all employment, with weekly earnings below £100, from £100 to £130, from £130 to £140, from £140 to £180, from £180 to £190, from £190 to £200, from £200 to £300, from £300 to £400, from £400 to £500, from £500 to £600 and from £600 to £700 respectively.

Mr. Jackson: The information available closest to that requested is published in part F tables 159-160 of the new earnings survey 1991, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Training

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will state the total inputs into training (a) by the Government and (b) by employers, in Britain, for the year 1986-87, and for the latest year for which figures are available on the same basis as the Department of Employment press notice of 30 October 1991.

Mr. Jackson: It is estimated that the financial input, including earnings forgone by individuals, into vocational education and training in Britain in 1986-87 was £33 billion. Of this, £7 billion was attributable to the government and £18 billion to employers. Comparable figures for later years are not available, although evidence suggests that employers' expenditure has risen and now exceeds £20 billion a year.

Footwear Industry

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he received proposals for national vocational qualifications from the British Footwear Manufacturers Federation; and when he intends to approve them.

Mr. Jackson: Submissions for accreditation of qualifications as national vocational qualifications—NVQs—are received by the National Council for Vocational Qualifications—NCVQ. The British Footwear Manufacturers Federation is in discussion with NCVQ and Employment Department officials and it is hoped that it will soon be able to make a successful submission to the NCVQ for accreditation of NVQs.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Local Management of Schools

11. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many local education authorities have already delegated 85 per cent. of their funds to schools.

Mr. Fallon: Forty-one out of 97. This represents an update on the figures I gave in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris) on 14 October, Official Report columns 67-72. The revised figures are as follows:

Footnotes to table showing the extent of delegation.

1. 97 local education authorities (LEAs) currently have LMS schemes in operation, and are required to publish budget statements under section 42 of the Education Reform Act. The LEAs are ranked according to the percentage of funds delegated to schools, with those delegating more at the top of the ranking order. Schemes for 12 inner London LEAs other than Westminster are due to be submitted by 30 September and are due to come into operation on 1 April 1992.
2. The potential schools budget (PSB) consists of the major part of the general schools budget (GSB)—ie the GSB less expenditure on certain excepted items: capital expenditure; expenditure supported by central government grants; and expenditure on school meals, home to school transport and transitional exceptions (eg grounds maintenance). The amount which the schools themselves decide how to spend, as a proportion of the PSB, is a percentage used as an indicator of the extent to which LEAs have delegated resources to their schools. A new requirement from 1993 (1995 for inner London authorities) is that this percentage should be a minimum of 85 per cent. The percentage for last year 1990-91 is given in brackets. Where a figure is not given in brackets the LMS scheme was not in operation last year.
3. The proportion of the PSB held back by each LEA (ie not delegated to schools) expressed as a cash amount per pupil—rounded to the nearest £10. Pupil numbers have in most cases been taken from LEA's section 42 statements. Where pupil numbers are not provided in the section 42 statement they are taken from the latest statistical information available to the Department, ie the January 1990 form 7 returns.
4. Expenditure on central administration—one of the discretionary exceptions included in the PSB—expressed as a percentage of the PSB. Last year's percentage is given in brackets.

Note:

The percentages stated may differ from the percentages calculated by individual LEAs because of the effects of rounding.

Dyslexia

15. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what programmes are being considered to help pupils suffering from dyslexia.

Mr. Fallon: It is for local education authorities to make suitable provision for dyslexic pupils. The Government have also invested £250,000 to research how information technology and its software can assist dyslexic pupils, in a project based at the Harris CTC. My right hon. and learned Friend has also asked the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education to report on how trainee teachers are taught to identify and help dyslexic pupils.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many (a) primary and (b) post primary schools in England and Wales have a specialist teacher for pupils suffering from dyslexia.

Mr. Fallon: I regret that this information is not collected centrally.

Polytechnics

16. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many polytechnics have indicated a desire to adopt the title universities; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The polytechnics have welcomed our policy to allow flexibility over the university title. Those that wish to take advantage of this flexibility will shortly be invited to propose new titles to the Privy Council Office.

Youth Work

17. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received regarding the future of youth work and the youth service.

Mr. Atkins: I have recently received representations from the National Youth Agency on a number of issues relating to the youth service.

Teacher Appraisal

18. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on teacher appraisal.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Regulations requiring the appraisal of school teachers in England and Wales were made in July. All teachers now in service must complete the first year of their appraisal cycle by August 1995.

Higher Education

19. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the White Paper "Higher Education—A New Framework"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Government have received a number of representations on the higher education White Paper. They generally welcome the Government's proposals.

Primary Schools

20. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what scope he sees for the setting or streaming of pupils in primary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In the statement I issued last week, I encouraged primary teachers to explore a range of approaches to improve primary teaching, including grouping pupils according to their achievements in a particular subject, so that their individual needs can better be met.

Foundation for Sport and the Arts

21. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met representatives of the Foundation for Sport and the Arts to discuss assistance to sport.

Mr. Atkins: I met the foundation's trustees on 3 December 1991.

Grant-maintained Schools

22. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the level of annual maintenance grants for grant-maintained schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have received more than 50 responses to the consultation paper we issued on 17 October about the funding of grant-maintained schools in 1992-93. We are considering carefully the detailed comments we have received and will announce final decisions in due course.

Capital Spending

23. Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he proposes to announce the allocations made to each local education authority for capital spending, 1992-93.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend intends to announce his annual capital guidelines and voluntary aided school capital allocations for 1992-93 to local education authorities shortly.

School Buildings

24. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to enable local education authorities to improve the fabric of school buildings.

Mr. Fallon: Local education authorities and school governors are responsible for the state of their school buildings, and for deciding expenditure levels and priorities.

We are making substantial resources available to local education authorities for capital spending on school buildings. A total of £524 million will be allocated for schools for 1992-93, an increase of 11 per cent. over the £472 million allocated in 1991-92. Building grants for voluntary aided schools will also increase to £151 million, a rise of over 15 per cent. on the current year.

25. Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make additional moneys available to the city of Birmingham for major repairs for school buildings.

Mr. Fallon: Annual capital guidelines for local authority capital expenditure on schools will rise by 11 per cent. in 1992-93, to £524 million. In addition, grants to voluntary aided schools will rise by 15 per cent. to £150 million. We expect to announce the distribution of these totals between education authorities shortly before Christmas.

26. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will approve an additional allocation of funds to Bradford local education authority to enable school building and renovation to take place in the current year.

Mr. Fallon: I hope to respond to Bradford's request for a supplementary credit approval shortly.

Student Grants

27. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current level of the maximum student grant; and what change there has been since 1978-79 in real terms.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The maximum basic maintenance grant is for students in London, as defined in the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations 1991, and stands at £2,845. This represents 82 per cent. of the comparable rate for the 1978-79 academic year—£1,315—after adjusting for retail price changes only. The maximum full-year London student loan—£660—brings the resources per student to slightly more in real terms now than in 1978-79. These comparisons take no account of changes in the composition of the mandatory award.

Examination Results

28. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the relationship between spending by local education authorities and examination results.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Bournmouth, West (Mr. Butterfill).

Parental Choice

29. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the workings of Government policies on parental choice in central London.

Mr. Fallon: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) on 12 November, Official Report, columns 492-93.

Teachers' Pay

30. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the proposed independent pay review body for teachers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for Berkshire, East (Mr. MacKay).

European Football Championship

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what support his Department is giving to the bid to hold the European nations football championship in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Government have welcomed the Football Association's bid. Officials in my Department are working closely with the Football Association on a number of matters relating to the bid and have provided the guarantees requested by UEFA.

AIDS/HIV Classes

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in favour of a Christian conscience clause which would permit parents with deeply held religious beliefs to withdraw their children from classes dealing with AIDS/HIV.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend has received a large number of representations from minority religious groups, seeking a right for parents to withdraw their children from the proposed new requirement of national curriculum science that pupils aged 11 to 14 shall extend their study of the way in which the healthy functioning of the human body may be affected by the human immunodeficiency virus.

Free School Meals

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the latest figures for the number and proportion of children in families on income support who are not taking up their entitlement to free school meals (a) in primary schools, (b) in secondary schools and (c) in special schools.

Mr. Fallon: This information is not available in the form requested. In May 1990, a total of 1,010,815 children aged between five and 16 were in families in England receiving income support. A total of 764,611 free meals were taken in maintained primary—including nursery—secondary and special schools in England on the school meal census date in January 1990.

Seven-year-olds (Testing)

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total cost of introducing testing for seven-year-olds in 1991; and what is the estimated cost of testing for 1992.

Mr. Eggar: The total cost of writing, printing and distributing the tests for seven-year-olds for England and Wales in English, Welsh, maths and science was £1·1 million for 1991, and is estimated at £2 million for 1992. The associated essential development work, including trials and evaluation, cost £4·3 million.

The Department also supports expenditure by LEAs on implementing the assessment arrangements through its grants for education support and training programme, to fund a total of £35 million in 1991-92 and £45 million in 1992-93.

School Transport

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consideration he has now given to the Audit Commission report "Home to School Transport, A System at the Crossroads"; what plans he has to implement the commission's proposal contained in its conclusion that targeting of benefit is necessary to ensure that the benefit of free or assisted travel is enjoyed by those who need it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend has not yet completed his consideration of the commission's report.

Hearnville School, Balham

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make an official visit to Hearnville school, Balham, SW12, to meet parents of children attending this school to hear their views before any decision as to the future of the school is decided by him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: If Wandsworth council wishes to close a school, it is required to publish proposals under section 12 of the 1980 Act. Parents will have the opportunity to make their views known during the two-month objection period following publication. My right hon. and learned Friend will take those objections into account in making his decisions on proposals which come before him.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his oral answer of 12 November, Official Report, columns 891-92, what progress he has made in obtaining undertakings from Hampshire county council that it will present a more detached account of the case to parents when grant-maintained options are on the table.

Mr. Eggar: I have been in correspondence recently with the chairman of Hampshire education committee on the subject of Hampshire's conduct during a GM ballot.

Sports Council

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has yet reached a decision on the application for funding of the relocation of the Sports Council to York; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Relocation is a matter for the Sports Council. I understand that at present it has no plans to relocate its headquarters out of London.

Medical Research Council

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received the annual report of the Medical Research Council for 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: As required by the Science and Technology Act 1965, the council has submitted its annual report for 1990-91 to the Secretary of State, and we are placing a copy before the House today.

I have read the report with interest, and was encouraged to note how much of the council's recent research will be of rapid and practical benefit to the nation's health needs. Examples of such research include the discovery of the underlying cause of the commonest inherited disposition to heart disease; the discovery of a direct relation between impaired growth in the womb and high blood pressure in adult life; and the results of the largest-ever trial of surgery, which showed that an operation to clear the carotid arteries could halve the risk of serious strokes in high-risk patients.

The MRC also attaches great importance to continuing research in the basic biological sciences, and I congratulate it on its discovery, in collaboration with the Imperial Cancer Research Fund, of the gene responsible for maleness. I also applaud the news of continuing successful collaboration with industry which has led to increased income for the MRC and a Queen's award.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Fees Taxation

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General what is the current average period between trial and taxation of counsel's fees in cases where the taxation is carried out by the central taxing unit; and if he will make a statment.

The Attorney-General: The information is not available in the form requested. Under the regulations, legal aid claims may be submitted by solicitors or counsel up to three months after the trial has been concluded. Central taxing teams deal with heavy and complex cases, which often involve a number of claims. The cases are not treated as ready to tax until all those claims have been received.

The table related to claims by counsel and solicitors determined by the central taxing teams during November 1991. It shows the proportion of those claims falling into age bands from the date when they became ready to tax and that over 50 per cent. were determined between 16 and 20 weeks from the date when they were ready to tax.

The Lord Chancellor is keeping the progress of the teams under close review and has recently increased the number of determining officers available to the central taxing teams by almost 40 per cent. This is expected significantly to reduce the delays in determinations.

Age since ready to tax	Percentage of total claims determined in November 1991
Weeks
0–4	9·3
4–8	9·6
8–12	14·7
12–16	12·7
16–20	8·3
over 20	45·4

Stipendiary Magistrates

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General how many metropolitan stipendiary magistrates were in office on 1 December 1989, 1990 and 1991, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The number of metropolitan stipendiary magistrates in office on 1 December in each of the following years was:

Year	Number
1989	45
1990	48
1991	50

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General how many provincial stipendiary magistrates were in office on 1 December 1989, 1990 and 1991, respectively; and if he will make as statement.

The Attorney-General: The number of provincial stipendiary magistrates in office on 1 December in each of the following years was:

Year	Number
1989	17
1990	18
1991	26

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on his assessment of the cost-effectiveness of the stipendiary magistracy.

The Attorney-General: Stipendiary magistrates are appointed primarily to support the lay magistracy in dealing with heavy workloads and in reducing or avoiding delays. Their cost-effectiveness arises from the generally greater speed with which they deal with cases, particularly complex ones, as compared with a purely lay bench in the circumstances in which it is appropriate to appoint them.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General how many (a) solicitors and (b) barristers were employed by the Crown prosecution service on 1 October 1989, 1990 and 1991, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: On 1 October 1989 the Crown prosecution service employed 1,018 solicitors and 514·5 barristers. On 1 October 1990 those numbers had risen to 1,134 solicitors and 521 barristers, and on 1 October 1991 to 1,278·5 solicitors and 596 barristers.

Negligence

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General if he has any proposals for the reform of the law of negligence, in the light of the decision in Murphy v. Brentwood (1990) 3WLR414; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Government have no proposals to reform the law of negligence in the light of the decision in Murphy v. Brentwood District Council (1990 3 WLR 414).

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Baltic States

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of relations between the United Kingdom and Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia respectively.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are making good progress in developing our close and friendly relations with Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania. Since the re-establishment of diplomatic relations with the three states in September, we have set up an embassy in each capital and each of the three states has established an embassy in London. Several projects in the three states have received help from the know-how fund, and other projects are being considered for assistance.

Disarmament

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain for his departmental library the "Pugwash Monograph-Verification: Monitoring Disarmament", edited by Calogero, Goldberger and Kapitza, published in 1990 by Westview Press.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Yes. A copy has been ordered and will be added to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office departmental library in due course.

International Conference on Plutonium

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the speakers' appeal produced at the international conference on plutonium, held in Omiya, Japan, on 2 to 4 November.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office departmental library already has access to the text of the appeal through online news sources.

Turkey

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response Her Majesty's Government have made to the announcement by the new coalition Government in Turkey that major progress is to be achieved in the areas of human rights, freedom of the press, access to education, and constitutional and legal reform; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We welcome the new Turkish Government's commitment to full democracy and human rights. Our views on the importance of achieving real progress are being made clear in contacts with the Turkish authorities.

Somalia

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contracts have been made with his Department by the administration in northern Somalia, operating under the title of the Republic of Somaliland; and what requests for aid or recognition his Department has received.

Mrs. Chalker: My officials maintain regular contact with the Somalia National Movement, the main party in northern Somalia. We have made clear that whilst we do not recognise the purported secession, humanitarian aid will continue. In response to requests from voluntary and multilateral agencies we have this year provided bilateral humanitarian aid worth £3·47 million to Somalia, including £1·46 million for the north.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make it his policy to have a diplomatic presence or an informal presence in northern Somalia in order to (a) maintain contact with the de-facto administration, (b) assist the families and dependants of members of the Somali community in the United Kingdom and (c) assist non-governmental organisations in the delivery of humanitarian aid.

Mrs. Chalker: We have no plans to establish any form of resident representation in northern Somalia. We maintain informal contacts with representatives of northern Somalia.

Maxwell Companies

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Swiss Government for assistance in recovering any moneys belonging to (a) Mirror Group pensioners and (b) Maxwell Communication Corporation pensioners held or controlled by Maxwell family trusts or companies in either Switzerland or Liechtenstein.

Mr. Lilly: I have been asked to reply.

The Serious Fraud Office is conducting an investigation into the Maxwell companies. Action is being taken to secure and recover assets by IMRO, the provisional liquidator, administrators and receivers appointed to a number of Maxwell private companies. I have instructed my officials to maintain the closest consultation with the Serious Fraud Office and IMRO. I will also want to hear from the administrators, receivers and the provisional liquidator if they consider that the exercise of my investigative powers or other action is warranted.

I will not hesitate to use powers available to me to investigate any matter which may emerge from these consultations as requiring separate enquiry or to take any other action, so long as that would not impede work of the Serious Fraud Office or other action which is being taken.

TRANSPORT

Nuclear Waste (Transport)

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet Scottish chief constables to discuss arrangements for advising the public when nuclear waste material is being transported through their area.

Mr. McLoughlin: No. The safety regulations for the transport of all radioactive materials in this country are based on stringent internationally agreed standards laid down by the International Atomic Energy Agency. These require safety to be "built in" to the design of the container used for transport so that the contents would not present a significant radiological hazard even in the event of a severe accident. Safety of the containers is not therefore dependent on routing considerations. I do not therefore believe that prior notification of the kind suggested would serve any practical purpose as, in addition to the above, suitable emergency arrangements exist to provide a rapid expert radiological response to any incident involving readioactivity whatever its scale or location.

British Railways (Restructuring)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now publish the Stedeford report on the proposed restructuring of British Railways.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that papers on the recommendations by the special advisory group on the British Transport Commission, chaired by Sir Ivan Stedeford in 1960, are available for inspection at the Public Record Office in Kew, but that there was no formal report.

ENERGY

Electricity Generation

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to make a decision on the works programmes concerning on-site generation and the electricity pool; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: I have today announced my decision on the issue of the application of pool charges to on-site demand. The decision, in favour of the works programme submitted by the Office of Electricity Regulation and PowerGen with specified amendments, is contained in my letter to the chairman of the pool executive committee, copies of which I have placed in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Capital Expenditure

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been, at 1991-92 prices, the total capital expenditure undertaken by local authorities and housing associations in England each year on housing since 1961, giving separately expenditure by local authorities and housing associations up to and including the estimated outturn expenditure for 1991-92 and 1992-93, specifying the price increase assumed between 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Yeo: The available information relates to gross capital expenditure on housing in England funded by local authorities and, since 1974-75, the Housing Corporation. Comparable information for spending by housing associations in earlier years is not available.

[2] Includes estimates of additional private finance on an approvals basis.
[3] Provisional.
[4] Estimated.

The Government do not plan local authority gross expenditure and no forecast is yet available for 1992-93. The plan for local authority capital expenditure, excluding authorities' self-financed expenditure, is £1,877 million for 1992-93 at 1991-92 prices while Housing Corporation gross capital expenditure, excluding any additional private finance, is forecast at £1,633 million for 1992-93 at 1991-92 prices. This assumes a 4·5 per cent. increase in prices between 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Housing Statistics

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the number of all completions and starts for each year in England since 1979-80 by local authorities and by registered housing associations, including those not funded by the Housing Corporation, of additional housing including new build and dwellings resulting from conversion or renovation.

Mr. Yeo: The information for 1979 to 1990 is published in the annual volume of "Housing and Construction Statistics: Great Britain", 1979 in the 1979-1989 edition, and the rest in the 1980-1990 edition—tables 6.1(a) and 7.1. Figures for the first and second quarters of 1991 appear in the Department's housebuilding and renovations information bulletin No. 604 published on 4 October 1991, tables 2, 4 and 5. Copies are in the Library.

Housing Investment Programme

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many dwellings have been provided by the private sector with financial or other assistance from the local authorities as defined in section E of the HIP2 returns by local authorities, for each year since 1979-80 up to 1991-92 broken down by his Department's regions.

Mr. Yeo: The total numbers of dwellings provided by private sector bodies, including registered housing associations, with financial or other assistance are as follows. They include the expected number of dwellings to be built on land sold to private developers.

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91

These are local authorities' estimates of dwellings resulting from transactions that have taken place, as reported on their housing investment programme returns. Information in this form was not collected prior to 1987-88 and outturn estimates for 1991-92 are not yet available.

Council Housing

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list (a) the total number of households on council house waiting lists and (b) the total number of households on council house waiting lists and in need, for each local authority in England and Wales for 1979-80, 1989-90 and 1990-91;

(2) if he will list for each local authority in England and Wales, the number of households (a) with more than 1 but less than 1·5 persons per room and (b) with more than 1·5 persons per room in 1979-80, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities provide estimates in their annual housing investment programme returns. The figures for 1 April 1990 and 1 April 1991 are in columns B5l—B5, 1991—B6d, B1a1 and B1b1, respectively, of the "HIP1 All Items Print" for those years. Information on waiting list numbers in 1980 is not available centrally for all authorities. The 1980 "HIP1 All Items Print" has figures for numbers of households at one below the bedroom standard, column C1a1, and at two or more below the bedroom standard, column C1b1, both at 1 April 1980. Copies of all these documents are in the Library.

For information about Wales I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Priority Homeless Statistics

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority and by his Department's regions in England and Wales, in 1979-80, 1989-90 and 1990-91, the total number of households accepted as homeless and in priority need.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities report the number of households they accept as homeless and in priority need in their annual housing investment programme—HIP1—returns. The available figures for individual authorities for 1989-90 and 1990-91 are in column C2d1 of the "HIP1 All Items Print" for 1990 and 1991, respectively. For 1979-80 the available information relates to the total number of acceptances, including those not in priority need, which is at column C5 of the 1980 "HIP1 all Items Print". The corresponding total acceptances for the two later years are at column C11 of the documents. Regional totals are in the "HIP1 Regional Grossing" for each year. All of these documents are in the Library.

For information about Wales I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Homelessness

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of households in temporary accommodation for the years 1979-80, 1989-90 and 1990-91, in each local authority in England and Wales.

Mr. Yeo: Information on homeless households for whom local authorities have accepted responsibility to secure permanent accommodation under the provisions of the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 and part III of the Housing Act 1985 is reported quarterly to the Department.

The available information on the numbers of such households who were resident in temporary accommodation, including some on whom homelessness inquiries had not yet been completed, can be found in the following publications:-

"Local Housing Statistics: England and Wales", Edition no 54 (Table 14), position at 31 December 1979 (England only);

"Households found accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England. Results for the first quarter 1991. Supplementary Tables" (Table 7), position at 31 March 1991.

Copies are in the Library.

For further information about Welsh local authorities I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Public Rights of Way

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he proposes to apply the principles of the citizens charter to the way his Department handles opposed public path orders and definitive map modification orders.

Mr. Baldry: Opposed public path orders and definitive map orders are subject to statutory procedures which lead to consideration of objections by inspectors through a written representations procedure or more commonly at public inquiries. To a very large measure these procedures already reflect the principles of the citizens charter. However, if there is an identified conflict between the current procedures and the principles of the citizens charter the planning inspectorate will be pleased to address it.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state, for each year since its establishment, the area of land that has been disposed of by the London Docklands development corporation to public and private bodies respectively, together with the related income with annual and other totals.

Mr. Key: The information is as follows:

Financial year	Land Disposed (acres)	Income[1] £ million
1981-82	—	2
1982-83	33
1983-84	54	—

1990-91	36	27
Total	661	275

[1] Income from disposals are generally phased over a number of years. The totals shown in column 3 may not therefore relate directly to the acreage disposed of in column 2.

It is not possible to disaggregate disposals between public and private sector bodies.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state for each year since its establishment the area of land acquired by the London Docklands development corporation by vesting orders, compulsory purchase orders, by agreement or other methods respectively, with appropriate annual category and grand totals.

Mr. Key: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state, for each year since its establishment, the amount spent by the London Docklands development corporation on (a) land acquisition and (b) land improvement and reclamation, together with respective totals.

Mr. Key: The total external support for Coventry city council has increased by 26·2 per cent. between the years 1990-91 and 1991-92.

In 1990-91 total external support consisted of revenue support grant, after safety net adjustment, non-domestic rate income, specific grants inside aggregate external finance, community charge benefit grant and transitional relief grant.

Chemicals

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest production and consumption figures for the United Kingdom for (a) chlorofluorocarbons, (b) carbon tetrachloride, (c) halons, (d) HCFCs, (e) methyl chloroform and (f) HFCs.

Mr. Baldry: The production figures for these chemicals are commercially confidential as there are one or two United Kingdom manufacturers. The latest estimated consumption figures available are:

	Tonnes
Chlorofluorocarbons	33,000 (1989)

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had in the last year with representatives of ICI in relation to ozone depletion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has had a number of discussions with Sir Denys Henderson and other ICI board members on a wide range of environmental issues. Earlier this year the possibility was discussed of his opening the world's first commercial plant for the ozone friendly refrigerant HFC 134a at ICI's Runcorn site. In the event, the plant was opened by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on current scientific knowledge regarding ozone depletion over the United Kingdom; and whether his Department is taking any extra measures in the light of recent scientific findings.

Mr. Baldry: The fourth report of my Department's stratospheric ozone review group, published in July 1991, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House, reported satellite evidence for ozone column depletion at the latitudes of the United Kingdom and Europe of up to 8 per cent. over the past decade during the late winter and early spring. Further satellite data presented in the Montreal protocol scientific assessment report, due to be published early next year, suggest that for the period 1978 to 1990, the trend in average annual total ozone over the United Kingdom was between −4 and −6 per cent. per decade, consistent with a recent re-analysis of Dobson Spectrophotometer measurements made at Bracknell and Lerwick by the Meteorological Office.

In the forthcoming international negotiations towards the revision of the Montreal protocol, the United Kingdom will be pressing for the earliest possible phase out for all ozone depleting substances.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff in his Department are currently working full-time on stratospheric ozone issues; and at what grades they are employed.

Mr. Baldry: Six staff work full time on ozone layer policy issues; one each at grade 7, senior executive officer, higher executive officer, executive officer, administrative officer and administrative assistant level. Management of the stratospheric ozone component of my Department's research programme will amount to approximately two man years in 1991-92. It is led at grade 6.

Local Government Finance

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total of usable capital receipts held by each local authority in Northamptonshire on 31 March 1991.

Mr. Key: The usable capital receipts held on 31 March 1991 for all local authorities in Northamptonshire are given in the table.

Authority	Total Usable Receipts as at 31 March 1991 £'000s
Northamptonshire	12,131
Corby	1
Daventry	8,728
East Northampton	3,144
Kettering	2,543
Northampton	20,874
South Northampton	2,729
Wellingborough	14,075

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has had over the Standard Community Charge and Non-Domestic Rating (Definition of Domestic Property) (Amendment) Order 1991 (S.I., 1991, No. 474); and if he will review the order.

Mr. Key [holding answer 9 December 1991]: We have had a number of representations about the six-person test of exemption from rates for small bed-and-breakfast properties set out in the order. Most have come from the occupiers of properties which do not qualify for exemption under the new test. We remain of the view that small properties used for bed and breakfast should not be liable for rates when the main use of the property is domestic. The six-person test is a practicable compromise and we have decided to retain it.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the total expenditure on (a) the preparation of the community charge prior to April 1990, (b) collection of the community charge (i) in 1990-91 and (ii) 1991-92, (c) expected cost of collection of the community charge in 1992-93, and if he will give details of (d) how much has already been spent, or budgeted for, on council tax before 1992 and (e) his estimate of expenditure on council tax in 1992-93.

Mr. Key [holding answer 10 December 1991]: Local authorities in England have reported that in 1988-89 they spent £101 million on the capital and revenue costs of preparing for the introduction of the community charge and a further £261 million in 1989-90. Local authorities have estimated that the cost of collecting the community charge in 1990-91 was £444 million and in 1991-92 £498 million. We expect collection costs in 1992-93 to be of a similar order in real terms. The Government commissioned CSL Group Ltd. Management Consultants to estimate the additional costs to local authorities of preparing for the council tax. They estimate that local authorities would need to spend £156 million broken down as follows:

	1991-92 £ million	1992-93 £ million	Total £ million
Revenue	4·8	109·8	114·6
Capital	0·3	41·2	41·5
Total	5·1	151·0	156·1

Global Warming

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the telecommunications industry regarding naturally occurring holes in the ozone layer.

Mr. Baldry: None.

Community Charge

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for each local authority the maximum possible increase in community charge from 1991-92 to 1992-93 before capping is applied.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend announced his provisional capping criteria for 1992-93 on 26 November. Once authorities have set their budgets he will take his capping decisions having regard to all appropriate considerations, including those budgets. On the basis of our proposed settlement the community charge for standard spending will be about £257, but efficient authorities should be able to set charges which are even lower.

Incineration Plants

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the expected impact of the three large-scale incineration plants within the east Thames corridor on the proposed linear town in east London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Proposals for all three applications are accompanied by environmental assessment statements. Cory Environmental Ltd's proposal for a waste-to-energy incinerator at Belvedere is at present being considered by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy. Thames Water's planning applications for two sludge incinerators at Beckton and Crossness are being considered by the councils of the London boroughs of Newham and Bexley respectively.

Rent Arrears

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of rent on local authority domestic properties in the Chelmsford local authority area remained unpaid in financial years (a) 1989-90, (b) 1990-91, (c) April to September 1990 and (d) April to September 1991, in money terms and as a percentage of the total amount due.

Mr. Yeo: The information available to the Department relates only to the position at the end of the financial year, as reported on authorities' housing subsidy claim returns. Chelmsford borough Council reported rent arrears of £199,000 at the end of 1989-90—2·2 per cent of rent roll —and £273,000 at the end of 1990-91—2·4 per cent of rent roll.

Burley-on-the-Hill

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being taken by his Department and by English Heritage to ensure a sympathetic restoration or conversion scheme for Burley-on-the-Hill, Rutland, a grade listed building.

Mr. Yeo: On 14 March 1991 the Secretary of State called in for his own determination the two planning applications for Burley and the associated applications for listed building consent. The appropriateness of the proposals for a grade I listed building will be an important factor in the Secretary of State's consideration of the case. English Heritage has had close involvement with the local authority in assessing the proposals and their views, as made available to the inquiry, will be taken into account.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the progress of his consideration of the outcome of the public inquiry relating to Burley-on-the-Hill, Rutland.

Mr. Yeo: The inspector is currently completing his report. The Secretary of State will consider it as soon as it is submitted to him.

Water Quality

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement about the National Rivers Authority's 1990 river quality survey;

(2) if he will make a statement about statutory water quality objectives.

Mr. Trippier: I am pleased to say that the National Rivers Authority has today published its report of the 1990 river quality survey. The NRA has also published today a consultation paper setting out proposals for introducing statutory water quality objectives under sections 82 and 83 of the Water Resources Act 1991. I am placing copies of the documents in the Library of both Houses.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the action taken by his Department in respect of British manufacturing interests following the announcement by European Community Commissioner Bangemann to the European Parliament on 14 March 1991 that a mandate had been given to draw up 300 standards relating to the water sector; and what guidance he intends to give to local authorities and water companies about the implication of this programme for public procurement compliance.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 10 December 1991]: The European Commission gave a mandate in 1988 to the European standards organisation—CEN—to create a work programme in the field of water supply, drainage and sewerage. In 1990 CEN forwarded a programme to the Commission covering some 300 standards for the water cycle. The commission gave CEN an additional mandate in this field earlier this year and a second work programme is now under examination by the Commission.

The DOE's interest in the standardisation programme relates to the quality of drinking water, the effect of sewage effluent on the environment and ensuring the interests of the British construction industry are taken into account. The interests of British manufacturers are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. Co-ordination of manufacturers' and users' interests is effected through the British Standards Institute, which appoints representatives to the relevant CEN technical committees and working groups.

We have issued general guidance to local authorities about the public procurement directives, and we shall issue further guidance shortly about the statutory instruments formally implementing the first batch of these directives. Guidance will be given to water companies when the utilities directives are similarly implemented.

Wildlife Trade

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will now make available the report by the royal botanic gardens, Kew, on the wildlife trade.

Mr. Baldry: Copies of the report are available in the Library of the House. It emphasises the importance of the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora as the principal tool for monitoring international trade in all wildlife, including plants. It also commends the part that the United Kingdom has played, acknowledging that we have been at the forefront of implementing and enforcing the convention for plants. The report urges that other countries should follow our example and makes a number of detailed recommendations for tightening the present controls throughout the European Community and beyond.

I have therefore written to the European Commission today, commending the report to it. I have urged it to propose, in addition to the measures on the wildlife trade which I advocated in October, that the Community takes steps to overcome the relative neglect of trade in plants.

In order to ensure that action is taken, my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside will be circulating both this report and that prepared by the Joint Nature Conservation Committee on the trade in animals at the EC Environment Council tomorrow. He will urge all member states to work towards the speedy introduction of tighter controls on the wildlife trade.

River Quality

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he first received a draft of the report of the river quality survey 1990.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 9 December 1991]: In the course of the regular contacts between my officials and the staff of the National Rivers Authority the first of a number of drafts of the report was sent to the Department last August.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement concerning the adequacy of Government funding to meet the reasonable needs and requirements of magistrates courts in rural Wales.

Mr. John Patten: Account has been taken of the concerns expressed during extensive consultations this year on the cash limits arrangements about the special needs of magistrates courts committees with courts in rural areas. The arrangements were revised following the consultations so that in each year a proportion of total grant available for the service is allocated using a sparsity factor. In 1992-93 £0·1 million is reserved for magistrates courts in Wales in this way. The 1992-93 cash limit on current grant support for the Powys magistrate courts provides for expenditure of £573,385, including a sparsity allocation of £43,832, as against forecast equivalent 1991-92 expenditure of £491,770 an increase of 16·6 per cent.

Murder

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to amend the law on provocation in cases of murder; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We are always ready to consider proposals for improving the law, but we have no proposals of our own for amending it on provocation as a defence to murder.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to remove the mandatory life sentence for murder, so as to enable sentence to be in the discretion of the trial judge; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: We remain of the view, accepted by Parliament during the passage of the Criminal Justice Act 1991, that life should be mandatory for murder to mark the particular heinousness of deliberately taking another person's life.

Police Manpower

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will give the specific figures for (a) total population, (b) urban population and (c) rural population which were used in respect of (i) the South Wales police area and (ii) the other Welsh police areas as part of the calculation of police manpower needs in the course of the recent review;

(2) if he will list, for each police force in England and Wales, the figures for (a) total establishment, (b) traffic establishment, (c) patrol establishment, (d) crime establishment and (e) the index figure for special needs, which were used in the course of calculating police manpower needs according to the manpower allocation model used in his Department's recent review of police manpower;

(3) if he will give the figure, percentage and date of the unemployment figures for each police authority area in England and Wales which was used in the recent review of police manpower needs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I will write to the hon. Member.

Magistrates (Information)

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines are given to magistrates about placing on bail people with records of previous offences.

Mr. John Patten: It is not for the Government to issue such guidelines. Decisions on bail in individual cases are for the magistrates concerned in the light of the circumstances of those cases; and it is not for the Government to issue guidelines about the way in which they should exercise their responsibilities under the Bail Act 1976 in those cases.

Offensive Weapons (Amnesties)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on local amnesties for knives and other offensive weapons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is for chief officers of police to consider whether offering opportunities for disposing of offensive weapons would be a worthwhile crime prevention initiative in their own force area.

Radio, Electrical and Television Retailers Association

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met representatives of the Radio, Electrical and Television Retailers Association; what consideration he has given to the adoption of a legal constraint which would prevent the BBC's commercial use of the licence database; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I met representatives of RETRA on 29 October to discuss the BBC's use of television licensing information. I invited RETRA to contribute to the forthcoming debate preceding the expiry of the BBC's charter in 1996, and to discussion of the draft EC directive on data protection. We have no proposals meanwhile to introduce legal restraints beyond the present Data Protection Act.

DNA Profiling

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to bring forward proposals to give the police greater powers in the use of DNA profiling for solving crimes, especially with regard to sexual offences.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no immediate plans to increase police powers in this area. My right hon. Friend has asked the Royal Commission on Criminal Justice to consider the issue and we await its recommendation, but we are most anxious to harness scientific developments effectively in the fight against serious crimes.

Directorate of Telecommunications

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what indirect subsidies are enjoyed by the Directorate of Telecommunications in the use of publicly funded premises.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Installation and maintenance services are carried out by DTELS at eight regional service centres which are owned by the Home Office and at 50 local workshops owned by police forces or fire brigades. DTELS' charges for these services are set so as to recover the running costs of the regional centres. To date, no police or fire authority has proposed that DTELS should pay for the use of workshops on its premises as these workshops enable DTELS to provide a more effective service.

CIVIL SERVICE

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Hind: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will make a statement on progress under the programme for action to achieve equal opportunity in the civil service for people of ethnic minority origin.

Mr. Renton: A good start has been made. A report on progress in the first year will be published on 12 December. Copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Executive Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the first degree obtained by the chief executive of each of his Department's executive agencies; and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded;

(2) how many staff were in post on the date that each of his Department's executive agencies were established; and how many staff are in post now in each case;

(3) whether a group bonus scheme is in operation in each of his Department's executive agencies;

(4) how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of each of his Department's executive agencies; and whether the cost was borne by the parent department or the new agency;

(5) if he will list those new facilities for staff including nurseries and health care schemes which have been introduced in each of his Department's executive agencies since their establishment;

(6) when the last annual report for each of his Department's executive agencies was published and when the next one is due;

(7) if he will list the post, grade and maximum salary payable including performance-related elements in each case where appointments from the private sector have been made to his Department's executive agencies at grade 7 or above since their establishment;

(8) if he will list the new forms of alternative working patterns introduced into each of his Department's executive agencies since their establishment and provide a breakdown by grade of the numbers of staff taking up each new working pattern for each new agency.

Mr. Maples: Questions on operational matters in the agencies concerned—the Central Office of Information, the Central Statistical Office, Her Majesty's Stationery Office, the Royal Mint and the Valuation Office—are the responsibility of the chief executives, who will be writing to the hon. Member. Chief executives may answer questions seeking personal information at their discretion.

Copies of the letters will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Departmental Recruitment (Travel Expenses)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what circumstances Government Departments are willing to pay reasonable travelling expenses for applicants to attend job or recruitment board interviews; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples: Individual Departments and agencies are responsible for over 90 per cent. of all civil service recruitment, and they determine their own policies regarding the reimbursement of candidates' travel expenses in such cases. For centrally administered recruitment, allowable expenses in excess of £5 are refundable, provided the total cost exceeds £6—that is, refunds of less than £1 are not payable.

VAT

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has put forward any proposals to permit lower VAT rates within the EC on environmentally friendly products; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 6 December 1991]: In European Community discussions we have suggested that the possibility of applying a reduced rate of VAT to environmentally friendly goods should be kept open. This would allow member states to consider that option should it prove desirable in the light of further thinking about environmental taxation in the Community. The Government have no present intention of introducing a reduced rate of VAT.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his most recent estimate of how much VAT is paid per annum by (a) an average family and (b) a married couple on average income; and how much they paid in 1978-79.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 9 December 1991]: A married couple with two children on average male earnings would pay about 5·4 per cent. of their earnings in VAT in 1991-92 compared with 2·7 per cent. in 1978-79. The comparable figures for a married couple with no children would be approximately 5·2 per cent. for 1991-92 and 2·6 per cent. for 1978-79.

East Merthyr Reclamation Scheme

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the net expenditure incurred by his Department and the Welsh Development Agency in the east Merthyr reclamation scheme.

Mr. David Hunt: Expenditure to date by the Welsh Development Agency on preparatory works relating to the east Merthyr land reclamation scheme totals £2·2 million. My Department has not given any assistance towards the scheme.

Schools Inspectorate

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he received the report on the review of Her Majesty's schools inspectorate; and when he intends to publish the reports.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This internal report on the role and organisation of Her Majesty's inspectorate in Wales was received in October. The report is being studied as part of my right hon. Friend's wider consideration of the future role and structure of HMI in Wales. There are at present no plans to publish it.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in what way the granting of trust status of a hospital in Wales affects the purchasing arrangements of that hospital.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: All provider units in Wales, including national health service trusts, will receive their income from the contracts they negotiate with purchasing health authorities.

Dyfed Family Health Services Authority

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements have been made for FHSA provision within the Pembroke trust hospital area.

Mr. David Hunt: The establishment of the Pembrokeshire national health service trust does not affect the statutory responsibilities of the Dyfed family health services authority. However, both Pembrokeshire and East Dyfed DHAs, together with Dyfed FHSA, have indicated that they are examining how they can work more closely together to ensure that local health care needs can be met more responsively and effectively.

Motorways and Trunk Roads (Contractors)

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the 10 contractors who have received the largest share of motorway and trunk road construction contracts in Wales in the last three years, giving for each contractor, the total value of the contracts received.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information covering the award of contracts during the period 1 January 1989 to 2 December 1991 is as follows:

Wolverhampton-Aberystwyth Rail Line

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will hold a meeting with the chairman of British Rail to discuss the type of trains and services on the Wolverhampton to Aberystwyth line, the facilities at intermediate stations, and the provision of information to travellers; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend and I regularly meet Sir Bob Reid to discuss a wide range of Welsh rail issues. I understand that British Rail is continuing to make a number of improvements to the service on the Aberystwyth line, including the recently introduced new class 158 express units.

Community Care

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet with directors of social services in Wales to discuss with them the adequacy of day care provision and work experience for former patients who have moved to care in the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The Welsh Office is in regular contact with directors of social services and their staffs to ensure the successful development of community care. The Welsh Office leads a systematic review of performance under our all-Wales mental handicap and mental illness strategies. Under the mental handicap strategy we are providing a record £34 million this year, of which some £7 million is supporting resettlement from hospitals and hostels, including all the necessary day opportunities. This is intended to have made possible by March 1992 the resettlement of some 350 people.

In the second year of the mental illness strategy we have more than doubled our commitment to £4·6 million, on top of the recurrent £13 million we provided under earlier initiatives. This has made possible a 25 per cent. reduction of in-patients between 1981-90 and the development of more flexible local services. We are supporting an independent research project to ensure that those resettled from hospital care in north Wales are able to lead better lives in their new homes.

Bryn Estyn Home, Wrexham

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will institute an inquiry into the management and functioning of Bryn Estyn community home, Wrexham, in the 10 years prior to its closure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This is a matter for Clwyd county council as the local authority. Acting on the recommendations of an independent review of Cartrefle children's home, the local authority has asked North Wales police to investigate allegations of child abuse at Bryn Estyn. Additionally, it has set up a free telephone helpline for former residents. I understand that they will consider the need for an independent inquiry when the police have completed their investigation.

My officials have been in touch with the social services department and advised them of my concerns about this matter.

Crematoria

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to ensure the adequate provision of crematoria within Wales to meet Welsh requirements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: It is for burial authorities, which are usually district councils, to decide whether, in the exercise of their discretionary power, to provide crematoria within their areas. I have no power to direct their provision.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial assistance is available to local authorities in Wales towards the funding of new crematoria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: There is no source of financial assistance to local authorities specifically for the provision of crematoria. It is for the authorities themselves to determine their own priorities on how the resources made available to them are spent.

Fine Art Courses

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many places in higher education in Wales were available on degree courses in fine art (painting) and fine art (sculpture), respectively, in each of the years from 1979 to date; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not collected centrally. The number of places which an institution may choose to provide is decided locally according to its aims and available resources.

Homelessness

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any proposals to provide emergency accommodation for homeless people sleeping rough in Wales between December and March 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Local housing authorities are responsible for assessing housing needs within their areas. Working in partnership with other housing providers and voluntary bodies, it is for them to plan for the strategic needs of all single vulnerable homeless people and secure appropriate accommodation. The Department has already made additional resources available this year through the homelessness reserve, grants to voluntary bodies and the urban programme.

HIV and AIDS

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement as to the resources and materials available to secondary schools in Wales for teaching pupils about the dangers of HIV/AIDS infection, and how to avoid it.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Updated guidance has just been published in the booklet, "HIV and Aids: A guide for the Education Service" which will be available to all schools in Wales very shortly. A video teaching pack for 14 to 16-year-olds was also issued to schools in 1987.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the amount in cash designated for TECs in Wales, by each county, in March 1990 and March 1991.

Mr. David Hunt: There were no operational TECs in Wales in March 1990. Information on funding is not available by county. The table sets out the budgets for 1990-91 for each TEC in Wales. These budgets are for the period of TEC operation only.

TEC	Operational Start Date	1990-91 Budgets £ million
Mid Glamorgan	23 July 1990	14·9

National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many NACRO (a) training centres and (b) places there were in each of the counties of Wales in 1989 and 1990; and what were the budgets for NACRO in each of these two years.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information requested is not available.

HEALTH

Hearing Aids

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make provision to ensure that the needs of spectacle wearers are taken into account when decisions are taken on the type and design of hearing aids provided under the national health service.

Mr. Dorrell: A range of hearing aid models are already available which can be adapted in a variety of ways to meet the needs of users who also wear spectacles.

Life Insurance Proposal Forms

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has now obtained an undertaking from life insurance companies that they will no longer ask questions of proposers that have the effect of putting people off taking the HIV test.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: People who believe themselves to be at risk of HIV infection should not be deterred from having a test because of the questions asked by insurance companies. Discussions with the Association of British Insurers are continuing with the aim of finding ways in which the insurance industry can obtain the information they require for risk assessment, but which do not deter people from coming forward for testing or help.

Perinatal Mortality and Handicap

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the decline in perinatal mortality in the last 10 years for which figures are available; what is his estimate of the decline in the number of babies surviving with a significant handicap during the same period; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The rates of perinatal mortality per 1,000 total live and still births in England and Wales from 1981 to 1990 are as follows:

Year	Rate
1981	11·8
1982	11·3
1983	10·4
1984	10·1
1985	9·8
1986	9·6
1987	8·9
1988	8·7
1989	8·3
1990	8·1

We welcome the steady decline in the perinatal mortality rate over this period.

Information on the number of babies surviving with a significant handicap is not collected centrally.

North East Thames Regional Health Authority

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on waiting lists in the North East Thames regional health authority broken down by area; and what proposals there are to reduce the waiting lists.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information for each district in the region is given in the table. It is waiting time that matters and numbers of long wait patients continue to fall in North East Thames. Since March 1991, provisional figures show that the number waiting over one year in the region has fallen by 11 per cent. to 16,836 and the number waiting over two years has fallen by 16 per cent. to 5,586. North East Thames regional health authority have plans that, by March 1992, there will be no patients waiting over two years and no more than 10,800 waiting over one year for in-patient and day case treatment.

Martin House Hospice

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding was available from his Department to the Martin House hospice in Boston Spa in the years 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92; and what the sum will be for 1992-93.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Support from national health service funds was as follows:

	1989-90 £	1990-91 £	1991-92 £
From local health authorities	40,000	50,765	55,000
From a central allocation for services for the terminally ill	—	40,000	40,000
Total	40,000	90,765	95,000

Note: Arrangements for 1992-93 have yet to be decided.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will publish the estimated asset value of each of the first wave NHS trusts;

(2) whether agreement has been reached between his Department and each of the first wave NHS trusts on the value of their originating debt.

Mr. Dorrell: Health authorities and NHS trusts are responsible for agreeing the transfer of such property, rights and liabilities as are necessary for trusts to perform their functions. Agreement has now been reached in the majority of cases. We shall publish the originating capital debt for each first wave NHS trust when figures have been finalised.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost nationally of lunches and dinners provided by trust hospitals and those who have applied for trust status with general practitioners who have applied for or obtained control of their own budgets.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally.

Capital Charging

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the operation of capital charging.

Mr. Dorrell: The capital charging arrangements came into operation on 1 April 1991. For the first time, the full costs of capital in the national health service are being taken into account when setting contract prices and making decisions on use of assets.

Correspondence

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to reply to the letter dated 20 November from Nasrullah Khan Niazi of Folkestone street, Bradford 3.

Mr. Dorrell: The letter addressed to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has been transferred to the Department of Health and we shall be replying shortly.

Hospital Closures

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list by national health service region for each of the last five years (a) the number and (b) the names of national health service maternity hospitals which have been approved for closure by him;

(2) if he will list by national health service region for each of the last five years the hospitals which have been approved for closure by him and if he will list for each (a) the total number of beds involved and (b) the number of maternity beds involved.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 5 November 1991]: It has not proved possible to produce a reliable picture from the data available centrally.

RNIB Needs Survey

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration he has given to the report "Blind and Partially Sighted Adults in Britain—The RNIB Needs Survey"; what action he will be taking in relation to its findings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 12 November 1991]: The report of the RNIB survey is being considered. It provides a very useful supplement to the information contained in the surveys of disability published in 1988 by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. We anticipate that agencies in both the statutory and voluntary sectors will find it a useful additional resource in planning and developing services for blind and partially sighted people.

NHS Operations

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of operations carried out under the NHS in 1978 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 2 December 1991]: The available information is given in the table.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers' Superannuation Scheme

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the equal retirement age of 65 years for the teachers' superannuation scheme applies to female teachers for service after 5 April 1988 or for service between 1 April 1972 and 5 April 1988; and whether male and female contributor contributions to the teachers' superannuation scheme were equal during the period 1 April 1972 to 5 April 1988.

Mr. Fallon: The Teachers' Superannuation Regulations provide for retirement on the ground of age at or at any time after age 60 for both male and female teachers irrespective of the periods when they were in pensionable employment. Male and female members of the scheme have paid the same rate of ordinary contributions since 1 April 1972. These were 6·75 per cent. of contributable salary between 1 April 1972 and 1 December 1973 and 6 per cent. for the remainder of the period.

Dyslexia

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what training teachers receive in (a) recognising symptoms of dyslexia in pupils and (b) how to assist children who show symptoms of dyslexia.

Mr. Fallon: All initial teacher training—ITT—courses must include a general introduction to special educational needs issues. The Secretary of State's criteria for the approval of courses of ITT require that, on completion of their course, students should have developed the capacity to identify pupils with special educational needs or with learning difficulties; and to understand the ways in which the potential of such pupils can be developed. More extensive specialist support is available through in-service teacher training courses, some of which specialise in dyslexia.

Some of the more common teaching methods used to help dyslexic pupils learn to read include phonics, or multi-sensory techniques which involve touch and other stimuli. Such specialist teaching provision is often provided on a peripatetic basis. This minimises the disruption to the child's normal school programme which may be caused when he or she is withdrawn for extra help.

School Meals (Durham)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the results of the January 1991 school meals census for the Durham area and the 1990 statistics.

Mr. Fallon: The table shows school meals information for maintained schools within Durham local education authority, as at the census dates in January 1990 and 1991 —provisional.

Education Expenditure

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of gross national product is spent on education; and what are the comparable figures for other European countries.

Mr. Eggar: International comparisons of educational expenditure are complex, because the ways in which this expenditure is allocated to the different sectors varies both between countries and within countries over time.

The readily available information is as follows:

Fine Art Courses

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many places in higher education in England were available on degree courses in fine art (painting) and fine art (sculpture), respectively, in each of the years from 1979 to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Information is not held centrally on the number of places which, within the total resources at their disposal, institutions decide to make available.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of undergraduate places in degree courses in fine art (painting) and fine art (sculpture) were taken up by fee-paying students from overseas in each academic year since 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Information is not held centrally on the number of places which, within the total resources at their disposal, institutions divide to make available to fee-paying students from overseas.

Zidovudine

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many participants are now enrolled in the Medical Research Council/INSERM trial of zidovudine; and if he will make a statement on the progress of the trial.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The number of participants enrolled in the Medical Research Council/INSERM trial of zidovudine is 833 in the United Kingdom, 60 in the Republic of Ireland, and 848 in France. Recruitment has now closed, and the follow-up is continuing with a view to further analysis of the data in the summer of 1992.

School Examinations

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether agencies associated with publishers are eligible to tender for the development, piloting and writing of tests for 14-year-olds in history and geography at key stage 3 as advertised by the Schools Examinations Assessment Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Any competent agency may tender for this work, including agencies associated with publishers. The tests, which form part of the statutory assessment arrangements, will however be published on behalf of the Secretary of State by HMSO.

Science and Technology

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the Government will respond to the Advisory Council on Science and Technology's report "Science and Technology: Education and Employment".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government's response has now been sent to ACOST. It is being published today and copies have been placed in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Pensions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what would be (a) the first year and (b) the full year cost of raising the retirement pension by £5 per week for a single person and by £8 per week for a married person (i) in 1991-92 and (ii) 1992-93, including increases in means-tested and national insurance benefits for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the statutory instrument which links benefits to the category A basic retirement pension; and what would be (a) the first year and (b) the full year cost, net of tax, of raising by £5 per week for a single person and by £8 per week for a married person the retirement pension and (i) each linked benefit, (ii) each linked and means-tested benefit so that all of the people on linked benefits receive the increase, (iii) each of the linked benefits at the same level as the retirement pension, (iv) each of the linked benefits at the same level as the retirement pension and means-tested benefits to that all of the people on these linked benefits receive the increase, (1) for 1991-92, and (2) 1992-93, in each case including and excluding those below retirement age.

Mr. Hanley: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what would be the numbers of people affected above and below retirement age by raising by £5 per week for a single person and by £8 per week for a married person the retirement pension and (a) each benefit linked by statute to the category A basic retirement pension, (b) each linked and means-tested benefit so that all of the people on linked benefits receive the increase, (c) each of the linked benefits at the same level as the retirement pension, and (d) each of the linked benefits at the same level as the retirement pension and means-tested benefits so that all of the people on these linked benefits receive the increase, for Northern Ireland in 1991-92, listing separately the numbers on each benefit, including and excluding those below the retirement age.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 3 December 1991]: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Water Fowl

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the number of (a) herons and (b) cormorants there are in Northern Ireland or in the coastal waters of Northern Ireland; and what the figures were five and 10 years ago.

Mr. Needham: No information on the heron population in Northern Ireland is available for the years in question.

A winter survey of the cormorant carried out at main locations in 1989-90 indicated that the wintering population was at least 2,150 individuals. A full survey in 1985-86 estimated the wintering population at 2,600. Data for 1980-81 are not available.

Comprehensive figures for the breeding population of cormorant have never been collected. In 1991, however, there were 299 pairs on Sheep Island, Co. Antrim, the main colony, where in 1977 there had been 340.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the number of fish-eating ducks there are in Northern Ireland; and what the numbers were five and 10 years ago, respectively.

Mr. Needham: The only regularly occurring species of duck in Northern Ireland which is mainly fish eating is the red-breasted merganser.

The wintering population of this species in 1989-90 was estimated at 875 individuals and in 1985-86 at 845 individuals. Data for 1980-81 is not available.

No comprehensive breeding data have ever been assembled.

Maydown Incinerator

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has regarding pyrolysis experiments carried out by Du Pont on the waste to be incinerated at the proposed hazardous waste incinerator at Maydown, Londonderry to determine the products; at what temperature these experiments were carried out; and what products resulted.

Mr. Needham: The Government have no information on any such experiments.

Education Expenditure

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will review the ceiling levels imposed on secondary and grammar schools in each of the education and library boards in Northern Ireland in relation to intake numbers.

Dr. Mawhinney: Intake numbers are based on the assessed capacity of each secondary intermediate and grammar school and are reviewed only on request or when there is any change in a school's accommodation.

Fine Art Courses

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many places in higher education in Northern Ireland were available on degree courses in fine art (painting) and fine art (sculpture), respectively, in each of the years from 1979 to date; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Separate degree courses in painting and sculpture are not provided in Northern Ireland, but both subjects are included in a full-time fine art degree course at the University of Ulster. A full-time masters degree course is also available. The number of places provided is as follows

Academic Year	Primary Degree	Masters Degree

RUC

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will give the number of authorised posts and the number of posts filled in the press and public relations office of the RUC in each year since 1979;

(2) if he will give the total cost incurred by the force control and information centre of the Royal Ulster Constabulary in each year since 1979;

(3) if he will give the total amount spent by the Royal Ulster Constabulary on (a) press and public relations and (b) advertising for each year since 1979;

(4) if he will give the number of authorised posts, and the number of posts filled in the force control and information centre of the Royal Ulster Constabulary for each year since 1979.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 9 December 1991]: The RUC press office and the RUC force control centre were amalgamated on 4 October 1982 to form the force control and information centre. Press functions and other services provided by the centre are interrelated, with many of the staff performing duties relating to both functions.

Details of the number of authorised posts and of the number of posts filled, prior to 1985, are no longer available. However, since 1985, the staffing levels in the RUC force control and information centre are as follows:

1985	1,500,000
1986	1,550,000
1987	1,840,000

Details of the amount spent by the RUC on advertising are not available prior to the financial year 1987-88. However, since then the amount spent by the RUC, on advertising during the period 1987-88 to 1990-91 is as follows:

Year	Amount Spent on Advertising
1987-88	47,000
1988-89	37,000
1989-90	22,000
1990-91	49,000

SCOTLAND

Parliamentary Seats

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans there are to review the number of parliamentary seats in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to review the number of parliamentary seats in Scotland, which are set by the Parliamentary Constituencies Act 1986.

Manufacturing Output

21. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the increase in manufacturing output in Scotland since 1978.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Manufacturing output in Scotland has increased by over 11·5 per cent. in the 12 years between 1978 and 1990.

Voluntary Organisations

22. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the value of grants from his Department to voluntary organisations in each of the past three years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The value of direct grants made by the Scottish Office to voluntary organisations in each of the last three years for which figures are published are as follows:

1987-88	9,790,137
1988-89	14,771,542
1989-90	16,339,277

In addition to grants made directly, the Scottish Office gives grants to local authorities under the urban programme. Some local authorities in turn giving grants to urban programme projects involve voluntary organisations. Non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Scottish Office departments also give grants to voluntary organisations. Further details were given in answers by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and his predecessor on 16 May 1989, 11 May 1990 and 22 March 1991, columns 122-23, 254-56 and 235-36 respectively.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

23. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with Scottish Natural Heritage on the subject of sites of special scientific interest.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My officials are in regular contact with the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland and various issues relating to SSSIs are discussed.

Land Conservation

24. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to finance land conservation measures in Caithness and Sutherland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is for the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland to finance such measures as it considers appropriate from within the resources made available to it.

Constitutional Change

25. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to meet representatives of the Scottish Constitutional Convention to discuss the future government of Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend has no plans to meet the convention.

32. Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representation he has received concerning the government of Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Representations have been received on the government of Scotland covering a wide spectrum of views.

29. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received concerning the government of Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: A range of representations has been received on the government of Scotland. They put forward a wide variety of views.

New Towns

26. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the wind-up of the Scottish new towns.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Consultation on proposals to wind up East Kilbride and Glenrothes development corporations took place between September and November. The responses from the corporations and other consultees are currently under consideration, and I hope to take decisions shortly.

A92

27. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on traffic usage and accidents for each of the past five years on the A92; and if he will institute a programme for re-trunking and improving this road.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Traffic growth on the A92 between Dundee and Stonehaven is well below that for the key, strategic inter-urban trunk roads. The overall accident rate on this route has fallen by over 15 per cent. in the period between 1985 and 1990. Scotland presently has a very extensive trunk road network. Proposals for changes to the network will be considered following analysis off the findings of the major review, which is nearing completion, of the trunk and key principal road network. The A92 is however already designated as a primary route and retrunking is unlikely. It is for Tayside regional council as the roads authority to consider any upgrading or improvements necessary.

NHS Trusts

28. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last consulted chairmen of health boards in Scotland on national health service trust status.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The subject of NHS reforms, of which NHS trusts are an important part, was discussed at a meeting which I had with board chairmen on 29 November, 1991.

School Boards

30. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will carry out a review of the operation of school boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Office Education Department has continuously monitored the implementation of the school boards legislation and the operation of school boards since their establishment in 1989. My right hon. Friend proposes to issue shortly a consultation paper about the role of boards in school management and about their functions and responsibilities generally.

Heart Bypass Operations

31. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to reduce the national health service waiting lists for patients awaiting heart bypass operations in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: An additional 90 open-heart cardiac surgery operations are to be performed by Greater Glasgow health board in 1991-92. These additional operations will bring the annual number of cardiac surgery operations in Glasgow to 1,930 and to a record level of more than 3,050 in Scotland. This expansion raises total expenditure on this programme to £19·93 million. This increase in the number of operations to be performed will bring a welcome reduction in waiting times for patients.

Economic Regeneration

33. Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now take steps to regenerate the local economy of Paisley, Johnstone and Ederslie.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Government's sound fiscal policies will provide the platform for regeneration. Renfrewshire Enterprise, which has a broad remit and substantial public funding through Scottish Enterprise, is taking the lead in ensuring that the area benefits fully from investment and other development opportunities.

Emigration

34. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the net emigration of people from Scotland over the past 10 years, giving a breakdown by age groups.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Over the ten years to mid-1990, the net civilian migration loss from Scotland is estimated to have been 126,000. The annual report of the Registrar General for Scotland gives annual totals in table 01.1 and a summary age distribution in table 02.2.

Borders Economy

35. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will pay an official visit to the Borders region to discuss the future of the local regional economy with specific reference to agriculture and textiles.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I am very much aware of the problems which the economy in Borders region is experiencing, in the agricultural and textile sectors in particular. The Secretary of State and my noble Friend the Scottish Office Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries, met representatives of the Borders branches of the Scottish National Farmers Union on 24 October 1991 to hear of their concerns at first hand. In addition, I met the hon. Member and the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Launderdale (Sir D. Steel) to discuss the current state of the textile industry in the Borders on 15 October 1991. Notwithstanding the current difficulties, the economy of the region as a whole remains strong with unemployment at 5·3 per cent. which is well below the national average of 8·9 per cent. Scottish Enterprise has recently completed a review of the textile industry in Scotland with a view to developing a strategy for the industry. Scottish Borders Enterprise has established a Borders textile initiative specifically to address the difficulties being experienced by the industry in the region. Like other farmers throughout the less-favoured areas of the United Kingdom, those in the Borders benefited from a 14 per cent. increase in hill livestock compensatory allowances this year.

My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to visit Borders region.

Whisky

36. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the volume and value of Scotch whisky production for the calendar year 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Figures provided to the Scotch Whisky Association by its members indicate that for the first six months of 1991 malt whisky output amounted to some 106·4 million litres of alcohol. Grain whisky output for the same period was 110·7 million litres of alcohol. No estimates can be made of the value of that production at this stage.

AIDS

37. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the spread of AIDS in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Seventy-five new cases of AIDS were reported in Scotland between 1 January and 31 October 1991, bringing the cumulative total to 270, of whom 169 have died. The annual figures of reported AIDS cases show a rising trend from seven in 1986 to 63 in 1990. The incidence of HIV infection is also increasing. At 30 September 1991, a total of 1,906 people in Scotland had been identified and reported as HIV antibody positive. Of this number, approximately 52 per cent. had a history of injecting drug use. Twenty-six per cent. were women.

These figures demonstrate the need for continuing action to prevent the spread of HIV infection, and the AIDS task force which was set up under my chairmanship in July is considering what further measures might be taken. Since 1988-89 the Government have given additional allocations to health boards in Scotland of more than £51 million as a contribution towards the cost of measures to curb the spread of HIV infection and of providing treatment, counselling and support for those affected by HIV and AIDS.

Rail Services

38. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total amount paid to Strathclyde regional council by the Scottish Office in respect of section 20 payments for rail services in each of the past five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Payments for rail services in Strathclyde under section 20 of the Transport Act 1968 are the responsibility of the Strathclyde passenger transport executive under an agreement made with British Rail. Although payments to Strathclyde regional council are not made specifically in respect of rail services, Scottish Office support to the council through aggregate external finance takes full account of the passenger transport executive's section 20 expenditure.

Planting Grants

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recommendations were made by the relevant Forestry Commission regional advisory committee in respect of applications for planting grants to afforest at (a) Glen Lochay in 1987, (b) Inverlochlarig in 1988, (c) Glen Dye in 1990 and (d) Muirhill, by Loch Carron in 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The views of the regional advisory committees were treated as confidential at the time that the Glen Lochay and Inverlochlarig applications were considered. The regional advisory committee for north Scotland considered that the application for Glen Dye, as amended, should be approved. The regional advisory committee for mid-Scotland considered that the application for Muirhill should also be approved.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, in each case, the members of the Forestry Commission regional advisory committee which considered (a) an application for planting grants to afforest Glen Lochay in 1987, (b) an application for planting grants to afforest at Inverlochlarig in 1988, (c) an application for planting grants to afforest an area of Glen Dye in 1990 and (d) an application to afforest at Muirhill, by Loch Carron, in 1991.

Roads

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the 10 contractors who have received the largest share of motorway and trunk road construction contracts in Scotland in the last three years, giving for each contractor the total value of the contracts received.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The names of the 10 contractors and the totals of the values of the contracts awarded to them over the three years from December 1988 to November 1991 are as follows:

	£ million
Balfour Beatty	[1]61·3
Shanks McEwan (Contractors) Ltd	46·0
Tarmac Construction Scotland	[2]24·5
Morrison Construction Ltd	20·7
Nuttall-Levack Consortium	13·2

[1]Includes £27·5 million as the full contract sum for the M8 St. James' Interchange—jointly funded with Strathclyde Regional Council.

[2]This £24·5 million full contract sum was for the M80 Stepps Bypass—jointly funded with Strathclyde Regional Council.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will show total expenditure by all Scottish local highway authorities from 1980-81 to 1991-92 on (a) new construction and improvement, (b) structural maintenance and (c) current maintenance.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested, as far as it is available, is set out in the table. Expenditure by Scottish local authorities on structural road maintenance is not recorded separately but is included within new construction and improvement.

Ferries

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make representations to the European Community to ensure that the Larne to Stranraer/ Cairnryan ferry routes remain recognised ferry routes between Northern Ireland and Scotland; and if he will oppose action by the European Community to promote rail and road transport developments to make Holyhead to the Irish Republic the main sea ferry route for the island of Ireland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The European Commission's proposals for the development of a high speed rail network and a combined transport network should not be taken as implying any intention to make the port of Holyhead the main route to the island of Ireland. My right hon. Friend's joint statement with the Secretaries of State for Northern Ireland and for Transport on 2 December 1991 also made it clear that speculation that the Stranraer to Larne ferry route was under threat of downgrading, or that traffic could be discouraged from using the route as a result of the EC proposals, was without foundation. I have arranged for a copy of the joint statement to be placed in the Library of the House.

Publicity Costs

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a breakdown of the costs involved in the patients charter for (a) the initial launch and promotion, (b) the provision to each health board employee of a copy of Framework for Action and the patients charter and (c) subsequent promotional videos and other exercises within health boards concerning the patients charter and Framework for Action.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A breakdown in the form requested is not available centrally.

Fine Art Courses

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many places in higher education in Scotland were available on degree courses in fine art (painting) and fine art (sculpture) respectively in each of the years from 1979 to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not held centrally. It is for institutions to determine, in the light of demand and their overall resources, how many places on courses may be made available.

Speech Therapy

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many speech therapists are employed by the Argyl and Clyde health board; and what information he has concerning their location within the board's area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Argyll and Clyde health board currently employs 41 speech therapists. The location of these staff is as follows.

Location[1]	Whole time equivalent	Number
Royal Alexandria Hospital, Paisley	3·30	4
Merchiston Hospital	1·00	1
Inverclyde Royal Hospital, Greenock	1·00	1

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Visitors

Mr. Michael: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will increase to 48 the present limit on hon. Members' parties visiting the House of Commons admitted under one permit, while maintaining the limit of 16 on each escorted group shown round the House.

Mr. MacGregor: The present system has evolved over a number of years and allows 50 individual Members' parties in groups of up to 16 to tour the Line of Route in reasonable comfort. The effects on congestion and demand from Members would have to be carefully balanced against the advantages of any change in the present arrangements. However, I will ask the Administration Committee to consider the hon. Member's proposal.

Parliament Street (Residential Accommodation)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Lord President of the Council what residential accommodation has been provided in the new buildings in Parliament street; who occupies these; and what has been the cost.

Mr. MacGregor: In accordance with the recommendations of the Services Committee (Third Report 1983-84) five separate units of accommodation have been provided in the phase I building allocated to the Serjeant at Arms, the Deputy Serjeant at Arms, the Speaker's Secretary and two office keepers. There is also overnight accommodation for the Libary and Clerks Department. It is not possible readily to separate the cost of providing this accommodation from the total cost of the project.

The Committee took the decision to use the central section of the building for residential purposes because of its character and limited structural capacity, provided that there was a benefit to Members in terms of accommodation vacated in the Palace. When the work to convert the Serjeants' and the Speaker's Secretary's former residences is completed in the new year the House will have gained a further 32 offices for Members in the Palace.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EC Lifejacket Proposals

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out the representations his Department has made on the European Commission's lifejacket proposals.

Mr. Leigh: I take it that my hon. Friend is referring to the Community Directive on Personal Protective Equipment (89/686/EEC) which was adopted in December 1989 and which applies inter alia to lifejackets designed for continuous use rather than in emergencies only.

During the negotiations on the draft directive, my Department put forward proposals to amplify the basic safety requirements on lifejackets and buoyancy aids, which were largely accepted.

Ozone-depleting Substances

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on current policy with regard to exports of all ozone-depleting chemicals to developing countries.

Mr. Leigh: United Kingdom policy with regard to export of ozone-depleting substances is in line with the terms of the Montreal protocol, which states that exports of such substances to non-parties shall be prohibited as of 1 January 1993.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on measures he has undertaken, and any future planned activities, in assisting British industry to switch from the use of ozone-depleting substances.

Mr. Leigh: DTI, jointly with DoE, holds regular meetings with United Kingdom producers and users of ozone-depleting substances to discuss progress towards phase-out of these substances, including latest developments on replacement technologies. Other DTI activities include organising and speaking at seminars, funding research into the feasibility of alternatives, providing financial support to private sector research, and an awareness campaign targeted at all potential users of the substances.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his current policy in respect of advice to industry regarding HCFCs; and what advice has been given to industry on the toxicity of HCFC 123.

Mr. Leigh: The DTI leaflet "Protecting the Ozone Layer", advises industry that HCFCs "should be used only where necessary and recovered for re-use, recycling or proper disposal wherever possible".

Toxicity testing HCFC 123 is not yet complete. However early results give some cause for concern. Producers have therefore advised the competent authorities and user industries of potential problems, and application development is proceeding with caution.

British and Commonwealth Group

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current position of his Department's investigation into the collapse of British and Commonwealth; when the report will be completed; when the report will be published; and what use his Department has made of the investigation financed by shareholders in Atlantic.

Mr. Lilley: Inspectors were appointed on 15 June 1990 under section 432 of the Companies Act 1985 to investigate and report on the affairs of Atlantic Computers plc and Atlantic Computer Systems plc, companies in the British and Commonwealth group. The inspectors are making good progress, but I cannot say when they will complete their report; it is the general practice to publish reports by inspectors under section 432 relating to the affairs of public companies.

The inspectors are aware of the inquiries made on behalf of shareholders of British and Commonwealth and will take into account that information.

Maxwell Companies

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will commence an inquiry under the Companies Acts and Financial Services Act into (a) Bishopsgate Investment Management Ltd. and (b) London and Bishopsgate International Investment Management plc;

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that moneys belonging to (a) Mirror Group pensioners and (b) Maxwell Communication Corporation pensioners are recovered from those Gibraltar-based trusts or companies under the control or influence of the Maxwell family or companies or trusts associated with them;

(3) if he will use his powers under the Companies Acts to wind up on just and equitable grounds (a) Maxwell Communication Corporation plc and (b) Mirror Group Newspapers plc;

(4) if he will use his powers under the Companies Acts to wind up on just and equitable grounds (a) Bishopsgate Investment Management Ltd. and (b) London and Bishopsgate International Investment Management plc;

(5) if he will use his powers under the Financial Services Act to trace and recover moneys belonging to pensioners associated with (a) Mirror Group plc and (b) Maxwell Communication Corporation plc;

(6) if he will list his powers, if he will take steps, under the Companies Acts, the Insolvency Act and the Financial Services Act to secure the assets and businesses of (a)

Mirror Group Newspapers plc and (b) Maxwell Communication Corporation plc for the benefit of the pensioners of these companies;

(7) if he will use his powers under the Financial Services Act to trace moneys belonging to (a) Bishopsgate Investment Management Ltd. and (b) London and Bishopsgate International Investment Management plc and their clients.

Mr. Lilley: The Serious Fraud Office is conducting an investigation into the Maxwell companies. Action is being taken to secure and recover assets by IMRO, the provisional liquidator, administrators and receivers appointed to a number of Maxwell private companies. I have instructed my officials to maintain the closest consultation with the Serious Fraud Office and IMRO. I will also want to hear from the administrators, receivers and the provisional liquidator if they consider that the exercise of my investigative powers or other action is warranted.

I will not hesitate to use powers available to me to investigate any matter which may emerge from these consultations as requiring separate inquiry or to take any other action, so long as that would not impede the work of the Serious Fraud Office or other action which is being taken.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the directors and the financial period of the most recent accounts to be filed of (a) London and Bishopsgate International Investment Management plc and (b) Bishopsgate Investment Management Ltd.

Mr. Lilley: (a) There is currently no company registered in England and Wales with the name London and Bishopsgate International Investment Management plc. However, until 19 November 1991 that was the name of the company now known as Maxwell and East European Partners. The directors notified to the Registrar of Companies are:

Robert Henry Bunn
Stuart Crosbie Carson
Jonathan Howard Ford
Kevin Francis Herbert Maxwell
Andrew Porter Smith
Larry Steven Trachtenberg

The last accounts filed at Companies House are those for the period ending 31 December 1990.

(b) The directors of Bishopsgate Investment Management Limited notified to the Registrar of Companies are:

Trevor Cook
Ian Robert Charles Maxwell
Kevin Francis Herbert Maxwell
Henry Allen Stephens
Larry Steven Trachtenberg

The last accounts filed at Companies House are those for the financial year ending 5 April 1990.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report the names of those who currently hold directorships, or have held directorships since 1985, in companies run, managed or owned by the late Robert Maxwell; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Textiles and Clothing

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent issues affecting textiles and clothing have been discussed in the EC Council of Industry Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The Industry Council discussed a number of textiles and clothing related issues at its meeting on 18 November. These included a Commission communication on improving the competitiveness of the industries, recent developments in world trade and the Commission's latest proposals for structural assistance to areas of the Community with a heavy dependence on textiles industries.

Cumbria's Economy Report

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total cost of the consultants' report on Cumbria's economy, strategic needs and opportunities in the 1990s.

Mr. Leigh: The report was commissioned by the Northern Development Company and was co-funded by a number of other organisations, including DTI North West. The total cost was a matter between the company and the consultants. My Department contributed £5,875 towards the cost.

Textile Industry

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he intends to make to the European Community concerning French Government subsidies to the French textile industry.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 10 December 1991]: The European Commission (EC) is currently investigating one case of assistance to a French textile company. Any evidence of illegal subsidies should be referred to the EC for investigation.

Eggs

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from the producers of free-range eggs about the excess profit being made by the large supermarket companies from the sale of their eggs.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 10 December 1991]: I understand that concerns about the disparity between producer prices and retail prices have been expressed by a producer of free range eggs. The Office of Fair Trading is looking into this complaint to see whether there is anything that would suggest that the use of the Director General's competition powers would be appropriate.

EMPLOYMENT

EC Social Action Programme

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list all the directives and draft directives put forward by the European Commission, pursuant to the social action programme stating in each case (a) under which article of the treaty of Rome the directive or draft directive has been put forward, (b) whether the directive or draft directive requires unanimity or can be passed by a qualified majority and (c) whether a decision has yet been reached in relation to it by the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Jackson: The table gives the requested information for all the Social Action Programme directives identified so far. In its social action programme the Commission indicates some areas of action without specifying the type of instrument which it intends to propose. Such proposals have not been included in the table.

(In column (b) of the table: U stands for unanimity and QMV for qualified majority voting)

Citric Acid Extraction

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will ask the Health and Safety Executive to conduct an inquiry into the impact on employees of the use of aspogillus citric acid extraction plants; and if he will make a statement on current information held by his Department on any respiratory problems.

Mr. Jackson: The Health and Safety Executive's (HSE) field operations division is aware of only one plant in Great Britain where aspergillus niger is used in the manufacture of citric acid. HSE inspectors will make an inspection visit to the plant in the near future to check on compliance by the company with the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and associated legislation and review the precautions taken to safeguard the health of employees.

HSE is currently aware of respiratory problems suffered by one employee of a contracting company who was employed at the plant in 1990.

Offshore Installations

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of risers on offshore installations; and how many of them are currently fitted with sub-sea isolation valves.

Mr. Jackson: Following the introduction of the Offshore Installations (Emergency Pipeline Valve) Regulations 1989, 192 pipeline risers were identified as requiring the fitting or relocation of emergency shut down valve to comply with the regulations. These have now all been fitted.

Sub-sea isolation systems have been fitted to 40 pipelines on the seabed.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what specific additional training is being provided by the Health and Safety Executive's offshore division for inspector grade personnel who were previously in the Department of Energy's petroleum engineering division.

Mr. Jackson: Inspector grade personnel previously in the petroleum engineering division of the Department of Energy have access to the full range of existing training available to Health and Safety Executive staff, supplemented by additional training to familiarise them with HSE's operating systems and procedures, and external specialist courses.

Earnings

Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of male, female and all employees in each standard industrial classification industrial division earned less than £180 per week in 1990 and less than £200 per week in the first half year of 1991.

Mr. Jackson: The information available from the "New Earnings Survey" in April 1990 and April 1991 is provided in the tables.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Compensation Recovery Unit

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what are (a) the total running costs to date of the compensation recovery unit, (b) the original projected costs of the compensation recovery unit each year, (c) the total amount of money recovered by the compensation recovery unit to date and (d) the total amount of money the compensation recovery unit was projected to recover each year:

(2) if he will state the total cost of appeals under the compensation recovery scheme administered by the compensation recovery unit; and whether any assistance is made available to appellants under the compensation recovery scheme:

(3) how many appeals have been lodged against certificates of total benefit issued by the compensation recovery unit, what is the total number of staff employed by the compensation recovery unit, what is the number of compensation claims registered with the compensation recovery unit to date; and what is the projected number of claims to be registered with the compensation recovery unit annually.

Mr. Jack: The administration of the compensation recovery unit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member shortly and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Contributions Agency

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to retain a presence on behalf of the Contributions Agency at the Caerphilly office of his Department.

Mr. Jack: The provision of a local Contributions Agency presence is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency. She will write to the hon. Member shortly and a copy will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Child Benefit

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the (a) gross and (b) net cost of raising child benefit for all children, in real terms (i) to its 1987-88 level and (b) to its pre 1985-86 level.

Mr. Jack: Had child benefit been increased at each general uprating of benefits in line with movements in the index of retail prices, the April 1987 rate of £7·25 and November 1984 rate of £6·85 would become £9·55 and £10 respectively from April 1991.

The additional full year costs in 1991-92 of paying £9·55 per child, instead of the current rates of £9·25 for the eldest eligible child and £7·50 for each other child, would be about £685 million gross and £470 million net of normal adjustments to other benefits. The corresponding costs of paying £10 would be £970 million gross and £665 million net.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the (a) gross and (b) net cost of raising child benefit by 10p in 1992-93 and 1993-94 for all children.

Mr. Jack: It has been estimated that the extra costs in each year would be around £63 million gross and £45 million net.

Family Credit

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families were receiving family credit at the latest available date, breaking these figures down into (a) one-parent and two-parent families and (b) one-earner and two-earner families.

Mr. Jack: The provisional family credit caseload figure for the end of September 1991 is 353,000.

The latest available breakdowns on the basis requested are for the end of April 1991 and are as follows:

	Number
(a) One-parent families	131,000
Two-parent families	210,000
(b) One-earner families	325,000
Two-earner families	16,000

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families with children in receipt of housing benefit are also receiving family credit, broken down into couples and lone parents.

Miss Widdecombe: In May 1990, 56,800 families with children in Great Britain were receiving housing benefit and family credit. Of these, 37,900 were couples and 18,900 were lone parents.

Retirement Pension

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much it would cost annually to pay retirement pension from the day and date that a pensioner attains pensionable age rather then weekly from the following Monday.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Mr. Bowden) on 9 December at columns 350-51.

EC Disability Benefits

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the benefits in each member state of the European Community awarded on account of invalidity or disability which are payable without time limit in another member state once entitlement has been established; if he will indicate which of these benefits are believed to have been affected by the recent ruling of the European Court of Justice in the Newton case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Further to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State on 10 December at col. 377, the right hon. Member will find a list of long-term invalidity and disability benefits for each member state in the "MISSOC" tables contained in "Social Protection in The Member States of The European Community". These are published by the European Commission and are available in the Library. It is for the Governments of other member states to determine the implications of the Newton judgment for their benefit systems and to make known the outcome of those deliberations.

Free School Meals

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many children will lose their entitlement to free school meals under the Income Support (General) Regulations 1987 as amended by Income Support (General) Amendment (No. 4) Regulations 1991 (S.I. No. 1559/1991) and under Family Credit (General)

Regulations 1987 as amended by the Family Credit (General) Amendment Regulations 1991 (S.I. No. 1520/1991).

Miss Widdecombe: No family with children need lose their entitlement to free school meals due to these regulations. Approximately 45,000 families currently working and receiving income support will become eligible for family credit next April as a result of the change to the qualifying hours rule from 24 to 16 hours a week. They will be able to choose whether to claim family credit or to remain with income support. Those who continue to receive income support will retain their entitlement to free school meals. However, we expect around 30,000 families to move on to family credit and to be better off, even allowing for the loss of free school meals. The number of school age children in these families is approximately 35,000.

When the family credit children's rates were originally set in 1988, an amount was included in lieu of entitlement to free school meals. These rates have subsequently been uprated each year.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the operation of the cold weather payments scheme in Scotland.

Mr. Scott: The social fund cold weather payments scheme covers the whole of Great Britain. There are no differences in the way it operates in Scotland.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what advertising has been undertaken by his Department to advertise cold weather payments; and what expenditure he intends to make during the winter months on advertising the availability and criteria for these payments.

Mr. Scott: On 14 June we announced major improvements to the cold weather payments scheme which included ending the need to make a claim. All people entitled to a cold weather payment will receive it automatically. When a period of cold weather is triggered, district offices of the Benefits Agency will announce this in the local press.

The level of expenditure for the coming winter months cannot be predicted as it depends on the number and location of periods of cold weather.

Firefighting

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what special provisions are made for retained firefighters with regard to the effect of their earnings from firefighting duties on their entitlement to unemployment benefit, income support, housing benefit, community charge benefit and family credit.

Mr. Jack: All earnings from firefighting duties are disregarded in assessing the entitlement of a retained firefighter to unemployment benefit. The first £15 of such earnings are ignored in income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit, but earnings above that amount are taken into account in the normal way. In the assessment of family credit, net earnings from firefighting duties are taken into account in the same way as other earnings.

Social Fund

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many social fund inspectors were employed on 30 September;

(2) how many applications for a review by a social fund inspector were outstanding for more than one month on 30 September.

Mr. Scott: I understand from the social fund Commissioner that on 30 September 1991, there were 66 social fund inspectors employed and 2,843 review applications outstanding for more than one month.

Remunerative Work Changes

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he plans to give more information on the remunerative work changes which will come into effect in April 1992; and if he will make it his policy to circulate this information to all citizens advice bureaux.

Mr. Jack: We are planning a co-ordinated publicity package to cover both the change in the remunerative work rule in family credit and income support and the other changes which are taking place at the same time next April, particularly the introduction of disability working allowance. This publicity will start a few weeks before the changes come into force. In the meantime, I am about to write to the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux to clarify the effect of the changes in the remunerative work rule and the protection arrangements which we are providing for those on income support, and already working 16 or more hours a week, at the time of the change. I will make available a copy of this letter to the hon. Member.

Retirement Pension

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, how many pensioners each year receive their pension later than their notional birthdate arising out of the payment of pension on a Monday.

Miss Widdecombe: It is estimated that around 280,000 pensioners receive their pension on the first payday following their 60/65th birthday.

DEFENCE

Trident (Faslane)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what year he gave the first estimate for the Trident Faslane facility; what the latest estimated cost is; and what is the difference from the cost originally announced in both real and money terms.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: On 10 May 1985, the cost of the Trident-related works programme at Clyde submarine base, Faslane was first estimated at £210 million at 1984-85 prices, of which £84 million was directly attributable to Trident. The cost estimate this year for the latter element is £176 million with future costs at 1990-91 prices, but past expenditure not revalued. A precise comparison between figures is not possible without disproportionate effort and cost.

Defence Properties

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many residential properties owned by his Department are in the Eltham contituency; and what is the current percentage rate of occupation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 30 September 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, the Ministry of Defence owned 71 residential properties in the Eltham constituency, all of which were occupied. In addition, nine properties were in the process of being sold.

Eltham Palace

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make a statement on the future use of Eltham palace.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I do not expect to be able to make a statement before the end of April 1992.

Fleet Tenders

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the fleet tenders HMS Manly, HMS Milbrook and HMS Mentor have been decommissioned; and what vessels will henceforth be available for seamanship training at HMS Raleigh.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The three fleet tenders at HMS Raleigh provided training in replenishment at sea—RAS—which in future will be provided more cost-effectively by a shore-based type 23 RAS rig. HMS Raleigh will continue to have a substantial number of small craft to provide new entrants with the basic sea-going experience formerly provided by the tenders.

Defence Cuts

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will postpone the planned defence cuts in the light of the events now taking place in eastern Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Household Division

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what approaches he has received from the British Tourist Authority concerning the effect of the proposed cut in the strength of the Household Division on earnings from pageantry in London.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am not aware of any.

Chemical and Biological Warfare

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now review his policy regarding the release of information on Britain's chemical and biological defence research programme.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have no plans to review the policy regarding the release of information from chemical and biological research records, which is governed by the provisions of the Public Records Acts 1958 and 1967.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what documents the British Government presented to the third review conference of the biological and toxin weapons convention.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The British Government presented two documents to the third review conference of the biological and toxin weapons convention—BTWC: a document on United Kingdom compliance with the provisions of the BTWC and a document on new scientific and technological developments relevant to the convention. I am making arrangements for copies of these two documents to be placed in the Library.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the document entitled, "Transparency Mechanisms for the Canadian Chemical and Biological Defence Program" presented to the third review conference of the biological and toxin weapons convention.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will establish an independent advisory committee to review Britain's chemical and biological defence research programme.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Defence Scientific Advisory Council provides independent advice to the Secretary of State for Defence on scientific and techological matters of concern to the Ministry of Defence. The council has established the Chemical and Biological Defence Board which together with its committees reviews Britain's chemical and biological defence research programme.

Pugwash Group

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards staff in his Department participating in meetings and conferences held by the Pugwash group on science and world affairs.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Staff in my Department invited to attend meetings and conferences organised by the Pugwash group accept if the subject is relevant to departmental work and time to attend is available.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 12 December 1991

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Courts (Sunday Working)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General whether he has any proposals to have the law courts work on Sundays to expedite cases.

The Attorney-General: The Government have no plans for the courts to open on Sundays.

Radioactive Substances

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects to publish the radioactive substances consolidation Bill.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor intends to introduce a Bill to consolidate the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 (as amended) on 16 December 1991. It is expected that the Bill will be published shortly afterwards.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Maxwell Companies (Pension Funds)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will seek the removal of the current trustees of (a) the Mirror Group pension fund and (b) the Maxwell Communication Corporation pension fund and their replacement by independent trustees.

Mr. Maude: The removal or appointment of trustees is a matter for determination under the trust deeds of the pension schemes in question.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the financial period of the most recent accounts of the pension funds of Mirror Group Newspapers plc and Maxwell Communication Corporation plc filed with the superannuations fund office of the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Maude: Information about the tax affairs of particular taxpayers is confidential.

Volunteer Drivers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will reconsider the 4,000 mile threshold on his proposed taxation of voluntary drivers' mileage allowance in rural areas.

Mr. Maude: The position in law is that motor mileage allowances paid to individuals, whether employees or volunteer drivers, are liable to tax, but tax is payable only to the extent that the allowances exceed the costs of running and maintaining a car for work or for voluntary driving and so result in a profit.

When working out these costs, volunteer drivers may use simplified administrative arrangements which are known as the fixed profit car scheme and are also available to employees. Under these arrangements "tax-free" rates, calculated by the Inland Revenue to reflect typical costs of running and maintaining a car for different engine sizes and different annual mileages, can be set against motor mileage allowances in order to calculate the taxable profit element.

There are different "tax-free" rates above and below 4,000 miles. The breakpoint ensures that standing costs—such as road tax, insurance and depreciation—are properly spread over the total mileage driven (both private and non-private) and that the tax relief is confined to the non-private proportion of motoring costs.

If volunteer drivers consider that the "tax-free" rates do not fully reflect their tax allowable motoring costs, they can keep detailed records of actual motoring expenses incurred, and private and voluntary driving, in order to make a claim based on their actual expenses.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his assessment of the implications of his proposed voluntary drivers' mileage allowance for volunteer bureau transport services.

Mr. Maude: The position in law is that motor mileage allowances paid to individuals, whether employees or volunteer drivers, are liable to tax to the extent that they exceed the costs of running and maintaining a car for work or for voluntary driving and so result in a profit.

I am aware that concern has been expressed about the possible impact on the availability of volunteer drivers of the arrangements which have recently been introduced for taxing motor mileage allowances paid to volunteers. In response to that concern, it has been decided to phase in the introduction of the new arrangements. For the period from 6 October 1991 to 5 April 1993 one quarter of the net profit will be taxed; for the tax year 1993-94 one half of the net profit will be taxed; for the tax year 1994-95 three quarters of the net profit will be taxed. Tax will not be payable on the full profit element until 1995-96.

I hope that the phasing in of the charge to tax will meet the concern which has been expressed.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will raise the threshold of the exemption from taxation of the volunteer drivers' mileage allowance.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 11 December 1991]: The position in law is that motor mileage allowances paid to individuals, whether employees or volunteer drivers, are liable to tax to the extent that they exceed the costs of running and maintaining a car for work or for voluntary driving and so result in a profit.

When working out these costs, volunteer drivers may use simplified administrative arrangements available for employees (known as the fixed profit car scheme) under which "tax-free" rates calculated by the Inland Revenue to reflect typical costs of running and maintaining a car for different engine sizes and different annual mileages can be set against motor mileage allowances in order to calculate the taxable profit element. These arrangments are an alternative to keeping detailed records of actual motoring expenses incurred, and private and voluntary driving, and making a claim based on actual expenses.

As the hon. Member may be aware, it has been decided to phase in the introduction of the arrangments for collecting tax on allowances paid to volunteers. For the period from 6 October 1991 to 5 April 1993, one quarter of the net profit will be taxed; for the tax year 1993-94 one half of the net profit will be taxed; for the tax year 1994-95 three quarters of the net profit will be taxed. Tax will not be payable on the full profit element until 1995-96.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the volunteer drivers' mileage allowance.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 11 December 1991]: I have received a number of representations from organisations and individuals following the Inland Revenue's introduction of arrangements for collecting any income tax which may be due on motor mileage allowances paid to volunteer drivers. The representations have expressed concern about the possible impact of the new arrangements on volunteers' willingness to continue driving.

In replying to these representations, I have pointed out that tax is chargeable only if the allowances exceed the costs of running and maintaining a car for voluntary driving and so result in a profit; and that it has been decided to phase in the new arrangements gradually over a period.

I am very much aware of the important and valuable service these drivers provide, and hope that the phasing-in arrangements will meet the concern that has been expressed.

Voluntary Tax Contributions

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people sent voluntary extra tax contributions to the Treasury last year; what was the total amount of such contributions; and what the corresponding totals were (a) five years and (b) 10 years ago.

Mr. Maude: The number and amounts of voluntary extra tax contributions received by the Inland Revenue were as follows:

	Number	Total amount (£)
31 October 1981	90	129,334·98
31 October 1986	87	27,356·45
31 October 1991	53	147,012·95

Council Tax

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the level of charges per property by the private sector for the purposes of council tax valuation.

Mr. Maude: Following a competitive tendering exercise, the successful tenders by the private sector produce an average price of £1·58 per domestic property for the valuation bandings for the council tax.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a list of all those organisations which have been authorised to undertake council tax valuations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: As a result of a competitive tendering exercise for the award of contracts for the valuation banding of domestic properties in England and Wales ready for the introduction of the new council tax on 1 April 1993, 512 contracts have now been awarded to 337 private sector firms covering some 12 million properties divided between 1,052 geographical lots. The Valuation Office Agency will undertake the valuation banding of the remaining 9 million properties.

The total value of the contracts placed is £19·1 million. This represents excellent value for money for the Government and enables the work to commence on this straight away.

A list of the successful firms will be placed in the Library.

Early Retirement

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current position with regard to the taxation of local authority enhancements of voluntary early retirement schemes; when the position was last changed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Payments under the Local Government (Compensation for Premature Retirement) Regulations 1982 are, for tax purposes, regarded as compensation for loss of office. They qualify under the "golden handshake" rules for exemption from tax on the first £30,000. Regular payments made as additions to pensions are chargeable to income tax on the full amount. This tax treatment has not changed since the regulations were introduced. Different rules might apply to payments under other retirement arrangements.

Car Tax

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the present United Kingdom special car tax will be payable from 1 January 1993 on a car purchased and imported directly into the United Kingdom from another EC country.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: From 1 Janury 1993, car tax will be payable, as at present, on chargeable vehicles obtained in the EC and brought permanently into the United Kingdom.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish tables showing, for each year from 1989-90 to date, identifiable Government expenditure by function in England, Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland and the United Kingdom, expressed (a) in cash terms, (b) as a percentage of the United Kingdom total identifiable general Government expenditure, (c) as an amount per capita and (d) as an amount per capita expressed as an index, United Kingdom identifiable general Government expenditure = 100.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 11 December 1991]: Information on identifiable general Government expenditure by function and territory in 1989-90 is given in tables E5a and E5b of the statistical supplement to the 1990 autumn statement (Cm. 1520). Information for 1990-91 and updated figures for 1989-90 will be published in the statistical supplement to the 1991 autumn statement, which is scheduled for publication at the end of January.

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax relief goes on mortgage tax relief (a) at basic rate and (b) in excess of the basic rate in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 11 December 1991]: The latest estimates are in the table. The estimate for 1991-92 is based on the standard assumption that interest rates remain at their current levels for the rest of 1991-92.

	Cost of mortgage interest relief (£ billion)
	1990-91	1991-92
At the basic rate	7·2	6·1
In excess of the basic rate	0·5	—
Total	7·7	6·1

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many individuals in Scotland are currently receiving mortgage interest relief;

(2) if he will provide estimates of the regional distribution of mortgagors and mortgage interest relief in each year from 1988 to date;

(2) what is the current cost to the Exchequer of paying mortgage interest relief in Scotland.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 11 December 1991]: Broad estimates based on the regional distribution of mortgage interest relief, from an analysis of the family expenditure surveys for the years 1988, 1989 and 1990, are shown in the table:

Mortgage Interest Relief

Region	1988-89		1989-90		1990-91[1]		1991-92[1,2]

PRIME MINISTER

East Timor

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what steps have been taken by Her Majesty's Government to ensure the enforcement upon the Indonesian Government of resolutions 384 and 389 of the United Nations on the Indonesian invasion of East Timor.

The Prime Minister: Since 1982, the United Kingdom has supported the UN Secretary-General in his efforts to promote contacts between Indonesia and Portugal to reach a settlement satisfactory to both sides, as called for in a resolution of that year's UN General Assembly.

Arms Control

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will seek to initiate with President Bush an emergency meeting of the two remaining depository states of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty to discuss the status of commitments made to the treaty by the Government of the former Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, following the declaration of an independent commonwealth of slavic states by the leadership of the Ukrainian, Byelorussian and Russian republics on 8 December.

The Prime Minister: We have already had discussions with the United States and our other NATO allies about the Soviet Union's commitments and obligation under all international treaties including NPT. I also discussed it with President Mitterrand at the European Council and NATO Foreign Ministers will discuss the matter on 19 December. We have made it clear to the republics that their readiness to honour such commitments will be a major factor in developing our relations with them.

Prime Minister's Office (Report)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to publish a report on the operations of the Prime Minister's Office.

The Prime Minister: None.

Iraq (Petrochemical Programme)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister when Her Majesty's Government first learned of the petrochemical-3 (PC-3) programme in Iraq; and what steps were taken to establish the extent of involvement by United Kingdom companies or organisations in that PC-3 programme.

The Prime Minister: We first learned of the PC3 programme in Iraq at the time the UN inspections were starting.

We have asked the UN special commission and the IAEA to let us have details of any evidence of involvement by British companies in Iraq's weapons of mass destruction programmes which may come to their attention. Any indication of wrongdoing will be urgently investigated. If strategic export controls have been breached, it will be a matter for the courts.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 12 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

HEALTH

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for the six-month period April to September 1987 and for each subsequent six-month period, (a) the numbers of people admitted from waiting lists to hospital for in-patient treatment, (b) the numbers of people removed from in-patient waiting lists for reasons other than treatment, (c) the numbers of people admitted from waiting lists for day case treatment and (d) the numbers of people removed from day case waiting lists for reasons other than treatment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information available centrally is given in the table. Total admissions from waiting lists have increased by more than 6 per cent. since March 1988.

It is important that health authorities actively manage their waiting lists to ensure that these contain only the names of people who need and want treatment. The regular validation of lists is now accepted management practice. People may come off waiting lists for reasons other than treatment if, for example, they have moved away, responded to an alternative treatment regime or have repeatedly not turned up or not replied to letters inviting them to get in touch with the hospital.

Executive Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the new forms of alternative working patterns introduced into each of his Department's executive agencies since their establishment and give a breakdown by grade of the numbers of staff taking up each new working pattern for each new agency;

(2) if he will list the post, grade and maximum salary payable, including performance-related element in each case where appointments from the private sector have been made to his Department's executive agencies at grade 7 or above since their establishment;

(3) when the last annual report for each of his Department's executive agencies was published; and when the next one is due;

(4) whether a group bonus scheme is in operation in each of his Department's executive agencies;

(5) if he will list those new facilities for staff nurseries and health care schemes which have been introduced in each of his Department's executive agencies since their establishment;

(6) how many staff were in post on the date that each of his Department's executive agencies were established; and how many staff are in post now, in each case;

(7) how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of each of his Department's executive agencies; and whether the cost was borne by the parent Department or the new agency.

Mr. Dorrell: These are matters for the chief executives of the NHS Estate Management and Health Building Agency and the Medicines Control Agency. I have asked them to write to the hon. Member direct.

Schizophrenia

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of the level of staffing required to meet the needs of schizophrenic patients within the community care programme.

Mr. Dorrell: It is for individual health and local authorities to determine their own manpower levels and requirements. In drawing up their community care plans, health and local authorities should agree a local framework for ensuring the availability of services and also the resources each authority will provide to obtain such services.

Hospitals (Parking)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which regions routinely charge for parking at hospitals.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally.

Dead Foetuses (Disposal)

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice is given to hospital authorities about the disposal of dead foetuses; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The NHS management executive will be issuing an executive letter to all general managers and chief executives in the NHS about the disposal of dead foetuses. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

Some hospitals are known to deal with these matters with understanding and sensitivity. The Government want all hospitals to apply standards of good practice, acceptable both to those personally involved, such as the parents, and to the hospital staff.

The ethical position guiding the Government's thinking is the acknowledgement that there is a respect due to the dead foetus which is based upon its lost potential for development into a fully formed human being. That respect is due no matter what the circumstances of loss —stillbirth, miscarriage or termination of pregnancy. That respect needs to be reflected, as far as is practicable, in the arrangements for the disposal of the dead foetus.

The NHS management executive will be asking hospital managers to satisfy themselves that current arrangements are acceptable. It is important that, as far as possible, account is taken of any personal wishes which have been expressed about disposal. Subject to that, incineration of the dead foetus is the usual method of disposal.

Where no special arrangements are called for, it will, in any event, be a basic requirement that separate containers are used for foetal tissue, and that the containers are delivered to the incinerator separately from any other material requiring incineration and are separately loaded into the incinerator.

Some concern has been expressed about the position of ancillary staff in relation to the handling of foetuses and foetal tissue following the termination of pregnancy. Such staff are not covered by the provisions of section 4 of the Abortion Act 1967—the "conscience clause"—which acknowledges conscientious objection to participation in treatment authorised by the Act. However, the Government believe that hospital managers will wish to ensure that the same principle is applied to any ancillary staff who express a conscientious objection to the handling of foetuses or foetal material. The issues covered in this statement will form the basis of the executive letter to general managers and chief executives. Copies will also go to relevant private hospitals.

National Disability Information Project

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the pilot sites selected for the national disability information project, the project team selected to manage the project, and the membership of the steering group.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Since the announcement of the national disability information project on 25 March 1991, Official Report, Volume 188, column 325, there has been considerable public interest in the project.

During June and July, applications were sought from groups of local disability information providers to become pilot sites for the project, to develop ways of improving information services to people with disabilities, their carers and service providers. Over 600 application packs were sent out, and 101 applications returned. The standard of applications was very high. The following 12 sites have been selected as representative of a range of approaches to developing information services and will take this work forward over the next three years:

Berkshire Disability Information Group
Birmingham Information Federation
Devon Disablement Information and Advice Federation
East Yorkshire Information Service
Gateshead Disability Information Project
Gloucestershire—GUIDE
Kent Information Federation
Manchester Disability Information Service
Norfolk Disability Information Federation
Oldham Disability Alliance
The Southwark Disability Information Project
Walsall Information Federation

Tenders for the role of the project team to manage and co-ordinate the project were invited from nine organisations and the Policy Studies Institute was selected to perform this function.

A steering group, chaired by the Department of Health, has also been set up to provide general oversight and direction to the project. The non-departmental members of the steering group are:

Dr. R. Blunden—Programme Director, Community Living Development Team, King's Fund Centre for Health Services Development.

Mr. J. Evans—Former Chair of the British Council of Organisations of Disabled People.

Mr. P. Ferns—Training Consultant, specialising in equality of opportunity.

Ms. S. Haffenden—Barking and Havering Family Health Services Authority, with project experience with Carers National Association.

Mr. M. Laverman—Director of Social Services, Cleveland.

Mrs. S. Richards—Chairman, College of Occupational Therapists.

Mrs. D. Twitchin—Director of Living Options in Practice.

Dr. T. Vincent, MBE—The Open University, Deputy Director and Head of the Centre for Information Technology in Education.

Medical Radiation

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is his estimate of the amount of damage to patients, and the number affected, that has occurred as a result of excessive medical radiation;

(2) if he will conduct an inquiry into the amount of radiation hospitals are giving their patients by X-rays;

(3) if he will make it his policy to identify hospitals which, according to the National Radiological Protection Board, might be giving their patients too much radiation.

Mr. Dorrell: No current estimates are available; the figures mentioned in the National Radiological Protection Board/Royal College of Radiologists report "Patient Dose Reduction in Diagnostic Radiology", a copy of which is available in the Library, are based on data from 1983, and since then, the more widespread adoption of rare earth screens, where appropriate, will have reduced the amount of medical radiation that patients receive when undergoing diagnostic examinations. The Department of Health is currently funding a project with the National Radiological Protection Board which will provide an up-to-date benchmark which can then be updated on a yearly basis.

In the survey of radiation doses to patients undertaken by the National Radiological Protection Board, the 1983 data from hospitals were anonymised. It would be misleading to publish data on individual hospitals without detailed information on the type of examinations carried out, case mix and so on.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he intends to take any steps to minimise radiation exposure from X-rays;

(2) if there are any constraints on doctors exercising clinical judgment when ordering X-rays for patients; and if any changes are being considered.

Mr. Dorrell: The Ionising Radiation (Protection of Persons undergoing Medical Examination or Treatment) Regulations 1988 lay down that all medical exposures that take place using ionising radiation must be conducted under the responsibility of a person clinically directing, in accordance with accepted clinical practice, and with procedures to ensure a dose as low as reasonably practicable. An inspectorate has been set up within the Department of Health to enforce these regulations.

A range of advice is available to help clinicians fulfil their obligations including the National Radiological Protection Board/Royal College of Radiologists report "Patient Dose Reduction in Diagnostic Radiology", issued in 1990, and the recently issued health service guidelines from the medical devices directorate entitled "Patient Dose Reduction". These guidelines give advice to health authorities on the purchase of equipment for diagnostic X-ray examinations, with particular emphasis on the equipment aspects of minimising radiation exposure from X-rays. Copies of the guidelines are available in the Library.

The Department of Health and the King's Fund have been funding a project to evaluate the Royal College of Radiologists' guidelines on "Making the best use of a Department of Radiology" and the final report is due at the end of January 1992. This project assesses the guidelines necessary to assist clinicians in deciding the appropriateness of X-ray examinations to be ordered for their patients.

Finally at local level radiologists in charge of X-ray departments set out protocols for their departments to determine when an X-ray examination is appropriate following an X-ray request from their clinical colleagues.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he last discussed safe medical radiation levels with the National Radiological Protection Board; and if any changes in medical practice have been, or are to be, recommended;

(2) what discussions he has had with the Royal College of Radiologists; and if any changes in medical practice have been, or are to be, recommended.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department of Health has an observer at board meetings of the National Radiological Protection Board and is fully aware of the board's views on the establishment of accepted normal values for the dose involved in diagnostic X-ray examinations. Regular liaison meetings are held between the Royal College of Radiologists and the Department of Health. The NRPB and RCR advice on changes in medical practice is set out in the recommendations of their joint report "Patient Dose Reduction in Diagnostic Radiology", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Resource Allocation Working Party

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the new system which he intends to introduce to replace the existing resource allocation working party formula.

Mr. Dorrell: Revenue and capital allocations to health authorities were based on the recommendations of the resource allocation working party until 1989. The White Paper "Working for Patients" (Cm. 555, January 1989) proposed an allocation method based on the size of a health authority's resident population, weighted to reflect that population's health and age distribution, and the relative costs of providing health services for it. The process of phasing in the new allocation system for regional health authorities began in 1990, and for district health authorities in 1991.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how close the Thames regional health authorities were to achieving their resource allocation working party target in the last financial year.

Mr. Dorrell: The use of resource allocation working party targets was discontinued in 1990, when weighted capitation funding was introduced. Consequently, no RAWP targets for the Thames regional health authorities are available for the last financial year.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has had concerning the Medicines Control Agency's proposal to increase licence fees and service charges for the year 1992.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None to date. The consultation period ends on 17 January 1992.

ENVIRONMENT

Right to Buy

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many dwellings were owned by each district council in Cumbria at the time that the right to buy was introduced; how many are owned at the latest convenient date; and what percentage that is of the original figure.

Sir George Young: The information available from local authorities' annual housing investment programme returns is as follows:

Number of dwellings owned by the authority at 1 April

	1980	1991	1991 as percentage of 1980
Allerdale	6,742	5,550	82
Barrow-in-Furness	5,240	3,958	76
Carlisle	13,863	9,897	71
Copeland	7,827	5,094	65
Eden	3,077	2,038	66
South Lakeland	6,821	4,749	70

Right to buy was introduced in October 1980. Changes in local authorities' dwelling stocks will reflect gains from new building and other acquisitions, sales other than through the right to buy and other losses.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what target the London Docklands development corporation has for reducing unemployment in the urban development area and in the three London docklands boroughs.

Mr. Key: The corporation has no targets for reducing unemployment but seeks to reduce local unemployment by improving the skills of local residents. New jobs created by the corporation will benefit those living both in the UDA and in the three London boroughs.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the numbers of unemployed people in the urban development area and the three London docklands boroughs when the London Docklands development corporation was set up; and what are they now.

Mr. Key: There are no official figures for the urban development area as a separate area. The corporation estimates that there are about 4,500 unemployed people in the urban development area compared to 3,500 in 1981. However, there has been a fall in the rate of unemployment from 17·8 per cent. to 13·7 per cent. in the same period. Official figures for the three boroughs as a whole are 49,712 and 36,085 respectively.

Dangerous Compounds

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the United Kingdom red list of dangerous compounds.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom's "red list" of dangerous substances comprises the following:

Mercury and its compounds
Cadmium and its compounds
Gamma-Hexachlorocyclohexane
DDT
Pentachlorophenol and its compounds
Hexachlorobenzene
Hexachlorobutadiene
Aldrin
Dieldrin
Endrin
Polychlorinated Biphenyls
Dichlorvos
1, 2-Dichloroethane
Trichlorobenzene
Atrazine
Simazine
Tributyltin compounds
Triphenyltin compounds
Trifluralin
Fenitrothion
Azinphos-methyl
Malathion
Endosulfan

Cryptosporidium

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he intends to take as a result of the findings of the drinking water inspectorate's report on the outbreak of cryptosporidium in North Humberside.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry), on 20 November 1991 to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, West (Mr. Randall), Official Report, column 161.

Reading Borough Council

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about rents, mortgage repayments and mortgage interest receivable by Reading borough council and about arrears in the collection of these.

Sir George Young: Information about local authority rental income, interest on loans granted and rent arrears is collected on housing revenue account subsidy claim forms submitted by local authorities to the Department. For 1991-92 Reading borough council's claim form shows the following estimates:

income from rents and charges in respect of Housing Revenue Account dwellings, £12,258,726; interest receivable for 1991-92 on loans granted in respect of former HRA dwellings, £811,667; arrears of rents owed by current tenants as at end of last collection period for 1991-92, £920,000;
arrears of rents owed by former tenants as at end of the last collection period of 1991-92, £100,000.

The Department does not collect information about mortgage repayments receivable by individual local authorities, arrears of these, nor arrears of mortgage interest.

HIP Allocations (Durham)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the housing investment programme allocations for the City of Durham in each year since 1979 in actual terms and at 1991 prices.

Mr. Yeo: Since 1981-82, authorities have been able to augment the borrowing power of their HIP allocations by using the prescribed proportion of their capital receipts. The HIP allocations made to Durham city council, and its total capital expenditure on housing, have been as follows:

£ thousands

	HIP allocation		Gross expenditure

[1] For 1990-91 and 1991-92, under the new capital finance system, the HIP allocation does not convey borrowing approval directly.

[2] The figure shown here is not final. Additional supplementary credit approvals are expected to be issued in the course of the year.

Local Government Finance

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each district authority in Northamptonshire the total discounted value of houses and flats for each year since 1980-81.

Mr. Yeo: The total discounted value of dwellings sold by local authorities in Northamptonshire is given in the table. Actual cash receipts in any year will depend on the extent to which sales were financed by loans from the authorities.

Climate Change

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will include information provided by the George Marshall Institute in its preparation for the United Nations conference on environment and development.

Mr. Baldry: The reports of the George C Marshall Institute are being considered, along with all other recent relevant information, by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change in preparing a supplementary science assessment report for the intergovernmental negotiating committee on a climate convention. This information will support the INC in preparing for the United Nations conference on environment and development. My Department will continue to look to IPCC as the source of widely reviewed information on the science of climate change.

CITES

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on whether the EC CITES committee ban on imports of various C2 species is being observed in other EC nations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: None. The implementation of Community decisions in other member states is a matter for the European Commission to pursue. If we received evidence that decisions were not being implemented, we would bring this to the attention of the Commission.

Local Government Expenditure (Northamptonshire)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out in tabular form the expenditure of (a) Northamptonshire county council, (b) Corby district council and (c) East Northants district council in 1978-79 and 1991-92 in (i) cash terms and (ii) constant price terms.

Mr. Key: The available information is as follows:

	Total expenditure outturn 1980-81		Net revenue expenditure budget estimate 1991-92
	Cash £ million	1991-92 prices £ million	£ million
Northamptonshire CC	139·7	274·4	347·9
Corby DC	3·1	6·1	5·4
East Northants DC	1·4	2·7	2·9

Note: 1980-81 is the earliest year for which expenditure figures are available. Although similar total Expenditure and Net Revenue Expenditure are not directly comparable as they derive from two different financial systems.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many successful prosecutions have been made since 1974 for breaches of waste disposal licences not directly connected with the deposit or treatment of waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: By the end of 1989, there had been a total of 897 prosecutions under sections 3 and 6 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 which may involve breach of a waste disposal licence. More detailed information about the precise nature of the offences is not held centrally.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if all waste disposal sites in the United Kingdom currently meet both the 1975 EC waste directive and 1978 EC toxic and dangerous waste directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: These directives require, inter alia, site-specific permits for the disposal of controlled waste and consignment notes for the movement of dangerous or difficult waste. They have been implemented in Great Britain by the Control of Pollution Act 1974, the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980, the Environmental Protection Act 1990, the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988, the Environmental Assessment (Scotland) Regulations 1988, the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 and the Town and Country Planning Act (Scotland) 1972.

In Northern Ireland, they have been implemented by the Pollution Control and Local Government (Northern Ireland) Order 1978, the Pollution Control (Special Waste) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1981, the Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations (NI) 1989 and the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991.

Business Rates

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ensure that landlords of houses in multiple occupation do not become liable to pay business rates on the property unless a legitimate business is run from the property.

Mr. Key: Rates are a tax on the occupation of non-domestic property and, in general, it is the occupier who is liable, not the owner or landlord. Living accommodation, whether it is part of a house in multiple occupation or not, is not rateable unless its use for non-domestic purposes is such that it would preclude the domestic use of all or part of it. In the first instance it is for the Inland Revenue valuation office to decide whether a property should be included in non-domestic rating lists.

Radiation

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will calculate the changes made in the last five years in the officially estimated maximum amount of radiation which may be safely received from routine discharges from the nuclear power industry.

Mr. Baldry: The International Commission on Radiological Protection recommendation of 1977, as endorsed by the National Radiological Protection Board, advised that the average effective dose equivalent from all sources, excluding natural background radiation and medical procedures, to representative members of a critical group should not exceed 1 millisievert (mSv) in any one year. The National Radiological Protection Board in 1987 gave interim guidance that for exposure of the public arising from a single site, the effective dose equivalent should not exceed 0·5 mSv per year. The United Kingdom Government had, as stated in the White Paper Cmnd 9852 (1986), already adopted a 0·5 mSv per year level as a target in connection with authorised discharge limits. The Government are considering the consultative document "NRPB-M321, Board advise following publication of the 1990 recommendations of ICRP", issued today by the National Radiological Protection Board which recommends a reduction to 0·3 mSv.

Sports Clubs (Rate Relief)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost in 1990-91 of the 75 per cent. offset from the national non-domestic pool consequent to the granting of discretionary rate relief to voluntary sports clubs, indicated in his survey into charging authorities' use of discretionary rate relief under section 47 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988.

Mr. Key: This information is not available.

Green Alliance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received a copy of the report, "Greening Government: The Failure of the Departmental Annual Reports to Reflect Integrated Policy Making", prepared by the Green Alliance; and if he has made any public response to its conclusions.

Mr. Trippier: I received a copy under cover of a letter from the Green Alliance dated 25 November. The Times published my reply to its coverage of the report on 27 November. Officials from a number of Departments, including my own, are meeting the Green Alliance on 13 December to discuss the report's recommendations.

Radioactive Substances

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of his recent review of exemption orders in so far as they affect radioactive substances.

Mr. Baldry: Exemption orders made under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 are kept under regular review. New or amending orders are introduced when there is a justifiable case for doing so.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on how the application of duty of care waste management responsibilities affect radioactive waste management for small users of radioactive materials; and what consultations have been held with Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution over this matter during the past six months.

Mr. Baldry: The law relating to the duty of care as concerns waste which is set out in section 34 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 does not apply to radioactive waste. The keeping, use, accumulation and disposal of radioactive material and waste is regulated by the chief inspector of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution by means of certificates of registration and authorisation issued under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. HMIP is part of my Department, and staff consult each other as necessary.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the criteria adopted for setting radioactive distance limits for radioactive waste repositories.

Mr. Baldry: The broad criteria on which the authorisation of radioactive waste repositories under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 will be based are set out in a publication issued by the United Kingdom authorising Departments in 1984 entitled "Disposal Facilities on Land for Low and Intermediate Level Radioactive Wastes: Principles for the Protection of the Human Environment". A copy is in the Library.

Detailed matters relating to the radiological impact of specific facilities will depend on the circumstances of the individual applications received.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to establish a body to oversee the integrated management and disposal of high-level, heat-generating, radioactive waste along the lines of the role undertaken by United Kingdom Nirex Ltd. for other levels of radioactive waste.

Mr. Baldry: There are no such plans. High-level or heat-generating radioactive waste will be stored for a period of at least 50 years to allow the heat and radioactivity to diminish before a decision is taken on its disposal.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to the 12th report of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the Department of the Environment news release dated 15 November 1991 which set out the response of my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside to the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee's 12th annual report. Copies of the news release are in the Library.

Council Tax

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish his estimates of the likely council tax bill for band H properties in each local authority area.

Mr. Portillo: I have made no estimate of likely council tax bills. Illustrative figures showing the levels of council tax bills consistent with 1991-92 local authority budgets were published on 23 April 1991. The bill for a band H property will be three times that for a band A property.

Government Land

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the present arrangements for offering back to former owners Government land earmarked for disposal.

Sir George Young: The arrangements have recently been reviewed in the light of developments since the present "Crichel Down" rules were adopted in December 1981. Our conclusion is that the broad principles should be maintained, but certain limited changes in their application would now be appropriate. I have today issued a consultation paper setting out our detailed proposals for change.

Development Rights

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce the outcome of the consultation on permitted development rights (i) for fish farming and (ii) for smaller agricultural holdings.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales issued consultation papers inviting views on possible changes to planning controls over fish farming and on the implementation of new planning controls over agricultural and forestry buildings on 22 July and 24 September. We are grateful to the many bodies and individuals who responded. Lists of their submissions are being placed in the Library of the House, where copies will be available on request.

The fish farming consultation paper, which was directed at fish farming inland and excluded marine fish farming, stated that the Government's aim is to align planning controls over fish farms as closely as possible with planning controls over other forms of agriculture. It proposed to: (i) withdraw all permitted development rights for fish farming on agricultural units of less than 5 hectares, and on parcels of agricultural land of less than 1 hectare on larger units; (ii) withdraw the right of registered fish farm businesses to remove minerals from smaller sites; and (iii) make the new permitted development rights already announced for floating fish tanks (cages) outside the national parks subject to the prior notification scheme being introduced for farm buildings.

The Government have decided to implement these changes with one modification, and amendments to the General Development Order have been laid before Parliament today. Certain limited rights will be retained in connection with fish farming on smaller units, in line with our proposals for smaller agricultural holdings. At the same time, section 14 of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 will also be brought into effect on 2 January 1992 extending planning controls over fish tanks (cages) in inland waters; and the GDO will be changed to implement decisions already announced to withdraw permitted development rights for fish farm excavations and engineering operations in national parks, introduce permitted development rights for fish tanks (cages) in inland waters outside national parks, and require local planning authorities to consult the National Rivers Authority when dealing with planning applications for fish farms.

The consultation paper also made proposals on the environmental assessment of fish farms. These do not involve the GDO, and we will be announcing our decisions later.

The 24 September consultation paper explained that, in drawing up guidance on the new planning controls for larger agricultural holdings announced in June, the Government had formed the view that there was a strong case for small farming enterprises to have limited permitted development rights, similar to those for other industry but more restricted to avoid significant environmental problems. The Government have decided to introduce such rights by amending the GDO from the date that general agricultural permitted development rights are withdrawn from such holdings. The ability of local authorities to control the siting and design of alterations and extensions and private roads in national parks will, however, continue.

The same GDO amendment order will expand discretionary controls over agricultural excavations and farm waste deposits which individually or collectively exceed 0·5 hectares on one site. All these changes to planning control come into operation on 2 January 1992.

The second consultation paper also invited comments on draft guidance for local planning authorities on agricultural buildings and roads constructed under permitted development rights. The final guidance will be issued in a revised version of planning policy guidance note 7 early next year.

The wide-ranging new planning controls over agricultural and forestry development announced in June and the decisions announced today are due to take effect on 2 January 1992. This new regime will produce substantial environmental benefits, while ensuring that the rural economy can continue to prosper. I confirm our intention to monitor the operation of the new system and review the position in three years' time.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Africa

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the African countries which are multi-party democracies.

Mrs. Lynda Chalker: At present, the following African countries are multi-party democracies: Benin, Botswana, Cape Verde, Cote D'Ivoire, Gambia, Mauritius, Namibia, Sao Tome and Principe, Senegal, Zambia and Zimbabwe. Many other African countries are currently in the process of introducing multi-party democracies. Her Majesty's Government are actively encouraging this process and have announced a number of measures to assist it.

Southern Lebanon

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to secure the implementation of United Nations resolution No. 425 regarding the illegal occupation of southern Lebanon by the Israeli army.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We continue to make clear our view that the key to security in southern Lebanon is the implementation of SCR 425, the effective deployment of the Lebanese army and the withdrawal of all foreign forces in accordance with the Taif accord. We have supported recent United Nations moves to decrease tension in the area.

Arms Control

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current status of (a) the 1963 partial test ban treaty, (b) the 1987 intermediate nuclear forces treaty of Washington, (c) the 1991 strategic arms reduction treaty and (d) the 1968 nuclear non-proliferation treaty following the declaration of an independent commonwealth of slavic states on 8 December by Ukraine, Russia and Byelorussia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The current status of these treaties is unchanged. We welcome recent statements by the Presidents of Ukraine, Russia and Belarus that they will honour the international treaty obligations of the Soviet Union. We are making it clear directly to the authorities concerned that we attach the highest importance to the effective implementation of these obligations.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government (a) signed and (b) ratified the conventional forces in Europe treaty; what implications the declaration on 8 December of the establishment of a commonwealth of independent slavic states has for this treaty; and if he has any plans to meet the leadership of the Ukrainian, Russian and Byelorussian republics to evaluate the future of the CFE treaty.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom signed the treaty on conventional armed forces in Europe on 19 November 1990 and ratified it on 19 November 1991. We are still studying the implications for the treaty of the declaration made on 8 December by Russia, the Ukraine and Byelorussia, and are consulting our allies and the other treaty signatories. The political director in the Foreign Office will discuss this issue when he visits the three republics on 12-15 December. It remains our intention that the CFE treaty should be fully implemented throughout the area in respect of which the Soviet Union undertook the obligations, except the Baltic states.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the nature of the informal consultations that have started on the agenda for arms control, following the planned Helsinki review conference; who has been consulted; and what subjects have been discussed in the course of these consultations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At the CSCE Council of Ministers in Berlin on 19-20 June, Ministers requested their representatives in Vienna to begin informal preparatory consultations to prepare for a new process of arms control talks which would begin after the Helsinki follow-up meeting in March-July next year. These consultations began in September, and are open to all CSCE participants. Discussions have so far focused on the structure of a new forum bringing together arms control talks, a security dialogue, and the existing conflict prevention centre; and on issues that might be the subject of negotiation after the Helsinki meeting.

Gibraltar

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek direct representation for Gibraltar at the European Parliament.

Mr. Garel-Jones: No. I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs gave him on 10 December at column 389.

Cuba

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the United Kingdom ambassador to the United Nations voted on the agenda item on the Cuba blockade in the 46th session of the United Nations General Assembly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No vote was taken on the draft Cuban resolution. Consideration of the agenda item has been deferred until the 47th session of the General Assembly in 1992.

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government received the report of the seventh International Atomic Energy Agency on-site inspection in Iraq, pursuant to United Nations Security Council resolution 687 (1991), covering the period 11 to 22 October 1991.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The IAEA report of the seventh nuclear inspection in Iraq was received on 14 November 1991, when it was published as Security Council document 23215. A copy is available in the House of Commons Library.

Arms Transfers

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will list the proposed criteria that will determine the inclusion of military equipment on the proposed United Nations register of arms transfers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 9 December, the United Nations General Assembly voted by an overwhelming majority to establish at the United Nations a universal and non-discriminatory register of conventional arms transfers. The register will be established in January 1992 and will cover international transfers of seven broad categories of major weapons systems. The categories are: battle tanks, armoured combat vehicles, large calibre artillery systems, combat aircraft, attack helicopters, warships and missiles or missile systems.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Business Transactions (Liechtenstein and Switzerland)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all the reports by his Department following investigation into alleged wrongdoing or fraud which have referred to business transactions in (a) Liechtenstein or (b) Switzerland and its cantons.

Mr. Lilley: The information requested is not held centrally. However, all published inspectors' reports where the inspectors were appointed since 1979 have been reviewed and those listed in the table have been identified as containing references to business transactions in Liechtenstein or Switzerland:

For further information, I refer my hon. Friend to the reports themselves, copies of which are available in the Library.

Whitbread (Isle of Wight)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about Whitbread's tenancies on the Isle of Wight.

Mr. Redwood: We have received a number of representations from my hon. Friend about the way Whitbread is treating its tenants on the Isle of Wight.

IMRO

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to review the working of the Financial Services Act 1986 in relation to the responsibilities of the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation to regulate investment fund managers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The regulatory responsibilities of IMRO are a matter for the Securities and Investments Board in the first instance.

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins), Official Report, 5 November, columns 63-66, whether any of the beryllium or bismuth exports to which he refers were made to Iraq.

Mr. Sainsbury: The available information is given in the table.

GATT

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to urge the European Community in the GATT Uruguay round of trade negotiations to support strict linkage between the multi-fibre arrangement and strengthened GATT rules and disciplines.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is part of the European Community's mandate governing the Uruguay round textiles negotiations that this sector should be integrated into GATT on the basis of strengthened rules and disciplines. The mandate continues to be supported by the Government, the Commission and other member states.

Extortionate Credit Bargains

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will be proposing any amendments to sections 137 to 140 of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 dealing with extortionate credit bargains.

Mr. Leigh: I am grateful to the Director General of Fair Trading, Sir Gordon Borrie, for his recent and valuable report on the operation of the present provisions of the Consumer Credit Act on extortionate credit bargains. I have consulted widely on the basis of the report's findings and recommendations.

While I am reassured to learn from the report that problems of extortionate credit arise only in a minority of cases mainly on the margins of the market, I have concluded that the present provisions of the Act are inadequate. Amending legislation is necessary and should be introduced when parliamentary time permits making a number of important changes to sections 137 to 140 of the Act, broadly on the lines recommended in the director general's report.

I agree with the director general that the concept of the "extortionate credit bargain" currently in the Act should be replaced by that of the "unjust credit transaction".

I propose that one test of whether a credit transaction is unjust should be that it involved payments that were "grossly excessive". In this respect, I differ from the recommendation of the director general, who recommended that the test should be that the payments were "excessive". In my view, the latter could result in too many cases coming to court where the terms were only slightly more onerous than usual. A credit transaction would also be unjust if it involved business activity which was deceitful or oppressive or otherwise unfair and improper, whether unlawful or not.

I propose that section 138 of the Act should be amended to allow the Secretary of State to make regulations, following consultations with the director general, to set out the detailed factors that the court should take into account in determining whether a credit transaction was unjust. The director general's report made a number of detailed recommendations as to the factors that might be prescribed in the Act. I consider it more appropriate in the interests of maintaining flexibility for dealing with future developments to deal with such matters in regulations.

I propose that the courts should be required to notify the director general of the outcome of any case where they have considered whether a credit transaction was just or unjust. In addition, the Act should be amended to allow, but not require, a court in both defended and undefended cases to re-open of its own motion an unjust credit transaction.

I propose that the director general should have a power to initiate proceedings for a declaration by a court that a particular credit transaction or any particular aspect of it should be deemed to be unjust. Such a power should also be available to local trading standards officers but only with the permission of the director general. In such cases I consider the burden of proof should be on the director general or trading standards officer rather than on the creditor.

Finally, I agree with the director general that the penalties which can be imposed on summary conviction for unlicensed—that is, illegal—provision of credit should be increased. At present, magistrates courts can impose only a fine up to the statutory maximum of £2,000. I propose that they should in future also be empowered to impose a custodial sentence not exceeding six months' imprisonment. This would follow the precedents of the Financial Services Act 1986 and the Insurance Companies Act 1982.

SCOTLAND

Lead Plumbing

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of private sector dwellings in Tweeddale still have lead plumbing; what is the figure recorded nationally; and if he intends to take any additional measures to reduce the percentage.

Mr. Lang: This information was provideed in the Scottish Office statistical bulletin HSG/1991/8, published in November. Copies of the bulletin, which was sent to all Members representing Scottish constituencies, are available in the House Library.

We have announced that the Government intend to increase to 90 per cent. the maximum rate of repairs grant for the replacement of lead plumbing. Local authorities will be expected to award grant in proportion to need. This will enable the most efficient use of resources and provide considerable assistance for those on low incomes.

Crafts Industry

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of people employed by the crafts industry in Scotland as a whole and by Scottish region.

Mr. Allan Stewart: There is no information available from official sources in the form requested.

Radiation, Holy Loch

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement concerning the increase in recorded levels of radiation detected on 14 August 1991 at the Holy Loch by Dunoon.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I understand that a radiation monitor operated by the Cowal monitoring group registered two higher than normal readings among the 113 recorded on that day. These readings occurred within a period of half an hour, the highest being 40 per cent. above the normal background. I can assure the hon. Member that local transient increases of this kind are not of radiological significance.

Voluntary Sector

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were employed by the voluntary sector in Scotland in each year since 1970.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Information is not available in the form requested.

Shipping Subsidies

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for shipping subsidies for sea transport services in Scotland in 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Subject to parliamentary approval of the estimates, I propose to make available in 1992-93 total subsidy provision of £13·6 million, compared with £12·9 million in 1991-92. The deficit subsidy for Caledonian MacBrayne Ltd. will be £6·1 million. For services to Orkney and Shetland, tariff rebate subsidies of up to £5·1 million will be available for P and O and £1·2 million for Orkney and Shetland Lines. Up to £1·2 million will be available for other coastal shippers serving the Western Isles.

The total of subsidies available will increase support in real terms. This reflects the Government's continuing commitment to assisting the essential sea transport services to the Western and Northern Isles.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much time off in lieu hours are at present owed to prison officers serving at Wandsworth prison as of 1 December.

Mrs. Rumbold: On 1 December 6,442 hours were owed to prison officers at Wandsworth.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of prison officers serving at Wandsworth prison in 1990; what was the comparable figure in 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: At the end of 1990, 481 prison officer staff were employed at Wandsworth prison compared with 331 at the end of 1980.

Confiscation Orders

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those offences following which a confiscation order may be made under the terms of section 71 and schedule 4 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988.

Mr. John Patten: Part VI of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 applies to all indictable offences other than drug trafficking offences, and to certain summary offences listed in schedule 4 to the Act, as amended by the Criminal Justice Act 1988 (Confiscation Orders) Order 1990 (SI 1990 No. 1570).

Indictable offences are listed in appendix 3 to the Criminal Statistics England and Wales 1989, a copy of which is in the Library.

Bail Hostels

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the categories of offenders who are excluded from open bail hostels.

Mr. John Patten: The Approved Probation Hostel and Home and Bail Hostel Rules 1976 prohibit the admission to approved hostels, including bail hostels, of any person suffering from severe subnormality or psychopathic disorder. In addition, the prior consent of the Secretary of State is required before anyone can be admitted to a hostel who is outside the limits of age approved for that hostel.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the proportion of men bailed to hostels who are unemployed.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the role and purpose of bail hostels.

Mr. John Patten: Approved bail hostels provide supervised accommodation in the community for defendants who have been remanded on bail. Their purpose is to reduce unnecessary remands in custody under the terms of the Bail Act 1976.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many bail hostels closed in each year since 1988-89; and if he will give the reasons in each case.

Mr. John Patten: No bail hostels have closed since 1988-89.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish up-to-date statistics of re-offence by residents in bail hostels;

(2) if he will list all the categories of offence of defendants who were accommodated in bail hostels and who were subsequently convicted of those offences in each of the past five years.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not available.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make provision of grant aid to local probation committees for building bail hostels conditional on the granting of planning permission by the appropriate authority.

Mr. John Patten: All approvals for expenditure on the provision of bail hostels are conditional on any relevant planning permission being obtained.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will institute a system for recording, in each bail hostel area, the level of crime associated with bailees, including specifically (a) all serious crime, (b) sexual offences and (c) theft and burglary.

Mr. John Patten: Crime is not recorded according to bail hostel area and there are no plans to do so. Work is in hand to analyse the significance of offending on bail, and the results will be announced as soon as is practicable.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many custodial sentences have effectively been served at bail hostels because of delays in the criminal justice system.

Mr. John Patten: Time spent on bail awaiting trial or sentence does not count towards a subsequent custodial sentence.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many bail hostels are of the core and cluster type.

Mr. John Patten: On 1 December 1991, there were 15 bail hostels of the core and cluster type.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on the siting of new bail hostels; what guidance has been issued to local probation committees on the procedures to be followed in respect of public consultation in selecting sites; and if he will publish the guidance.

Mr. John Patten: The role of the Home Office in the setting up of individual bail hostels is confined to approving a proposal for funding. It is for local probation committees to decide the location of a bail hostel, obtain the appropriate planning consents and negotiate the purchase.

The Home Office requires local probation committees, when deciding on a location, to assess the reactions of local residents and elected representatives to their proposals, but no specific guidance has been issued on how this should be done.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is (a) the amount of public expenditure and (b) the number of prison places saved per year as a result of the expansion programme for the bail hostel scheme since 1988.

Mr. John Patten: Since 1988 central Government capital expenditure of approximately £9·9 million has been provided for the bail hostel expansion programme, but not all the bed spaces funded have yet come on stream. Estimates of the number of prison places saved at the year end based on 90 per cent. occupancy of available hostel places are:

	Number
1988-89	32
1989-90	161
1990-91	383
1991-92	662

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans the Home Office has for increasing the number of remand places available.

Mrs. Rumbold: The prison building programme will deliver a further 4,500 places by the end of 1992. The majority of these are local prisons or remand centres to hold remand and newly sentenced prisoners.

Custody Costs

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the additional cost of custodial sentences compared with non-custodial sentences.

Mr. John Patten: In the year 1990-91 the average annual cost of prison custody was £20,070. It was £1,070 for a probation order and £920 for a community service order. Offenders should be punished according to the seriousness of their offences. We believe that less serious offenders can be punished adequately in the community under demanding supervision which can protect the public and help to reduce reoffending.

Bail (Private Placements)

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the success rate of probation committees who were allowed to place those on bail into private homes.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Civilianisation

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of police officers who would be returned to operational duties if the West Yorkshire police authority adopted the best practice on civilianisation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Of the 2,706 "key posts" in West Yorkshire police, 1,838—or 68 per cent.—have been civilianised. A number of forces have achieved rates at 80 per cent. or more. Although there is not necessarily an exact correlation between the number of posts civilianised and the number of officers thereby released for operational duties, it is reasonable to assume that if West Yorkshire were to civilianise 80 per cent. of "key posts", some 300 further officers could be released for operational duties.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list police authorities in the order of the extent to which they have implemented the policy of civilianisation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The following table shows the proportion of "key posts"—that is, those regarded by Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary as suitable for civilianisation—which had been civilianised by each provincial force up to the end of 1990. Comparative information is not available for the Metropolitan police.

Knives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases concerning the sale and possession of knives have been brought by the Crown prosecution service in each of the last two years; and what assessment he has made of the effect of local amnesties on the number of such prosecutions.

Mr. John Patten: Information on the number of prosecutions concerning the illegal sale and possession of knives is given in the table.

Number of prosecutions for offences of possession and sales of knives 1988 and 1989—England and Wales

Police Manpower

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list for each police force in England and Wales the figures for (a) total population, (b) rural population and (c) urban population used by the recent review of police manpower needs;

(2) if he will give the specific figure of the deprivation index which was calculated (a) for the South Wales police area, (b) for other police authority areas in Wales and (c) for police authority areas in England as part of his Department's recent review of police manpower;

(3) if he will list the specific facts on degree of overcrowding which were taken into account (a) in the South Wales police area as a whole and (b) in each district within the South Wales police area in the course of the recent review of police manpower needs;

(4) if he will list the specific cities, towns, districts and localities in the South Wales police area which have been regarded as urban in calculating the number of officers needed by the South Wales constabulary as part of his Department's recent review of police manpower;

(5) if he will list the specific towns, districts, villages and localities in the South Wales police area which have been regarded as rural in calculating the number of officers needed by the South Wales constabulary as part of his Department's recent review of police manpower.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the results of the 1986 inter-censual survey (a) in South Glamorgan and (b) other areas were used to supplement the results of the 1981 census in determining the factors considered in calculating the number of officers needed by the South Wales constabulary as part of his Department's recent review of police manpower.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys that there were no national inter-censual surveys in 1986.

Foreign Lottery Tickets

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes the Government are considering to the policy of prohibiting the importation, promotion and sale of foreign lottery tickets, in connection with the introduction of the single market.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans at present to amend the policy or the law in relation to the importation, promotion and sale of foreign lottery material.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to prevent the illegal importation of foreign lottery tickets into Britain.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Where appropriate, with the Gaming Board for Great Britain, Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, a number of measures are taken to prevent or curtail the promotion of foreign lotteries in the United Kingdom.

Representations are, if necessary, made to the authorities in the country concerned. Of European Community countries, such representations have been made to the Federal Republic of Germany. Representations have also been made to the authorities in Austria and Vanuatu, as a result of which those countries' national lotteries have undertaken to cease their promotional activities in this country, and to the authorities in British Columbia, Canada and New South Wales, Australia.

If advertisements for foreign lotteries appear in magazines published here, the provisions of our law are drawn to the attention of the publishers who have previously undertaken not to publish such advertisements again. In addition, Her Majesty's Customs and Excise has seized substantial quantities of promotional letters intended to be posted individually here but imported in bulk.

Gambling

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to include the gambling industry within the terms of the European single market after 1992.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. The European Commission is currently examining the gambling sector in the context of the single market, but has not so far produced any formal proposals.

Au Pairs

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many EC member states have a specific definition of au pair; and in how many cases this definition is confined to women.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We do not have this information.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many au pairs in the United Kingdom for each of the last five years have entered from (a) each other EC member state, (b) other Commonwealth countries and (c) the rest of the world.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Entry to the United Kingdom as an au pair is restricted to unmarried girls and women aged between 17 and 27 who are nationals of the following countries: the member states of the European Community, Andorra, Austria, Cyprus, the Faeroes, Finland, Greenland, Iceland, Liechtenstein, Malta, Monaco, Norway, San Marino, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey and Yugoslavia; and from 1 January 1992 Czechoslovakia and Hungary. We do not keep records of the entry of EC nationals. Information relating to other nationalities is contained in the annual publication "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom," copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has of abuse of au pair arrangements by women seeking to settle in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are not aware of significant abuse of these arrangements.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on extending the definition of au pair to include men.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have no plans to extend the au pair scheme to men.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from local authorities about funding under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966.

Mrs. Rumbold: We received a number of representations from local authorities about the proposals for the more effective administration of section 11 grant, but I regret that no central record is maintained of these. A number of these representations are concerned with the likely scale of funding to be allowed and with the timing of the announcement of that allocation.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to announce the allocation to local authorities of section 11 funding under the Local Government Act 1966.

Mrs. Rumbold: Shortly.

Mr. Karamjit Singh Chahal

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will release Mr. Karamjit Singh Chahal from Bedford prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Mr. Chahal was detained following the decision to deport him in August 1990 for reasons of national security and for other reasons of a political nature, namely the fight against international terrorism. I am reviewing Mr. Chahal's application for asylum in accordance with the recent judgment of the High Court on his application for judicial review of my decision. In the meantime I am satisfied that Mr. Chahal should remain in detention.

Index of Prostitutes

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the criteria for inclusion on the central index of prostitutes; how often each entry is reviewed; and what are the criteria for the removal of names from the index.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner that the central index of prostitutes records all persons in the Metropolitan police district who have been cautioned for loitering or soliciting for purposes of prostitution, or who have been charged with or convicted of these offences. Records of cautions are deleted after 12 months; records of charges are retained until the notification of the court disposal is received; and information relating to outstanding warrants is kept pending execution or cancellation. Records of conviction are retained indefinitely.

Belmarsh Prison

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letters sent to him and to his Minister of State from the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland dated 9 July, 31 July, 29 August and 9 October about Belmarsh prison.

Mrs. Rumbold: A reply to the hon. Gentleman's letters of 9 July, 31 July, 29 August and 9 October about Belmarsh prison was sent on 9 December. I regret the delay.

National Lottery

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make an estimate of the employment implications, including those for existing jobs, of the introduction of a national lottery.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The employment implications of a national lottery cannot be assessed with any accuracy at this stage. It is one of the matters included in the Government's further consideration of the arguments for and against allowing one or more privately run lotteries on a national scale.

Immigration (Domestic Workers)

Sir Alan Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are taken to ensure that employers will provide adequate conditions, food and sleeping accommodation when they apply for visas for immigrants to work in private houses in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under exceptional arrangements outside the immigration rules, a domestic servant may be admitted to continue to work for an employer here, but only if the domestic servant has worked abroad for the employer for a substantial period. Before an entry clearance is granted, the employer must accept responsibility for the maintenance and accommodation of the domestic worker. While in the United Kingdom domestic workers are entitled to the normal protection of our law, as is made clear in a leaflet given to each domestic worker who is granted an entry clearance abroad or an extension of stay in the United Kingdom.

Drugs Prevention Initiative

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made with the Government's drugs prevention initiative.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Sixteen local drugs prevention teams are now in action, and the remaining four are in the process of being recruited and appointed. A full progress report on the initiative has been published today, and a copy has been placed in the Library.

Young Offenders

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is (a) the average and (b) the maximum number of hours that young people being held at Feltham are kept in solitary confinement in their cells;

(2) if he will state the average number of hours per day that young offenders are held alone in cells in Feltham young offenders institution.

Mrs. Rumbold [holding answers 26 November 1991 and 2 December 1991]: Solitary confinement is not a term used in the prison service, though there will be times when, for a variety of reasons, young people will be alone in their cells.

It is not possible to give an average figure for the amount of time spent by young people alone in their cells in Feltham young offenders institution. Generally, however, all prisoners who are accommodated in single cells will be alone between 9 in the evening and 8 the following morning. During the day, young prisoners on the convicted side of the establishment will be out of their cells for about seven to eight hours each day during the week and for about five to six hours during the weekend, on top of which they will receive any visits to which they are entitled. On the unconvicted side of the establishment, young prisoners will spend five to six hours out of their cells, plus any visits they are allowed to receive.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to ensure that the results of students with special educational needs in further education in (a) public examinations and (b) non-examined courses are recorded and publicised in a way which reflects their achievements positively.

Mr. Eggar: Under the Further and Higher Education Bill currently before Parliament, the Secretary of State will have the power to make regulations requiring the governing body of any institution within the further education sector to publish details about the educational achievements of their students, including those with special educational needs.

Schools Reorganisation, Plymouth

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is in a position to make a decision on the proposed schools reorganisation in Plymouth, as submitted by Devon local education authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: The proposals under sections 12 and 13 of the Education Act 1980 to which the hon. Member refers were published on 5 July and are currently before the Secretary of State. My right hon. Friend will reach a decision as soon as possible, consistent with a full and careful consideration of the proposals.

Sport Review

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to publish his ministerial review of sport before the end of the Year of Sport.

Mr. Atkins: It will be published as soon as it is ready.

St. Anne's Primary School, Birkenhead

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will approve the capital plans for St. Anne's primary school, Rock Ferry, Birkenhead, which are now lodged with his Department.

Mr. Fallon: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 5 November 1991 at col. 57.

TRANSPORT

Marchioness Disaster

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what representations he has received concerning omissions of relevant facts from the investigation and report of the marine accident investigation branch into the Marchioness disaster;

(2) on what date he received the letter from the hon. Member for Newham, South dated 19 August concerning the Marchioness report and the numbers of accidents over the years which have involved the dredger Bowbelle; on what date his letter R/M/PSO/13111/91 was sent in reply; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: No representations concerning omissions of relevant facts from the investigation and report have been received.

The letter of 19 August from the hon. Member was received on 20 August; I replied on 19 September. That letter from the hon. Member was not considered to be a representation about relevant facts in the context of the Marchioness report. The marine accident investigation branch inspectors were aware of the number of incidents involving vessels, including Bowbelle, which had occurred prior to the tragic accident that they were investigating. Section 15 of the report discussed the reaction of the owners, the Port of London Authority and the Department at some length. To have gone into detail on each incident would have greatly lengthened that section without adding to its value; the reason for singling out the incidents described in annex 11 of the report is that they had particular similarities to the Marchioness case.

M25

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) why a section of the M25 was closed between 4 pm and 6 pm on 1 December; whether there was any danger to the public during this time; and what length of the motorway was closed;

(2) under what powers a section of the M25 was closed to traffic on the afternoon of 1 December.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

A section of the motorway between junctions 19 and 21 on the M25 was closed by the local civil police using normal police powers after a vehicle in a MOD convoy suffered a mechanical breakdown. There was no danger to the public, police or military personnel. The inconvenience caused to other road users is greatly regretted.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

EC Development Council

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the EC Development Council on 28 November.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn) on 9 December at column 278.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Kingfisher Chips

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will name the manufacturers of the Kingfisher chips served in Members Dining Room.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall arrange for the Refreshment Department to let the hon. Member have this information.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Tourism

12. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his current estimate of the volume and value of tourism to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Overall visitor numbers are expected to improve on last year's 1·15 million—itself a record. Of particular significance is the estimated 15 per cent. increase in pure holiday visitors. In 1990, out-of-state visitors spent about £153 million in Northern Ireland.

Student Loans

13. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the working of the student loans scheme in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: The student loans scheme is administered on a United Kingdom-wide basis by the Student Loans Company and is operating successfully in Northern Ireland. A full-year loan plus grant now gives a student over 30 per cent. more money than did the grant alone in 1989-90.

Political Initiatives

14. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any plans for new political initiatives in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I am currently in contact with the main constitutional parties in Northern Ireland and the Irish Government, to see whether a new basis for fresh talks can be established. I am pleased to say that there is a general desire to make substantive progress in the period before the election and a general acceptance that the key elements of my statement to the House on 26 March 1991 should apply in any fresh talks.

Employment

15. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current levels of employment in Northern Ireland.

20. Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the number of people currently employed in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: At June 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, there were an estimated 525,680 employees in employment. This represents an increase of almost 25,000 in the past five years.

24. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on recent changes in the level of employment in Northern Ireland in 1992.

Mr. Needham: The latest figures indicate that at June 1991 there were some 525,680 employees in employment, a decrease of 2,660 since March. The current level of employment is, however, almost 25,000 higher than at June 1986.

Intergovernmental Talks

17. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make a statement on his most recent talks with the Irish Government.

Mr. Brooke: A meeting between the Prime Minister and Taoiseach, which I also attended, took place in Dublin on 4 December. It discussed a wide range of EC, other international and bilateral issues. A meeting of the Anglo-Irish Conference was held on 20 November.

Security

18. Sir Patrick Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave earlier today to the right hon. Member for Lagan Valley (Mr. Molyneaux).

Electricity Industry

19. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people currently work in the electricity supply industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: At 30 September, 5,576 people were working in the electricity supply industry in Northern Ireland.

25. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a further statement on the progress of the privatisation of Northern Ireland Electricity.

Mr. Needham: Bids for the purchase of the power stations have been received and are being evaluated. Draft legislation has been laid before Parliament and will be debated in due course.

27. Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on fair employment in the Northern Ireland Electricity service.

Mr. Needham: I am informed by the chairman of Northern Ireland Electricity that the company is committed to and implementing an employment policy designed to achieve full equality of opportunity.

Royal Family (Portraits)

21. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will introduce legislation to clarify the law with respect to the display of portraits of Her Majesty or members of the royal family.

Mr. Needham: There are no plans to introduce such legislation; in the context of the work place the position is already adequately covered in the code of practice on fair employment.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why he instructed the removal of a portrait of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II from Her Majesty's prison, The Maze; and if he will make a statement on the display of such portraits in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is the policy of the prison service that official portraits of Her Majesty the Queen and Prince Philip are displayed in specified areas. There is no provision for the diplay of portraits or emblems in areas used by visitors to prison establishments or other areas accessible by the public.

Spearhead Battalion

22. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a further statement on the deployment of the spearhead battalion in Northern Ireland to support the RUC and UDR.

Dr. Mawhinney: After consultation with the Chief Constable and the General Officer Commanding, my right hon. Friend agreed with the Secretary of State for Defence that an additional battalion should be temporarily deployed to Northern Ireland from 26 November 1991 to operate in support of the RUC.

This is a decisive and measured response to the current security situation. It is yet another example of the Government's commitment to provide the security forces with the resources they need to help bring terrorism to an end.

Northern Ireland International Airport

23. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what Government and European grants were paid to Northern Ireland international airport during the periods January 1990 to December 1990 and January 1991 to October 1991.

Mr. Needham: During the period January 1990 to December 1990, Belfast international airport received grants of £4,861·78 and £6·22 million from Government and the European Commission respectively. Between January 1991 and October 1991 £600,000 was paid to the airport by the European Commission. No grant was paid to the airport by Government during this latter period.

Public Spending

26. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money per head of population is currently spent per head of population in Ulster.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments will spend approximately £6,449 million in 1991-92, which represents about £4,050 per head of population.

Road Deaths

28. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people died on the roads in each of the three years up to 30 October.

Mr. Needham: The figures are as follows:

	Number
1 January 1989 to 30 October 1989	154
1 January 1990 to 30 October 1990	143
1 January 1991 to 30 October 1991	151

Border Poll

29. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans for holding a border poll in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: No.

Governance

30. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has recently met the leaders of the major political parties to discuss the governance of Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner).

Unemployment

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current levels of unemployment in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: At 10 October 1991, the latest date for which information is available, there were 101,441 unemployed claimants in Northern Ireland, which represents a decrease of 2,994 compared with the previous month.

Dyslexia

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many schools in Northern Ireland have a specialised teacher for children suffering from dyslexia at (a) primary level and (b) post-primary level.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not readily available in the form requested.

Dyslexia can describe a variety of specific learning difficulties experienced by children. In most cases the children concerned are educated in ordinary schools, many of which have teachers with responsibility for co-ordinating remedial teaching by class teachers and who also provide remedial teaching for small groups of children withdrawn from their normal classes for short periods each week.

Education and library boards have a duty to identify and make provision for children with special educational needs. Assistance for pupils with literacy and numeracy problems is provided in a number of ways, for example, by peripatetic remedial teachers, reading centres, literacy teaching and support services and outreach from some special schools.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what training teachers receive in (a) recognising symptoms of dyslexia in pupils and (b) how to assist pupils who show symptoms of dyslexia.

Dr. Mawhinney: Dyslexia can describe a variety of learning difficulties experienced by children. All courses of initial teacher training must include an element designed to enable students to develop the capacity to identify and deal with pupils with learning difficulties. For serving teachers, the education and library boards mount in-service courses with similar objectives.

The Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education (CATE), whose remit applies to England, Wales and Northern Ireland, is at present undertaking an inquiry into the preparation of student teachers to teach reading. As part of this inquiry, CATE has been asked to devote attention to the question of the training of teachers in how to identify and help pupils who might be termed dyslexic.

Suckler Calves

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show for the principal markets in Northern Ireland the price received for suckler calves in each of the months September, October and November, respectively, of the current year, and the figures for 1986, 1981 and 1976, and if he will show the prices in actual and real terms taking 1976 as the base year.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Current Prices (£/head)			Prices in real terms[1] (£/head)
	Sept.	Oct.	Nov.	Sept.	Oct.	Nov.
1976	—	171·56	174·40	—	171·56	171·99

1986	214·18	230·16	224·17	90·30	96·87	93·56

NORTHERN IRELAND

Pupil Selection

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many children who undertook the selection transfer procedure in the academic year 1990-91 gained (a) grade 1, (b) grade 2, (c) grade 3 and (d) grade 4 in each of the education and library board areas; and of these how many gained a place in the school of their first choice.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is as follows:

Table 1
Grades obtained by children in the 1990-91 transfer procedure tests in primary schools in each education and library board area.

Education and library board	Grade 1	2	3	4	Total

Agriculture

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available gross income of Northern Ireland agriculture by sector and in total showing figures in actual and real terms, taking the first year as a base; and if he will show in the same way (i) the value of agricultural land and (ii) the value of farm equipment for those years.

Mr. Hanley: Gross income data are not available. Data using the closest alternative measure, total income from farming, are shown in table 1.

Total income from farming is an aggregate measure of income and is not calculated by sector. The closest available sectoral measure is the sector gross margin, data on which are given in table 2.

Information on the value of agricultural land is given in table 3.

Information on the value of farm equipment is not available.

Disabled Drivers (Parking)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will arrange for the Department of the Environment roads service to make provision for free parking for disabled drivers in Northern Ireland along the lines of that made available in Great Britain by local authorities.

Mr. Needham: I have no plans to introduce legislation to enable disabled drivers to park free of charge in Department of the Environment car parks. Orange badge holders are entitled to free parking on roads where charges or restrictions would normally apply.

Crawfordsburn

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will designate Crawfordsburn, County Down as an environmentally sensitive area.

Mr. Needham: There are no plans to designate Crawfordsburn as an environmentally sensitive area, nor are there any plans to apply any other nature conservation-related designation to the area. It is intended, however, to designate a conservation area in Crawfordsburn village during 1993-94.

Rathgael Training School

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions young persons have absconded from Rathgael training school, Bangor in each month since 1 July 1991, giving the number of occasions on which each young person has absconded on each occasion; and whether Bangor police station is notified of every such case of absconding irrespective of the home address of the person absconding.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is given below:

September	44	74
October	41	69
November	31	48

All episodes of absconding are reported to Bangor police station irrespective of clients' addresses.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the number of unemployed young people in the North Down area; and what was the figure for each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Needham: The number of unemployed persons aged under 25 in the North Down district council area at 10 October 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, was 738. Information for previous years is only available from 1984 onwards.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the amount of money which it is estimated has been paid out as a result of fraudulent applications for DHSS benefits which have been detected in each of the last five years in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: During the period 1986 to 1990 the amount of money paid in Northern Ireland as a result of fraudulent claims for DHSS benefits, which have since been detected, was:

1986	668,924
1987	640,924
1988	621,109
1989	814,637
1990	894,140

The figure for 1990 represents a period of 15 months from 1 January 1990 to 31 March 1991 as from 1991 it was decided to record these statistics on a financial year basis. Figures in respect of 1991 will not be available until mid-1992.

Hearing Therapists

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many hearing therapists are employed in Northern Ireland; and whether he has proposals to extend the services provided by hearing therapists in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: There are two hearing therapists employed in Northern Ireland. The Regional Strategy for the Health and Personal Social Services in Northern Ireland (1992-97) identifies as a key area of concern the need to improve services for people suffering from sensory disability. Boards are required to ascertain the numbers and needs of sensorily impaired people in their populations and ensure access to specialist teams of staff to provide support for those with a hearing and/or visual impairment.

Freshwater Fish

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the scope and frequency of monitoring of freshwater fish flesh in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: There is no regular monitoring regime for freshwater fish flesh. Monitoring and testing are undertaken, however, where problems are suspected.

In 1990, at the request of the Foyle Fisheries Commission, a number of samples of salmon from the River Foyle estuary were analysed for contaminants.

In 1986-87 Northern Ireland scientists participated in a United Kingdom survey of pesticide and heavy metal residues in eels from freshwater sites. A similar survey is planned for 1995.

Terrorists (Compensation Claims)

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many awards of compensation have been made in cases where terrorists have been (a) shot dead and (b) shot and injured by the security services since 15 November 1985; and if he will publish full details.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 5 December 1991]: The available information is set out in the table below. It should be noted that this information, which is based on the date of settlement and not of the incident concerned, does not differentiate between "terrorist" and "non-terrorist" incidents; and includes awards arising from the use of plastic baton rounds.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Offices

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 18 November, Official Report, column 84, and the Benefit Agency's subsequent letter, if he will ask the district managers to provide information on the number, and the periods in which, benefit offices were closed to the public during official opening hours in the current year, giving the reasons for each closure.

Miss Widdecombe: Provision of local services is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. I understand from him that district managers are encouraged to tailor their services to the needs of the local community.

The range of public caller facilities now offered by the Benefits Agency is too diverse to allow meaningful comparisons between offices or to justify collection of detailed information centrally. Information about the withdrawal of these facilities could be obtained from district managers only at disproportionate cost. Mr. Bichard will write to the hon. Member, and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Household Incomes

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he proposes any changes in the series of statistics covering households with below average incomes.

Mr. Newton: As I have previously informed the Social Security Select Committee, since the publication in July 1990 of the last set of biennial tables covering households below average income, a thoroughgoing "stocktaking review" of the methodology and presentation has been carried out by the Department's officials, including statisticians, together with a statistician from the Central Statistical Office. The group conducting the review has also undertaken consultation with a number of independent experts, including the Institute for Fiscal Studies.

Their report is published today, and copies have been placed in the Library. It makes 45 recommendations aimed at improving both the content of HBAI and the clarity of its presentation. I have accepted these in full, and have also agreed to adjust the coverage of HBAI so that it relates to the whole United Kingdom, instead of Great Britain as at present, and to adopt 1979 as the base year for time series. Although these changes will involve considerable extra work, we nevertheless intend to publish the next biennial figures, for 1989, within two years of the last.

I have also given further careful consideration to the Select Committee's request that such figures should be published annually, instead of biennially. I agree that this is now sensible, and arrangements are therefore being made for annual publications from the 1989 figures onwards.

Similarly, I propose to meet the Select Committee's request that take-up estimates for the income-related benefits, which hitherto have also been published biennially, should be published annually. DSS statisticians are currently considering what improvements can be made in the methodology for making these estimates, and will aim to produce those for 1989 at about the same time as the next HBAI, in mid-1992.

These improvements will be pursued in close collaboration with the IFS, which has agreed to assist the Department's statisticians in calculating and checking HBAI results before publication, and in making the database more readily available to external researchers once publication has taken place.

At the same time as making these changes, we are examining ways of improving the basic data from which HBAI is drawn. We are therefore piloting a new "family resources survey" with a view to evaluating the contribution that this could make to enhancing the information on which studies such as HBAI are based.

EC Pension Levels

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the level of the basic state pension, and any earnings-related supplement for a person on the average wage in each European Community country currently, in sterling at current purchasing power parity exchange rates.

Mr. Jack: There are no comparable statistics available on average annual wages in the member states of the European Community. As a consequence, it is not possible to provide the pension comparisons requested by the hon. Member.

Low-income Families

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what index he used to calculate the figure of £600 million a year in real terms as an increase in means-tested benefits for low-income families.

Mr. Jack: The figure of £600 million has been calculated by revaluing each additional package of help into 1992-93 terms by the GDP deflator.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will give a detailed breakdown of how the £600 million extra a year in real terms which has been made available to families through income-related benefits, has been allocated to families with low incomes;

(2) if he will give details for each year from 1988-89 onwards of how much of the extra £600 million a year, in real terms, given to low-income families has (a) gone into each means-tested benefit, (b) increased the real value of each means-tested benefit to individual households and (c) been spent because of changes in the numbers of families receiving means-tested benefits.

Mr. Jack: The detailed breakdown is in the table.

It is not possible to estimate the increased value of each income-related benefit to individual households because individual families will have benefited in different ways and at different times from one or more of the separate packages.

Costings of each package of help are calculated using forecasts of family numbers receiving income-related benefits in the year of introduction. In arriving at the total cost no account is taken of subsequent changes in the numbers of families receiving income-related benefits.

Earnings Disregard

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to publish the findings of his Department's monitoring of the impact of the new earnings disregard rules introduced under the Social Security Act 1986.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department has monitored the effect of the earnings rules in income support, family credit, housing benefit and community charge benefit since 1988. As a result, we have already made changes to the rules which will provide extra help for working families with children. The earnings disregard for lone parents was raised from £15 to £25 in housing benefit and community charge benefit from October 1990. We are also reducing the hours of work needed to claim family credit from 24 to 16 hours a week in April 1992. At the same time, we shall be introducing a disregard of the first £15 a week of any maintenance received for a child in family credit, housing benefit and community charge benefit.

Women Claimants

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women in couples claiming supplementary benefit/income support have been the claimant in each year since 1983; and if he will provide the figures as a proportion of all couples on supplementary benefit/income support for each year.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is given in the table:

Year	Number of female claimants	All couple cases	Proportion
1983	500	1,020,600	1 in 2,041
1984	12,140	1,086,300	1 in 90

Note: No information is available for 1985. The Annual Statistical Enquiry for that year was deferred until 1986.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has decided the final locations of the new administration centres for the Child Support Agency; when these new offices will be operational; and how they will be staffed.

Mr. Jack: Negotiations on the location of the new administration centres have been concluded successfully and I can now confirm that they will be sited in Hastings, the black country (Dudley), Belfast, Falkirk, Birkenhead and Plymouth, each one of which will create 500 new administrative jobs. The centres in Hastings, the black country and Belfast will come into operation from 1 April 1993 followed by Falkirk, Birkenhead and Plymouth by autumn 1993. Local recruitment for the majority of the jobs will start to build up from about six months before the operational dates.

The selection of Hastings has enabled us to offer opportunities to a substantial number of Property Services Agency staff who would otherwise be facing redundancy. It is our hope that we can co-ordinate the occupation of the Hastings centre with the rundown in staffing of PSA to ensure a major civil service presence in the area.

Pension Funds

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to lay regulations following the consultation he has undertaken on the restriction of self-investment by pension funds for which provision was made in the Social Security Act 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Social Security Act 1990 provided powers enabling restrictions to be placed on the extent to which the resources of occupational pension schemes may be invested in the sponsoring employer, or an associate and connected employer.

Shortly after the passage of the Act, the Government commissioned independent consultants, Ernst and Young, to report on the extent of such investment and problems which might arise in restricting it.

Following their report, draft regulations to achieve such restriction were referred to the Occupational Pensions Board. After consultation with interested bodies, the board reported on the draft towards the end of July. Having considered its recommendations, together with other representations received subsequently about the need for appropriate provisions to avoid causing unnecessary difficulties for companies and pension funds in respect of existing self-investment, we intend to lay regulations to restrict self-investment early in the new year.

EMPLOYMENT

Earnings

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the gross weekly earnings of the lowest decile of full-time workers aged under 18 years, whose pay was not affected by absence, for each year since 1979, in both actual and real terms in 1991 prices.

Mr. Forth: The earnings information requested is published in table 126 of part E of the new earnings survey report for each year from 1979, for men and women separately. Information for men and women combined is published in table X4 of part B from 1984 to 1988, and in table X4 of part A from 1989 to 1991; it is not available prior to 1984.

Information on the retail prices index (all items) to convert earlier years' figures to 1991 prices is published in table 6·4 of the latest "Employment Gazette" for April 1991, and in table 26 of the annual supplement to "Economic Trends" for April of earlier years.

Copies of the publications are available in the Library.

Wages Council Legislation

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was (a) the gender, (b) the occupation and (c) the average working hours of each underpaid worker in establishments prosecuted for breaching wages council legislation in 1989, 1990 and 1991 to date, identifying (i) the establishment at which each worker was employed, (ii) the type of offence committed against the employee, (iii) the penalty and legal costs incurred to the employer, (iv) the arrears of wages paid to each employee, separately identified, (v) the employee's hourly rate of pay before the prosecution and (vi) the relevant wages council rate which the employee received thereafter, identifying the relevant wages council order.

Offshore Installations

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for employment (1) how many improvement notices the Health and Safety Executive's offshore division has issued since 1 April 1991;

(2) how many prohibition notices the Health and Safety Executive's offshore division has issued since 1 April 1991;

(3) how many prosecutions have been commenced by the Health and Safety Executive's offshore division since 1 April 1991.

Mr. Jackson: [holding answer 11 December 1991]: Since 1 April 1991, under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, the Health and Safety Executive's offshore safety division has served no improvement notices. Two prohibition notices have been served. Inspectors have additional powers under the Mineral Workings (Offshore Installations) Act 1971 to prohibit an activity or the use of equipment or to require improvement to be made. These powers have been designed specifically for offshore operation, and are used extensively. No prosecutions have been commenced by HSE's offshore safety division since 1 April 1991. Decisions on offshore safety-related prosecutions are normally a matter for the procurator fiscal in Scotland and the Crown prosecution service in England. I am not aware of any prosecutions commenced by these authorities since 1 April 1991.

Industrial Safety Reports

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of safety reports, under regulation 7(i) of the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazard Regulations 1984, submitted to each Health and Safety Executive region before 8 July 1989 and the number of site occupiers who have still to receive a confirmatory letter from the Health and Safety Executive stating that the report has been examined, that selective inspections based on the report have been completed and that the report will now be used as a reference document in future inspections.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 11 December 1991]: Only information about safety reports submitted to the Health and Safety Executive by August 1989 is readily available centrally. Details of those submitted before 8 July 1989 can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

By August 1989, HSE had received 331 such reports. The following table shows a breakdown by the HSE regions:

	Number
Wales and the South West	45
London and the South East	14
Home Countries	24
Midlands	21
Yorkshire and the North East	105
North West	57
Scotland	65

All these reports have received an initial evaluation. A total of 104 safety reports received by HSE have been assessed as satisfying the requirements of schedule 6 of the regulations following examination on a multidisciplinary basis. Some of the 104 reports may have been received by HSE after August 1989, but the exact number received before that date could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are (a) the number of patients on waiting lists for admission to each district general hospital within Mid-Glamorgan for each specialty; and what is the average time on the list and (b) the number of patients waiting to see each consultant; and what is the average waiting time.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The most recent information available on in-patient and day case waiting lists and median waiting times, analysed by hospital and specialty, is published in "Welsh Hospital Waiting List Bulletin 1991: No. 2," which is available in the Library of the House.

Information on consultant waiting lists and waiting times is not held centrally. However, the recently published patients charter sets out the Government's plans to improve the quality and range of information on health care services in Wales with locally published waiting times for out-patient, day care and in-patient treatment by hospital, specialty and consultant.

In support of the priority attached to reducing waiting times, the waiting times initiative received record funding of £1·3 million in 1991. In addition, over £2 million has been allocated to the Department's unique treatment centre initiative which aims to treat Welsh patients waiting for treatment for certain key disabling conditions. Four treatment centres have been opened since December 1989. These measures, together with the increased efficiency resulting from the reforms of the health service will lead to downward pressure on waiting lists. In addition, all health authorities in Wales are committed to the waiting times targets set out in the "Agenda for Action" which will deliver a progressively improving service for patients.

Schools Inspectorate

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will list those who have to date served as Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, the term they served and the terms and remit of their appointments.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The principal functions of Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools in Wales are to advise the Secretary of State on the quality and standards of education in Wales and to manage the inspectorate in Wales.

Since 1964, the post has been a permanent appointment within the Welsh Office. Prior to that the post was with the Whitehall Department responsible for education in England and Wales. Those with chief inspector responsibilities since the post was established in 1907 have been:

Sir O. M. Edwards

Sports Clubs (Rate Relief)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost in 1990-91 of the 75 per cent. offset from the national non-domestic pool consequent to the granting of discretionary rate relief to voluntary sports clubs indicated by his survey into charging authorities' use of discretionary rate relief under section 47 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Latest local authority returns indicate that in 1990-91 the cost of the 75 per cent. offset from the non-domestic rating pool consequent to the granting of discretionary rate relief was £486,249. This relates to all non-profit making organisations occupying properties under section 47 2*(b)* and (c) of the Act including property occupied for religious, philanthropic, scientific, welfare and recreational purposes.

The survey of relief given to voluntary sports clubs related to numbers of properties, not the cost of the relief granted.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation concerning the upholding by the Advertising Standards Authority on 6 December of the complaint against the misleading nature of the current "Cardiff Bay before and after" advertising campaign concerning the proposed barrage designed by the Travis Dale Partnership; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: None. Individual advertising campaigns are a matter for the corporation.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the annual grant-in-aid to the Cardiff Bay development corporation for each financial year since its inception.

Mr. David Hunt: Cardiff Bay development corporation has received the following annual grant in aid since it was established on 3 April 1987:

	£ million
1987-88	11·5
1988-89	18·3
1989-90	29·0
1990-91	33·6

South Glamorgan TEC

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the South Glamorgan training and enterprise council concerning the numbers of unemployed youngsters under 18 years of age not so far placed in a job or training place under the youth training guarantee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Welsh Office, on 14 November 1991, Official Report, column 643.

Agriculture

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for the reorganisation of the agriculture service provided by his Department; which offices will be affected; what are the employment consequences; and what assessment he has made of the likely effect of such changes on the extent and quality of agricultural advice available in the Principality.

Mr. David Hunt: I have already announced that ADAS will operate as a joint agency serving England and Wales when it comes into existence on 1 April 1992. I have also announced that the Welsh headquarters of the agency will remain at Trawsgoed, Aberystwyth, and that there will be two business centres at Cardiff and Ruthin. The agency will continue to occupy its other offices when it is established and no decisions will be taken on its longer-term office structure until the implications of any changes have been fully considered. I have every confidence that the agency will provide an efficient and high-quality service to all its customers.

Housing for Wales

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what resources will be made available to Housing for Wales to support development in the financial year 1992-93.

Mr. David Hunt: In gross terms the resources available to Housing for Wales will amount to over £123·4 million. Taking account of associated private sector funding, the overall programme will be worth over £174 million next year. Of this, I expect that over £45 million will be devoted to housing in rural areas. Compared to provision over the three years up to and including 1991-92, plans for the next three provide an uplift of over 38 per cent. in cash terms. This means that excluding the likely additional benefit of in-year transfers from local authorities, Housing for Wales' basic annual production target can be raised by over 16 per cent. from 3,000 to 3,500 units. As regards current expenditure, I shall be making available £6 million in 1992-93 to cover the costs of the special needs management allowance scheme which is of particular importance in supporting the housing component of our strategies for the vulnerable groups in Wales. This amounts to a 25 per cent. increase over provision for 1991-92.

ENERGY

Electricity (Theft)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with the chairman of the electricity companies about the levels of theft of electricity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairmen from time to time and we discuss a range of issues.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what research his Department is funding into the development of technology to reduce the level of theft of electricity in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None. Research into the development of technology to reduce the level of theft of electrictity is a matter for electricity supply companies.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to introduce increased penalties for the theft of electricity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply. We have no plans to increase the maximum penalty of five years imprisonment for the offence of abstracting electricity.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secetary of State for Energy what estimates he has made of the cost, including both surveying costs and loss of generating capacity, of the submission of the revised safety case by Nuclear Electric to the nuclear installations inspectorate.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This is a commercial matter for Nuclear Electric plc.

Nuclear Facilities (Decommissioning)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what studies have been commissioned by Her Majesty's Government into appraising the costs and economics of decommissioning nuclear facilities.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Department has commissioned three studies into the economic aspects of decommissioning nuclear facilities.

For the study by Nuclear Services Group into British Nuclear Fuel plc's estimates of its decommissioning costs I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 15 February 1990 at column 329.

The other studies were carried out by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority into the Central Electricity Generating Board estimates of its decommissioning costs and by Ernst and Young to compare the methodologies by which BNFL, CEGB and the South of Scotland Electricity Board's decommissioning provisions were made to ensure consistency of basis.

The contents of these reports are commercially confidential.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when Her Majesty's Government expect to finalise their decision on the proposal by Nuclear Electric to establish a deferred safe store for some categories of nuclear waste.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government are currently considering Nuclear Electric's decommissioning proposals. I am unable to predict when this will be completed.

DEFENCE

Truck Cargo Vehicles

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the contract for the truck cargo heavy duty vehicles on order for his Department was signed; with which company it was signed; and what is the expected delivery date of these vehicles.

Mr. Alan Clark: A contract was placed with Brown and Root Vickers Ltd. in March 1988. Deliveries will be completed by the end of the next financial year.

Military Nuclear Programme

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether safeguarded uranium has ever been used to fuel the military reactors at Calder Hall and Chapelcross.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The reactors have not been fuelled by safeguarded uranium.

Mr. Cohen: to ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the last date that uranium originating from (a) South Africa and (b) Namibia was delivered to the United Kingdom, in any form, for use in the military nuclear programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is not our normal practice to give details of the procurement arrangements for our nuclear programme.

Nuclear Weapons Safety

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies have been commissioned by his Department in the last 10 years on nuclear weapons safety.

Mr. Alan Clark: The safety of our nuclear weapons is kept under continuous review.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what secretarial and administrative support is being given to the nuclear weapons safety review;

(2) what is the total budget for his Department's review of nuclear weapons safety.

Mr. Alan Clark: The working group on nuclear weapons safety is being given whatever resources and support it requires in order to carry out its task.

M25 (Incident)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the incident involving vehicles belonging to his Department near junction 21 of the M25 on 1 December.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A section of the motorway between junctions 19 and 21 on the M25 was closed by the local civil police using normal police powers after a vehicle in a MOD convoy suffered a mechanical breakdown. There was no danger to the public, police or military personnel. The inconvenience caused to other road users is greatly regretted.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the registration number of the vehicle belonging to his Department that was damaged in the incident near junction 21 of the M25 on 1 December.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: For security reasons, it is not our practice to disclose the registration numbers of military vehicles.

Atomic Co-ordinating Office, Washington

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the role and function of the atomic co-ordinating office, Washington; how many personnel are assigned to it; what is its annual budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The role and function of the atomic co-ordinating office, Washington, is to ensure UK/US compliance with arrangements laid down in the 1958 "Agreement between the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Government of the United States of America for Co-operation on the Uses of Atomic Energy for Mutual Defence Purposes", the terms of which are laid out in Cmnd 537. Six personnel are presently assigned to this office. It is not our practice to disclose the annual budgets of individual units.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there has been any break in the deterrent patrol since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many man days work have been carried out in inspection, repair and safety work on decommissioned nuclear-powered submarines in each year since 1983.

Mr. Alan Clark: To date only HMS Dreadnought is fully decommissioned. She is closely monitored to ensure her continued radiological safety and approximately 3,500 man days have so far been spent on inspection, repair and safety work since her removal from service in 1982.

Aldermaston

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date construction work on the A90 building at AWE Aldermaston commenced.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Construction work on the A90 building at AWE started in March 1983.

Nuclear Test Ban Treaty

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual expenditure committed by his Department to resolving outstanding problems of verification of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The most important verification technology is seismology. Government expenditure on unclassified work in this area for the current year is £1·5 million. The Government also undertake classified work in related areas, details of which cannot be revealed on grounds of national security.

Army Units (Operating Costs)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has anything to add to his answer of 15 November, Official Report, column 703, on operating costs of Army units.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No, other than to note that the Official Report contains a typographical error: the estimated annual operating cost of a TA infantry battalion in the United Kingdom for 1991-92 is £2 million.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what impact his announcement of the cessation of routine carriage of tactical nuclear weapons on Royal Navy ships will have on his policy of neither confirming nor denying the presence of nuclear weapons on those vessels.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Secretary of State announced in September that our ships will no longer carry tactical nuclear weapons in normal circumstances. It remains the Government's policy neither to confirm nor to deny the presence of nuclear weapons in specific locations at specific times.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to make public details of correspondence sent to his Department critical of nuclear weapons in cases where the authors make explicit their willingness for such disclosure.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Armoured Vehicles

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to complete his review of the quantity of armoured personnel carriers and heavy armoured combat vehicles that he plans to deploy by 1995.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I expect the key elements of the review of armoured personnel carrier and heavy armoured combat vehicle numbers to be completed shortly.

Defence Budget

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what change he is considering in his policy on the release of information relating to the long-term costings of the defence budget.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Housing

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what communications have taken place with the Association of District Councils regarding the provision of housing for ex-service personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces has written to Lady Anson, chairman of the Association of District Councils.

Equipment Deployment

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his answer of 3 December, Official Report, column 88, on future defence equipment, he will state the types of main battle tanks, armoured infantry fighting vehicles, artillery pieces, combat aircraft, and attack helicopters that he plans to deploy by 1995.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The types of equipment covered by my answer of 3 December at column 88 are:

	Equipment
AIFV	Certain variants of Warrior
Artillery pieces	MLRS, 155 mm AS90 (replacing M109), 155 mm FH70 and 105 mm Light Gun
Combat aircraft	Canberra, Harrier, Jaguar, Tornado ADV and Tornado IDS
Attack helicopters	Lynx/TOW, Lynx/LBH, Gazelle and Scout

By 1995 our plans envisage the deployment of variants of Chieftain, Challenger 1 and Challenger 2.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the number and type of transport helicopter, anti-aircraft missile systems, anti-tank missile systems and transport vehicles currently deployed with the Army and the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The RAF currently deploys the following transport helicopters:

	Number
Gazelle	29
Chinook	32
Wessex	50
Puma	42

Army Lynx, Gazelle and Scout helicopters also serve in a transport role as necessary.

There are three air defence missile systems, Blowpipe, Javelin and Rapier, currently in service with regular and TA air defence regiments and the RAF regiment. There are three anti-tank missile systems, Milan, Swingfire and TOW, in service with the Army, the first with all regular infantry and Ghurka battalions, and TA infantry battalions committed to NATO roles; the second with regular medium reconnaissance regiments; the third with the Army Air Corps.

Both services employ large and varied fleets of transport and logistic vehicles, the numbers for which could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Quality Assurance Unit

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the relocation of the quality assurance unit to Stockton.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My Department announced on 6 August that the "Options for Change" reductions had made it necessary to review the plan announced in 1989 to relocate the Ministry of Defence's quality assurance staff to the Preston Farm site on Teesside. Our studies will be completed as quickly as possible.

"Options for Change"

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 3 December, Official Report, columns 84-86, whether he will list the number and rank of service personnel currently deployed at each of the bases which are due to be closed or reorganised as a result of "Options for Change".

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The answer could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Regional Administration

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the restructuring of his Ministry's regional administration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Department has received a number of representations, principally from staff representatives, about the restructuring of its regional administration organisation. It stands by its conclusion that the concentration of grant and subsidy work and other administrative functions at nine regional service centres will significantly improve the cost effectiveness of its operations, including the services it provides to its customers.

Set-aside

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies have been undertaken by his Ministry covering the relative effectiveness of set-aside schemes as against conventional subsidies in connection with the problem of surplus production; and if he will publish them.

Mr. Curry: Set-aside was an integral part of the 1988 package of agricultural stabilisers which introduced important price cuts for arable crops. It would be misleading to assess the 1988 scheme in isolation from this context.

In 1989 the Department commissioned Reading university to undertake a socio-economic evaluation of the set-aside policy. This included a simple comparison of the Exchequer costs of set-aside with the estimated marginal disposal costs saved on production forgone for the first year of the scheme. The study did not seek to assess the effectiveness of the scheme in the light of the wider considerations outlined above.

Reading university will be publishing its findings early next year.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list, in chronological order, the changes, amendments or extensions to the set-aside scheme that have been made since its introduction in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The set-aside scheme was implemented in Great Britain through the Set-Aside Regulations 1988. These regulations have been amended three times.

The main changes introduced by the Set-Aside (Amendment) Regulations 1989 were to

(i) extend the definition of arable crops covered by the scheme

(ii) amend the definition of arable land to allow land in bare fallow to count towards the base area

(iii) permit temporary grassland to be set-aside in certain circumstances

(iv) stipulate that the set-aside area may not exceed the total area of relevant arable land registered for the reference period

(v) add a definition of grazing land

(vi) allow the appropriate Minister to authorise the application of inorganic fertilisers on set-aside land in certain circumstances.

The main changes introduced by the Set-Aside (Amendment) Regulations 1990 were to

(i) introduce a new grazed fallow option

(ii) introduce new environmental management conditions and extend the range of environmental features to be protected under the fallow options and increase the relevant grants to reflect this

(iii) reduce the level of grant payable when more than 100 hectares and more than 75 per cent. of the base area are fallowed

(iv) allow a modest level of flexibility in the amount of land set-aside annually under the rotational fallow option.

The Set-Aside (Amendment) Regulations 1991 amended the definition of less-favoured areas for the purposes of the scheme.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the numbers of landowners in England who are currently receiving annual payments under the set-aside scheme of (a) between £5,000 and £9,999, (b) between £10,000 and £19,999, (c) between £20,000 and £29,999, (d) between £30,000 and £39,999, (e) between £40,000 and £49,000, (f) between £50,000 and £59,999, (g) between £60,000 and £69,999 and (h) £70,000 and over.

Mr. Gummer: For set-aside participants who joined in the first two years of the scheme, the number of set-aside agreements recorded centrally in England is: under £5,000—1,378, and over £5,000—840. The figures break down as follows:

Annual payment	Number of agreements
Less than £5,000	1,378
£5,000—£9,999	444
£10,000—£19,999	267
£20,000—£29,999	76
£30,000—£39,999	25
£40,000—£49,999	15
£50,000—£59,999	3
£60,000—£69,999	4
£70,000 and over	6

These figures include payments to both landowners and tenants. Information on the payments to landowners alone and to participants who joined in the third year of the scheme is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library a standard copy of each of the separate items of correspondence sent from his Department to applicants entering into the set-aside scheme; and if he will ensure that such correspondence includes all letters from initial acknowledgement to final payment.

Mr. Maclean: I have today placed copies of all the standard forms and letters in the Library.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many set-aside schemes have been monitored by (a) aerial survey and (b) ground inspection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: It is not my Department's policy to publish detailed information about its inspection arrangements as this could seriously impede effective enforcement.

A combination of aerial photography and satellite imagery is used to check the base year registration details for a significant proportion of applications each year. In addition the intention is to make a physical inspection of all set-aside land at least once during the course of a five-year agreement. Additional inspections would be carried out where this was judged necessary.

The European Commission is anxious to extend the use of remote sensing as an enforcement mechanism. My Department is currently considering a joint trial with the Commission to assess the scope for using this technique more widely.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will conduct a review into the way in which set-aside applications are processed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Our systems are kept under continual review.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of set-aside applications are monitored and inspected prior to approval; what mechanism is used; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: All set-aside applications are checked to ensure that they have been properly completed and that the proposal to set land aside meets the relevant conditions of the scheme. Physical site inspections, aerial photography and satellite imagery are used as appropriate to confirm that the land concerned is eligible and was down to arable crops in the qualifying base year. In the five-year set-aside scheme, my Department also aims to carry out a physical inspection at least once during the period of the set-aside agreement. Under the temporary one-year set-aside scheme, a proportion of the land entered into the scheme is subject to physical inspection. It would not be appropriate to publish full details of these arrangements as this could seriously impede effective enforcement.

It is my Department's policy to recover grant, in whole or in part, if a deliberate breach of the rules is identified at any stage during the period of a set-aside agreement.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many staff in his Department are working full-time on the effects of ozone depletion on the United Kingdom agricultural crops; and at what grades they are employed.

Mr. Maclean: The duties of a number of Ministry staff are concerned with air pollution issues affecting agricultural crops, although none works exclusively on ozone depletion.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all studies commissioned or undertaken by his Department on the effects of ozone depletion on the United Kingdom agricultural crop yield; and what plans he has for future research.

Mr. Maclean: Against the background of the Department of the Environment's continuing programme of work on the effects of ozone depletion on plants, the Department is considering whether any complementary studies of the effects on agricultural crops would be appropriate.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the National Rivers Authority over proposals to establish a new environmental protection agency.

Mr. Maclean: There have been informal meetings with the NRA, but it would be premature to go further until responses have been received to the Government's consultation paper setting out the background to their plans for an environment agency and the main options for realising them. The NRA has recently put forward its views which will be studied carefully.

Badgers Act 1991

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy not to issue general licences under section 4 of the Badgers Act 1991 to those claiming to be in pursuit of foxes; when he expects to announce his policy on the issue of section 4 licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: There are no powers to issue general licences under section 4 of the Badgers Act 1991. I expect to issue shortly a consultation document setting out our proposals for licensing under section 4 of this Act.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that no licences under section 4 of the Badgers Act 1991 are issued to individuals who have been convicted of any offence of animal cruelty or any offence under wildlife protection legislation or to organisations employing people convicted of such offences.

Mr. Maclean: In deciding whether to issue licences under section 4 of the Badgers Act 1991 account will be taken of any previous convictions under the Protection of Animals Act 1991, the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 and the Badgers Act 1973.

Seafood

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether, in any fishing areas in Britain, consumers are exposed to unsafe doses of radiation through eating seafood.

Mr. Maclean: No.

Pollution Research

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food up to what distance from the United Kingdom coastline his Department monitors the seawater and sediments for radioactive pollution; what contribution his Department makes towards establishing a scientific research base for the European Communities in controlling oceanic and sea pollution; and if he will make a statement on the future of pollution research conducted by his Department.

Mr. Maclean: The Ministry's fisheries radiological inspectorate carries out regular monitoring of seawater and sediments for radioactivity, and the results are published, with maps indicating areas covered, in the annual series of reports entitled "Radioactivity in Surface and Coastal Waters of the British Isles", copies of which are in the Library of the House. In addition to routine monitoring of coastal sediments, we have a full programme of offshore monitoring. Areas covered include the North sea, the Irish sea, Scottish waters, the English channel and the Bristol channel. The Ministry contributes its substantial expertise on marine pollution issues to EC activities in this field. This has included contributions to project MARINA, designed to assess exposure for the EC population to radiation as a consequence of disposals of radioactive waste into member states' waters. The Ministry also collaborates on projects within the EC's radiological protection and marine science and technology programmes. In total we plan to spend some £3·9 million on research and development related to aquatic environment protection in 1992-93. This is in areas such as the impact of riverine inputs, new potential pollutants, the impact of fishing on the marine environment and the relationship between pollution and fish disease, as well as on matters related to radioactivity and nuclear wastes. The programme is closely co-ordinated with that of other countries not only through the EC, but through other international organisations, such as the International Council for the Exploration of the Seas and the North sea task force.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Botswana

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what British aid funds have been used to fund Botswana's wildlife activities since 1 January 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We have funded the salary and most allowances of the deputy director of wildlife since February 1990 at a cost of around £54,500 in the last complete financial year. We are also providing three United Kingdom training awards this academic year at an estimated cost of £26,000.

Following a review of our support to the natural resources sector, we shall be considering with the Government of Botswana an appraisal mission to identify a programme aimed at promoting environmentally sustainable management of livestock and wildlife. This will be pursued at the bilateral aid talks being held on 12 December.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funding is given by Britain directly or indirectly to the deputy director of wildlife in Botswana.

Mrs. Chalker: The salary and most allowances of the deputy director of wildlife in Botswana are funded under the aid programme at a cost of some £54,500 in the last complete financial year.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what studies the Overseas Development Administration has contributed to in respect of the culling of elephants in Botswana.

Mrs. Chalker: We have financed no studies in respect of the culling of elephants in Botswana, but we are financing the salary and most allowances of the deputy director of wildlife, who can be expected to be associated with studies of this subject.

PRIME MINISTER

Council Tax

Mr. Battle: To ask the Prime Minister if he will co-ordinate an examination by the Secretary of State for the Environment and Secretary of State for Social Security of the impact upon claimants in receipt of family credit and disability working allowance, of increasing the taper for the proposed council tax rebates to 20 per cent.; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Such an examination has already taken place. The overall effect on people who receive family credit or disability working allowance will be very small.

Non-ministerial Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 28 November, Official Report, column 614, what is the definition of executive duties used when deciding whether a person is carrying out such duties in a political party.

The Prime Minister: There is no formal definition. The rule is applied by Departments after consideration of the nature of the particular post held.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Investment

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been, at constant 1991-92 prices, the volume of local authority housing investment for each year since 1979-80, giving the outturn figures up to 1990-91 and the estimated figures for 1991-92, by region, and distinguishing new housebuilding, renovation of local authority stock, private sector grants and others.

Mr. Yeo: I have placed a table providing the information requested in the Library.

Homelessness

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what special help is being given by his Department to local authorities to help homeless people now sleeping rough; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: My Department is providing, through Single Homelessness in London, a London boroughs working party, 300 places in shelters between December and March, at an estimated cost of £1 million. SHIL has developed a co-ordinated strategy of emergency shelters, transportation and support for those sleeping rough in central London during the winter.

This programme is part of my Department's £96 million rough sleepers initiative in central London, which has provided 500 places in hostels, with another 400 to come; 500 bedspaces in flats and houses leased from private owners, with a further 180 to come, and 370 places —out of an anticipated 2,000—in permanent housing.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many copies of his departmental planning guidance notes on renewable energy projects have been printed in the first print run; and if he will make it his policy to arrange for the widespread distribution of this document to relevant parties and major public libraries.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 12 December 1991]: My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning announced on 5 December, Official Report, col. 185, the issue for public consultation in England and Wales of draft planning policy guidance about renewable energy. A copy of the consultation paper has been sent to over 300 organisations and individuals, including local authority associations, professional and planning bodies, and conservation and energy organisations, inviting comments by 12 February 1992.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the level of rate support grant/revenue support grant for local authorities for the years 1979-80 to 1992-93 showing (a) the cash figure in £ billion, (b) the percentage of actual local authority expenditure covered by RSG and (c) the sum expressed in constant prices where 1979-80 = 100.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 12 December 1991]: the available information is as follows:

	Rate support grant		Total expenditure		Rate support grant as a percentage of total expenditure
	Cash (£ billion)	1981-82 prices (£ billion)	Cash (£ billion)	1981-82 prices (£ billion)	Per cent.

1991-92	9·7	5·4	36·3	20·2	26·6

Notes:

(1) Rate support grant and revenue support grant are not directly comparable as they derive from two different financial systems.

(2) Total expenditure and net revenue expenditure are not directly comparable as they derive from two different financial systems.

(3) Under the local government finance system introduced in 1990 the level of revenue support grant is affected, inter alia, by the amount of non-domestic rates distributed from the national pool. In 1990-91 and 1991-92 the total amount received by the authorities was £10·4 billion and £12·4 billion respectively (£6·2 billion and £6·9 billion at 1981-82 prices). For comparison in 1989-90, the total income from non-domestic rates was £9·6 billion (£6·2 billion at 1981-82 prices).

(4) In 1991-92 community charge grant is also being paid, amounting to about £4·8 million (£2·7 million at 1981-82 prices).

(5) The 1992-93 provisional revenue support grant settlement is £16·6 billion (£8·9 billion at 1981-82 prices).

(6) Information is not available for years before 1981-82.

TRANSPORT

Light Dues

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those member states of the EC which will be charging light dues after 1991.

Mr. McLoughlin: Within the EEC I believe that only the United Kingdom, Ireland and Greece have systems of light dues; but that Denmark charge their own flag vessels for the use of their Decca radionavigation system. I am unaware of any changes in the position after 1991.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures will be taken against the possibility of outbreaks of fire in the channel tunnel when it is in use.

Mr. Freeman: The matter has recently been covered in the inquiry by the Home Affairs Committee into fire, safety and policing of the channel tunnel. I understand that the Committee will be publishing its report on 19 December 1991 as HC 23.

Merchant Shipping

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals the Government are considering to assist British merchant shipping following the defence review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: A statement on the review of the availability of British flag shipping for defence purposes will be made as soon as that review is complete.

Dock Labour Scheme

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what checks were carried out by his Department with Humberside Holdings Ltd. or Humberside Sea and Land Services Ltd. in relation to the abolition of the dock labour scheme to ensure that compensation payments were made only in accordance with redundancy conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: None. Neither firm was an employer of registered dockworkers.

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the full amounts of compensation recovered under the liquidation arrangements entered into consequent upon the abolition of the dock labour scheme as at 31 July 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: A total of £497,604.

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost to the Tees and Hartlepool port authority of redundancy payments made by the authority under the dock labour scheme covering the years 1989, 1990 and 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The following is the information.

Year	£
1989	2,883,500
1990	304,000
1991	3,163,500

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of the full redundancy costs was borne by his Department in liquidation cases, and for what per cent. of the redundancy payments made on the abolition of the dock labour scheme did they register as non-preferential creditors; what amounts were received from the assets of Lindsey Dock Services Ltd. and John Sutcliffe Consolidated Stevedores Ltd. against redundancy paid by these two companies under the dock labour scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Under the Dock Work (Compensation Payments Scheme) Regulations 1989, the Department meets the full cost of compensation in such cases, and becomes a non-preferential creditor in respect of 50 per cent., representing the employer's share. It has received an interim dividend of £75,712 from the liquidators for Lindsey Dock Services Ltd. and none so far in respect of John Sutcliffe Consolidated Stevedores Ltd.

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many redundancies there were within the Tees and Hartlepool port authority in the years 1989, 1990 and 1991 following the abolition of the dock labour scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The THPA employed 445 registered dockworkers at the time of abolition. Redundancies have been as follows:

	Number
1989	183
1990	18
1991	192

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many redundancies there were within Immingham and Grimsby docks in the years 1989, 1990 and 1991 following the ending of the dock labour scheme; how many registered dock workers were employed by Lindsey Dock Services Ltd. and John Sutcliff Consolidated Stevedores Ltd.; how many jobs were lost on the liquidation of these companies; what was the amount outstanding in severance liabilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: There were 498 redundancies at Grimsby and Immingham in 1989, including the entire workforces of Lindsey Dock Services (106) and John Sutcliffe Consolidated Stevedores (226). Total compensation received by employees of the two firms was £3,028,000 and £7,272,000 respectively. Subsequent redundancies have numbered 24 in 1990 and 10 in 1991.

Bus Services, London

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many routes that have been put out to tender by London Buses Ltd. have been won by private bus operators.

Mr. Freeman: Of London Transport's 529 existing bus routes, 223 have been contracted out by competitive tender; 100 are run by private bus operators, and 123 by London Buses Ltd. Subsidiaries.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what would be the cost of setting up a new bus executive for London.

Mr. Freeman: No estimates have yet been made of the costs involved in setting up a new London bus executive. However, the Government see no reason why the cost of establishing a new executive should be significantly greater or less than the cost of other options canvassed in our consultation paper "A Bus Strategy for London".

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the responses received to his consultation paper, "A Bus Strategy for London", how many responses were received and from whom; what was the proportion supporting and opposing the creation of a new bus executive for London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We received just over 200 official responses to the consultation paper "A Bus Strategy for London". A list of respondents has already been placed in the Library. It is not the Government's intention to publish responses. There was more support amongst respondents for creating a passenger transport authority for London or for designating London Transport as bus authority than there was for the creation of a non-departmental public body. However, with very few exceptions, those who advocated either of the former approaches were also opposed to deregulation. The creation of a new London bus executive will give London a body dedicated to bus activities, without distraction, and without any potential conflict of interest.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Examination Results

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish the analysis of the summer 1991 examination results.

Mr. Eggar: Assuming that schools and LEAs respond promptly and accurately to the survey, the first results should be available for publication in March. Full results should be published around the end of 1992.

School Transport

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average percentage cost of school transport expressed as a total of each education authority's total education budget.

Mr. Fallon: For 1989-90, the latest year for which actual spending information is available, each local education authority's spending on transport from home to school expressed as a percentage of its total net recurrent expenditure on education was as follows:

Home to school transport[1] as a percentage of net recurrent expenditure[2] on education, 1989-90

[1] Local education authorities' costs of their own drivers and vehicles, and their payments in respect of public transport and contract hire, used to transport pupils from home to nursery, primary and secondary schools and to special education schools or other establishments.

[2] Net recurrent expenditure on education includes total expenditure other than costs of financing capital expenditure, less income other than from specific grants.

[3] The percentages are derived from authorities' returns of their spending to the Department of the Environment.

n/a indicates that a return was not received.

Grammar Schools

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the number of maintained grammar schools in England in (a) June 1970, (b) February 1974, (c) May 1979 and (d) the latest available date.

Mr. Eggar: Information relating to the precise dates requested is not available. However, the numbers of maintained grammar schools in England as at January 1970, 1974, 1979 and 1991 are given in the following table.

The 1991 figure (which is provisional) includes grant-maintained grammar schools. Direct grant grammar schools (which ceased to exist as such in 1980) are excluded from the figures for 1970, 1974 and 1979.

Schools (Capital Allocations)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to announce his decision in respect of capital allocation for schools.

Mr. Fallon: We have already announced that £524 million will be allocated for schools buildings for 1992-93, an increase of 11 per cent. over the £472 million allocated in 1991-92. Building grants for voluntary aided schools will also increase to £151 million, a rise of over 15 per cent. on the current year.

My right hon. and learned Friend intends to announce his decisions on the distribution of annual capital guidelines and voluntary aided school capital allocations for 1992-93 to local education authorities before Christmas.

National Curriculum

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a full list of all documents relating to the national curriculum and its amendments by (a) the National Curriculum Council, (b) the School Examinations and Assessment Council and (c) him or his Department, since June 1987.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is in the two tables following. Interim documents which become redundant when subject orders are laid, such as working group reports, subject proposals and draft subject orders, are detailed in table 2.

Adult Education

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of national spending on vocational adult education and the amount spent on leisure adult education in the current year.

Mr. Eggar: In 1989-90, the latest year for which information on actual spending is available, local education authorities' returns indicate that their net recurrent expenditure on adult education centres was £137 million. This includes the cost of self-standing adult education centres and of adult education centres within further education colleges. The £137 million excludes the cost of all other education for adults which further education colleges provide, because this is not separately identified on LEAs' returns. Nor do the returns distinguish between different kinds of education for adults. The Department is currently undertaking a survey to establish the proportion of spending on further education attributable to the courses for adults, including leisure and recreational courses, which under the proposals in the Further and Higher Education Bill (HL) will remain the responsibility of LEAs.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest available figures for the take-up of family credit.

Mr. Jack: The latest information about the number of families taking up family credit is a provisional caseload figure of 353,000 for the end of September 1991. Nearly 700,000 claims have been received since April 1991, more than half of them from new claimants as opposed to those renewing an existing award.

Since April 1988 when the scheme started, over 2·4 million awards have been made.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provision is made for people who are in receipt of invalidity benefit, but not income support, who require special outsize clothing due to their medical condition.

Mr. Scott: There is no provision.

Early Retirement

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to ensure that those over the age of 60 years claiming unemployment benefit do not have to fulfil availability for work criteria if they are not currently working, and have taken early retirement under a recognised early retirement scheme.

Mr. Jack: Unemployment benefit is a short-term contributory benefit for people who are temporarily unemployed. To receive this benefit, a person must be capable of and available for work. He or she must also actively seek work. We have no plans to exempt persons aged 60 or over from these conditions.

However, a person aged 60 or over is not required to be available for work in order to receive income support, or class 1 national insurance credits to maintain their entitlement to sickness benefit and retirement pension.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Schools Inspectorate

Mr. Straw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what reviews of Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools Her Majesty's Treasury has undertaken or participated in since 1979; what was the purpose of each review and its date; and whether it was published.

Mr. Mellor: The Treasury has not undertaken any reviews of its own into Her Majesty's inspectorate since 1979, but one Treasury official did assist with a DES-led grading review in 1989. The review was not published.

Gambling

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list by sector the latest figures for the amounts of revenue derived annually, by way of taxation and other revenues, from all forms of gambling in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 12 December 1991]: In the year ended 31 March 1991 receipts of betting and gaming duties from sectors of the gambling industry were as follows:

	£ million
Off-course betting	479
Pool betting	303
Casino gaming	57
Gaming machines	98
Bingo	67

Value added tax is also chargeable on the net take of gaming machines and on certain fees paid to participate in bingo. It is not possible to calculate the VAT yield from information on VAT returns.

CIVIL SERVICE

Morale

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what proposals he has to improve morale in the civil service.

Mr. Renton: Our aim is to have an efficient, effective and well-motivated civil service. Managers in Departments and agencies continually work to achieve this.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many non-departmental public bodies are currently in existence; and when the annual list of such bodies will be published.

Mr. Renton: On 1 April 1991 there were 375 executive bodies, One more than last year; 874 advisory bodies, 97 less than last year; 64 tribunals, two less than last year; and 131 boards of visitors, three more than last year. In total there were 1,444 non-departmental public bodies—a fall of 95 over last year. Details can be found in "Public Bodies 1991" published today. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

SCOTLAND

Dyslexia

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) primary and (b) post-primary schools in Scotland have a specialist teacher for children suffering from dyslexia.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Learning support teachers, who assist children with specific learning difficulties such as are caused by dyslexia, are employed in schools in Scotland at which such children are pupils. At September 1990, the numbers of teachers with a qualification in learning difficulties employed in primary and secondary schools were 880 and 470 respectively.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what training teachers receive in (a) recognising symptoms of dyslexia in pupils and (b) how to assist pupils who show symptoms of dyslexia.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: All pre-service teacher training courses now contain elements covering special educational needs in which references to dyslexia and its identification are included. The guidelines which determine the content of diploma courses in special educational needs now strongly encourage the inclusion of elements on specific learning difficulty. Specialist courses for teachers on dyslexia are also being developed at Jordanhill college and Moray house. The Scottish Office Education Department has commissioned a research study of policy, practices and provision for children with learning difficulties including dyslexia. This will make recommendations about the content of further training courses in relation to dyslexia and offer specific guidance to teachers of dyslexic children.

Sport

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the allocation of funds from the Foundation for Sport and the Arts to sports facilities in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This is a matter for the foundation to consider. The foundation plans to announce its next tranche of grants in Edinburgh on 20 December and I will be participating in the announcement.

Speech Therapy

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had with the chairmen of health boards about (a) the adequate provision of speech therapists and (b) the recruitment, selection and training of such therapists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer Wednesday 11 December]: A further £2 million has been made available from 1 April next year toward the cost of speech therapy services for children with a formal record of needs. My officials have met the College of Speech Therapists, the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and the Association of Directors of Education, Scotland to discuss this additional allocation. The latest meeting took place on 6 December.

The recruitment and selection of speech therapists is a matter for health boards. As to training, all speech therapy training in Scotland is operated by the higher education sector, which liaises closely with health boards over the curriculum, clinical placements, and other aspects of the course.

Foreign Lottery Tickets

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with the Scottish Sports Council regarding the possible free movement of lottery tickets in the EC post-1992.

Mr. Michel Forsyth [holding answer Thursday 12 December]: I have discussed this matter and others relating to the Scottish Sports Council's support for a national lottery with the chairman and members of the Scottish Sports Council, on a number of occasions. I have confirmed the advice which I have received that the sale of foreign lottery tickets in the United Kingdom can be controlled by domestic law as it stands.

WALES

Executive Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether a group bonus scheme is in operation in each of his Department's executive agencies.

Mr. David Hunt: Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments is currently the Department's only executive agency. At present, no group bonus scheme operates within Cadw although the framework document allows the agency the flexibility to introduce one.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the maximum salary payable to the chief executive of each of his Department's executive agencies, including performance-related element, and the length of time of the chief executive's contract in each case.

Mr. David Hunt: Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments is currently the Department's only executive agency. The maximum salary payable to the chief executive is £46,122 with the possibility of a performance bonus of up to 10 per cent. of that salary. His contract is for three years.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of each of his Department's executive agencies; and whether the cost was borne by the parent Department or the new agency.

Mr. David Hunt: Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments is currently the Department's only executive agency. Cadw was launched as an agency on 1 April 1991 at a cost of £321 borne by the new agency.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many staff were in post on the date that each of his Department's executive agencies were established; and how many staff are in post now, in each case.

Mr. David Hunt: Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments is currently the Department's only executive agency. There were 235 staff in post in Cadw when it was established. At present, there are 250·5 staff in post.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the post, grade and maximum salary payable including performance-related elements, in each case where appointments from the private sector have been made to his Department's executive agencies at grade 7 or above, since their establishment.

Mr. David Hunt: Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments is currently the Department's only executive agency. Only one appointment, at grade 6 level, has been made to Cadw through open competition. The maximum salary payable including performance pay in this case is £41,120. Another appointment at grade 7 level is being processed.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the quality of service performance indicators adopted by each of his Department's executive agencies since their establishment; and separately identify those quality of service performance indicators already operative prior to agency status.

Mr. David Hunt: Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments is currently the Department's only executive agency. Indicators of Cadw's performance and targets for the agency's first year were announced in March 1991.

These all covered similar ground to those operative before agency status.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the first degree obtained by the chief executive of each of his Department's executive agencies; and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded.

Mr. David Hunt: Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments is currently the Department's only executive agency. Cadw's chief executive's first degree is in English, archaeology and anthropology. It was awarded by Cambridge university.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those new facilities for staff including nurseries and health care schemes which have been introduced in each of his Department's executive agencies since their establishment.

Mr. David Hunt: Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments is currently the Department's only executive agency. Cadw staff have access to the Cardiff civil service nursery which opened in August 1991. No other new facilities for staff have been introduced since the formation of the agency.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the last annual report for each of his Department's executive agencies was published; and when the next one is due.

Mr. David Hunt: Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments is currently the Department's only executive agency. The agency was launched on 1 April 1991 and its first annual report will be published in July 1992.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the new forms of alternative working patterns introduced into each of his Department's executive agencies since their establishment; and provide a breakdown by grade of the numbers of staff taking up each new working pattern for each new agency.

Mr. David Hunt: Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments is currently the Department's only executive agency. There have been no new forms of alternative working patterns introduced into the agency since its establishment.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the change in manufacturing output in Wales since 1978.

Mr. David Hunt: According to the Welsh index of production and construction, manufacturing output for the second quarter of 1991 was at a level of 29·0 per cent. higher than the average quarterly value for 1978.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many letters he has received to date concerning the groundwater side-effects of the proposed Cardiff Bay barrage as part of his public consultation exercise.

Mr. David Hunt: Since the public consultation exercise was launched on 25 September I have received 114 letters about groundwater related matters.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 4 December, Official Report, column 136, whether any part of his recent allocation of £22 million of additional grant-in-aid to the Cardiff Bay Development Corporation is earmarked for the acquisition of or rearrangement of the water abstraction rights of Associated British Ports at Blackweir from the River Taff for the purpose of complying with his written undertaking to the National Rivers Authority to secure their right to control river flow into the impoundment behind the proposed Cardiff Bay barrage during periods of drought; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The additional allocation of £22 million to the grant-in-aid planned for the development corporation in 1993-94 and 1994-95 is to support the construction of Cardiff bay barrage. The detailed breakdown of the corporation's budget between different activities is determined in the months leading up to the financial year in question.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Hearing Therapists

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many hearing therapists were employed in each of the health and social services boards in each of the years from 1 April 1981 to 31 March 1991;

(2) how many hearing therapists are currently employed in each of the health and social services boards.

Mr. Hanley: There are two hearing therapists working in Northern Ireland at present—one in the Eastern board, appointed throughout 1981 to date and one in the Southern board, appointed in 1991. The Eastern board is in the process of appointing three additional trainee hearing therapists. The Northern board is examining the need to employ this grade.

Social Security

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many persons have been granted loans from the social fund; what was the total amount paid out during the last financial year; and what was the comparable amount in previous years;

(2) how many homeless are in receipt of income support in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: Social security operational matters are the responsibility of Mr. Alec Wylie, chief executive of the Social Security Agency. He will write to the hon. Gentleman and copies of his reply will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Family Credit

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many single parents are in receipt of family credit in the Province.

Mr. Hanley: Social security operational matters are the responsibility of Mr. Alec Wylie, chief executive of the Social Security Agency. He will write to the hon. Gentleman regarding the number of single parents in receipt of family credit in the Province and copies of his reply will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Disabled People (Benefit)

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what improvements he plans to make in benefit for disabled people.

Mr. Hanley: From April 1992, the Disability Living Allowance and Disability Working Allowance (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 introduces two new social security benefits for disabled people in Northern Ireland at the same time as these benefits are introduced for the rest of the United Kingdom.

The new disability working allowance will be payable to disabled people in employment who have a reduced work capacity because of their disability. This will be the first benefit in this country specifically intended to help disabled people to work even if their earning capacity is reduced.

The new disability living allowance will be both tax free and non-income related. For people disabled before the age of 65, it will replace and extend the help with the extra costs of disability currently available through attendance allowance and mobility allowance.

The order also provides for an improved claims and adjudication system for disability living allowance and attendance allowance for people over 65.

Set-aside Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many farmers have received payment under the set-aside scheme, for each year since 1988, in each county in Northern Ireland for (a) horse-based activities, (b) golf courses, (c) game cover for commercial shoots, (d) sports grounds, (e) other recreational facilities and (f) other; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The number of farmers receiving payment in Northern Ireland since 1988 by county and by enterprise is set out in the table.

	Antrim	Armagh	Down	Fermanagh	Londonderry	Tyrone

Uptake in Northern Ireland has been very limited, of a total arable area of 64·949 hectares only 331 hectares, which representing 0·5 per cent. of the total area, have been set aside in the first 3 years of the scheme.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the numbers of landowners in Northern Ireland that are currently receiving annual payments under the set-aside scheme of (a) between £5,000 and £9,999, (b) between £10,000 and £19,999, (c) between £20,000 and £29,999, (d) between £30,000 and £39,999, (e) between £40,000 and £49,999, (f) between £50,000 and £59,999, (g) between £60,000 and £69,999 and (h) £70,000 and over.

Mr. Hanley: No farmers or landowners in Northern Ireland receive payments above £5,000 per year. Twenty-six farmers are in receipt of payments of up to £4,999.

Dr. David Clark: to ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the figures for each county in Northern Ireland for each year since 1988 of (a) the number of serious irregularities of the set-aside scheme, (b) the number of minor breaches of the scheme and (c) the number of cases where payments were withheld in full or in part; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: There have been no serious irregularities connected with the scheme in Northern Ireland. One minor breach resulted in a part-payment being withheld. The low level of uptake has made it possible to check all applications and claims for payment.

EMPLOYMENT

Baynards House

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the lease of Baynards house expires; and what consideration is being given by the Government to terminating it and relocating those employed there to Bootle or a new London office.

Mr. Forth: The lease to Baynards house expires on 24 March 1994. The Health and Safety Executive is currently considering a range of options for accommodating its London headquarters after that date.

Dock Labour Scheme

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what assessment he has made of the impact on the efficiency and reliability of the ports industry of the abolition of the dock labour scheme;

(2) when he proposes to publish a report on the effectiveness of the abolition of the dock labour scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The results of an initial assessment of the effects of abolition were published in an article in the July 1990 issue of the Employment Gazette. Further assessment had to wait until the effects of abolition of the scheme had fully worked themselves through the port industry. Earlier this year my right hon. and learned Friends the Secretarys of State for Transport and Employment commissioned MDS-Transmodal and Pieda plc to carry out a more comprehensive study to assess the economic effects of abolition of the dock scheme and to examine the extent to which abolition had met its objectives. Changes in efficiency, reliability and quality of service will necessarily be examined.

The final report is expected to be completed about the end of next year. I would expect the main findings to be published shortly afterwards.

EC Directives

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in rank order the members of the European Community by the number of directives in the social affairs field which each country has implemented; what these directives are; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The tables give the required information, first on the implementation records of each member state for the directives so far required to be implemented in the social field; and, secondly, on the subjects of those directives. I shall write to my hon. Friend giving more detailed information on the record of member states on each individual directive.

The United Kingdom's exemplary record is proof of its commitment to a social dimension for the European Community. The Government accordingly welcome the agreement at Maastricht to amend the treaty of Rome to strengthen compliance with Community obligations by giving the European Court of Justice the power to impose financial penalties on member states which have failed to comply with its judgments.

Member States' Record of Implementation

Of the 18 directives in the social field currently required to be implemented and their implementation notified to the European Commission, the record of member states is as follows.

	Number
United Kingdom	18
Germany	18

France	16
Greece	16
Portugal	[1]15
Denmark	[1]15
Belgium	15
Netherlands	15
Luxembourg	13
Italy	11

[1] Out of 17.

Note: Ireland, Portugal and Denmark have either derogations from one of the directives, or a delayed implementation date.

Holloway Prison

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what action is being taken with respect to the three senior staff of the prison medical services whose conduct was criticised in the special report made to him in April 1991 by the board of visitors of Holloway prison; and if he will make a statement;

Mrs. Rumbold: I will write to the hon. Member.

Prison Medical Services

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to improve the manner in which the prison medical services respond to representations on matters of concern from boards of prison visitors.

Mrs. Rumbold: Heads of all prison service headquarters divisions and directorates, including the director of prison medical services, were recently reminded of the importance of acknowledging and dealing expeditiously with letters from boards of visitors. I am assured by the medical director that she and senior members of her staff are mindful of the need to apply this principle to all communications from boards and that it is reflected in recently introduced administrative arrangements for dealing with such communications.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what guidelines exist to govern the medical treatment of mothers with children and pregnant women in prison who are suffering from infectious diseases;

(2) if he will establish an inquiry independent of the prison medical services to establish guidelines for the medical treatment of mothers with children and pregnant women in prison who are suffering from infectious diseases.

Mrs. Rumbold: Prison medical officers are statutorily responsible for the health care of prisoners in their charge. As registered medical practitioners they enjoy clinical independence; and they have unfettered freedom to call upon such specialist advice as they consider necessary. The director of prison medical services has issued no guidance to medical officers relating specifically to the treatment of pregnant women or mothers and babies with infectious disease. This is one of the clinical areas to be considered in a review of hepatitis B policy which is being undertaken in consultation with the Department of Health.

Operation Container

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he expects to be able to end Operation Container; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what recent representations he has received regarding Operation Container; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have received representations about prisoners in police cells in the Manchester area from the Greater Manchester police authority, from hon. Members and others. There is a countrywide shortage of prison accommodation, but I acknowledge that there is a particular problem in the Greater Manchester area. This is because 600 cells in Manchester prison which were damaged in the disturbances last year cannot be brought back into use before 1993. I visited Manchester on 9 December and saw Operation Container at first hand. I was able to meet the deputy chief constable and representatives of the police authority. I also visited the central detention centre and two divisional police stations and spoke to police officers directly involved in the work, and to some of the prisoners themselves. My visit reinforced my view that this use of police cells is unacceptable. My right hon. Friend and I are determined that it should be brought to an end in the shortest possible time.

Some important steps have already been taken to provide additional prison accommodation. The roles of three young offender establishments have been changed to adult use and new accommodation is being opened as quickly as possible.

There are six new prisons opening in 1991-92 providing nearly 3,800 places and a further six establishments, providing some 3,200 places due to open in 1992-93. Work is also in hand to determine whether any refurbishment projects at existing establishments could be postponed. In addition, I am considering whether it would be feasible to find emergency accommodation which could be brought into use to give relief in the north-west.

Probation Service

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the code of professional conduct which serves to guide probation officers in their dealings with the general public.

Mr. John Patten: The professional conduct of probation officers is a matter for the employing probation committee. It has therefore not been considered necessary for the Home Office to issue such guidance.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines he has issued concerning the relationships between probation committees and the probation service.

Mr. John Patten: Under paragraphs 2 and 3 of schedule 3 to the Powers of Criminal Courts Act 1973 a probation committee is a body corporate responsible for the running of the probation service in a probation area. The constitution and duties of probation committees are set out in parts II and III of the Probation Rules 1984, as amended. Under section 74 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 the Secretary of State may make an order requiring a probation committee to carry out any of its statutory duties if it is in default. The decision document "Organising Supervision and Punishment in the Community" published by HMSO in 1991 puts forward proposals for reorganising the probation service to increase its efficiency and effectiveness, including reshaping the role of probation committees. These proposals are currently under discussion with the probation service and others.

Bail Hostels

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the Government's policy concerning the maximum desirable size of any new bail hostel, having regard to the ability of the local probation service to supervise both the conduct of bailees and the interaction between bailees.

Mr. John Patten: The maximum desirable size of a new bail hostel is determined by practical considerations such as the demand for places. These considerations have led to hostels of different size in different localities and the largest currently offers 32 places.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to monitor and evaluate the bail hostel expansion programme and its effects upon the host areas.

Mr. John Patten: A thematic inspection of bail hostels will be carried out by Her Majesty's inspectorate of probation in 1992. This will examine local management and regimes including supervision arrangements.

There are no plans to monitor or evaluate centrally any effects on host areas. However, rule 18(1)(b) of the Approved Probation Hostel and Home and Bail Hostel Rules 1976 requires that a log book is kept in which every event of importance connected with the hostel is entered. Rule 18(2) requires that the log book shall be laid before the managing committee at each of their meetings. This identifies any incidents within the local community. Managers are encouraged to invite local residents to sit on the management committee.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the experience necessary for a member of the probation service to set up and run a bail hostel.

Mr. John Patten: Bail hostels managed by the probation service are normally run by a senior probation officer warden, but someone with equivalent qualifications and/or experience would not be excluded. Oversight is provided by an assistant chief probation officer who is accountable through the area chief probation officer to the local probation committee.

Currently there is one bail hostel managed by a voluntary managing committee. The warden is a senior probation officer seconded from the local probation service. A senior member of the probation service also sits on the voluntary managing committee.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much each county probation service is paid for the accommodation of each bailee in a bail hostel, per night, per occupant; and what are the numbers overall.

Mr. John Patten: The most recently available information is that in 1989-90 each approved hostel, including bail hostels, was able to charge residents up to £5·66 per night and probation committees £6·20 per night as a local authority flat rate payment. The Home Office revenue contribution per approved hostel place is not separately identified according to the type of resident, but the average grant paid per resident night for 1989-90 was £20·36.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average operating cost per occupied place for the bail hostel system compared with the average operating cost per occupied place for the prison system.

Mr. John Patten: On the most recently available information the average annual running cost of an occupied place in bail and probation/bail hostels to the Home Office and local authorities in 1989-90 was £9,696.

The average operating cost per inmate for local prisons and remand centres in 1989-90 was £16,068.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the effect of the Children Act 1989 upon the long-term policy of the Home Office relating to bail hostels.

Mr. John Patten: None. The Children Act does not contain provisions bearing upon the occupancy of bail hostels.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what level of Home Office funding was given to Shropshire probation service for the services of a management consultancy involved in the Twyford house application for change of use to a bail hostel.

Mr. John Patten: So far £2,722·50 has been approved as payment for work undertaken by architects, up to 30 September 1991, in respect of the application for the change of use of Twyford house to a bail hostel.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list staffing levels and the numbers of residents in all existing bail hostels.

Mr. John Patten: The levels of supervisory staff and the numbers of places in existing bail hostels are as shown in the table.

Bail

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the amounts of public funds allocated to bail information schemes.

Mr. John Patten: With effect from April 1992 probation service expenditure will be cash limited and areas will receive hypothecated grant for bail information schemes. The level of hypothecated grant for each probation area in 1992-93 is shown in the table. Expenditure on bail information schemes was not separately identified prior to 1992-93.

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the definition of low and high risk bailees; and what information sources magistrates have available to them in order to decide whether or not to remand in custody or on bail.

Mr. John Patten: There is no such definition. Relevant information is provided to magistrates by the Crown prosecutor and the defendant or a legal representative. Magistrates may also call for information from court duty probation officers, police officers, sureties and others.

Police Manpower

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what calculations were made to allow for demographic and other trends since 1981 to ensure that the use of census figures on unemployment accurately reflected the current situation in communities within the South Wales police area;

(2) if he will give the figures and percentages for unemployment in the South Wales police area (a) given by the Government at the time of the 1991 census, (b) given in the census reports and (c) given by the Government at the time of his Department's recent review of police manpower and describe the extent to which these figures were taken into consideration in the review;

(3) if he will give the specific figures and percentages of unemployment (a) in the South Wales police area and (b) in each district within the South Wales police area which were taken into consideration in arriving at a formula figure for police manpower needs in the South Wales constabulary during the course of his Department's recent review of police manpower;

(4) if he will list the figures for single-parent families (a) in the South Wales police area and (b) in each district within the South Wales police area which were taken into account in constructing the index figure in the formula used in the recent Home Office review of police manpower;

(5) what assumptions were made about the increase in the number of single-parent families in the South Wales police area over the last 10 years to ensure that accurate assumptions were being made on this matter during the recent Home Office review of police manpower.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I will write to the hon. Member.

Police Vehicles (Fatal Accidents)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide details on the number of fatal accidents involving motor vehicles driven by police in the course of their duties for the most recent 12-month periods for which statistics are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In the year ending 31 December 1990 outside the Metropolitan police district there were 17 civilian fatalities. These fatalities arose in the course of either police pursuits or responses to emergency calls. The figures do not show the number of accidents in which fatalities occurred.

In the same period in the Metropolitan police district there were six civilian and one police officer fatalities.

Motor Insurance

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what figures are available to show the number of people without motor insurance in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: In 1989 there were 210,551 findings of guilt at all courts in England and Wales for the offence of using a motor vehicle uninsured against third party risks. Further information is contained in the Home Office publication, "Offences relating to motor vehicles England and Wales 1989, Supplementary tables", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what checks are made to ensure that all who drive carry the requisite motor insurance.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Police officers may check insurance details, along with other driver documents, when stopping vehicles and when investigating road traffic accidents or offences. If the driver concerned does not have evidence of insurance with him at the time, he is required under section 165 of the Road Traffic Act 1988 to produce it within seven days at a police station. Failure to produce the evidence within that period is an offence.

Asylum Bill

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which organisations and individuals have made submissions concerning the Asylum Bill; and whether he will place copies of the major submissions in the Library.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since July we have received representations from various organisations concerning the Asylum Bill. These include Amnesty International, Asylum Rights Campaign, Charter '87, citizens advice bureaux, church groups, the Council for Racial Equality, the General Council of the Bar, Justice, the Refugee Council and UNHCR. We have also received approximately 1000 letters from members of the Refugee Council and UNHCR. We have also received approximately 1,000 letters from members of the public many of whom are members of one of the above-named organisations and who have submitted pro-forma letters.

I have no plans to place items of correspondence in the Library.

HEALTH

Visual Handicap

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration he has given to the recent survey of the Royal National Institute for the Blind concerning provision for the needs of the blind; if he is proposing any new measures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris), on 11 December at column 448.

Executive Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the quality of service performance indicators adopted by each of his Department's executive agencies since their establishment and separately identify those quality service performance indicators already operative prior to agency status.

Mr. Dorrell: Key quality of service performance indicators have been set for the Department's executive agencies as follows:

NHS Estate Management and Health Building Agency (NHS Estates)

—Delivery on time of contracts by number and value.

—Other quality of service indicators will be set to cover the level of NHS and other customer requirements and quality assurance systems to define and maintain high quality product and service standards. The quality of service will be reviewed periodically with those customers.

Before the establishment of NHS Estates, the estates directorate of the Department of Health was working to meet a number of objectives of which the key was to promote effectiveness, efficiency and economy in the NHS estate.

Medicines Control Agency (MCA)

Safety and Quality:

—Rate of response to reports and enquiries about adverse drug reactions.

—Number and frequency of inspection of manufacturers.

—Introduction of quality control processes.

Standard of Service:

—Waiting time from receipt of paid up abridged licences to start of professional assessments.

—Assessment time for abridges product licence applications.

—Assessment time for all new active substance licence applications.

Although the MCA has always sought to improve standards and efficiency, quality of service indicators were not established in this form before 1991-92.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state the first degree obtained by the chief executive of each of his Department's executive agencies and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded.

Mr. Dorrell: The chief executive of the NHS Estate Management and Health Building Agency (NHS Estates) does not hold a degree but is a fellow of the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors.

The first degree obtained by the chief executive of the Medicines Control Agency was a bachelor of medicine/bachelor of surgery from the university of Wales.

Dental Anaesthesia

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, for each year since 1965, the number of children under the age of 16 years who have died in England and Wales while undergoing, or shortly after undergoing, general anaesthesia for dental treatment in (a) dentists' surgeries and (b) hospitals.

Mr. Dorrell: The available information is set out in the table.

Health Authority Chairman

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will announce the name of the new chairman of Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The new chairman of Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale health authority is Mr. William Ashworth, whose term of office runs up to 31 March 1994.

Complementary Therapies

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how he propose to circulate to health authorities, community health councils and family practitioners, his statement on the clarification for the provision of complementary therapies, which he has released in a letter to the hon. Member for Erewash on 3 December;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the clarification on the provision of complementary therapies through the family practitioner service which he has released in a letter to the hon. Member for Erewash on 3 December.

Mr. Dorrell: The clarification of the position of alternative and complementary therapies within the NHS, given in the letter to my hon. Friend of 3 December, was also publicised in a press release of the same date. Copies of the press release have been sent to each regional health authority. A copy of both the press release and the letter have been placed in the Library.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EC Framework Programme

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions Her Majesty's Government and the European Community have had in relation to full membership for Switzerland of the European Community framework programme.

Mr. Leigh: Under the provisions of the European economic area treaty between the EC and EFTA which I hope will be signed shortly, all EFTA countries, including Switzerland, will be eligible to participate fully in the EC's research and development framework programme with effect from 1 January 1993. This will build on existing EFTA participation in individual EC R and D projects and programmes.

DEFENCE

Executive Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what bonus scheme is in operation in the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, the Defence Research Agency, the Directorate General of Defence Accounts, the Hydrographic Office, the Meteorological Office, the Military Survey, Royal Air Force Maintenance and Service Children's Schools (NWE); and if he will state for each the cash amount per person awarded in the last year for which figures are available, and the conditions attached to its award.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The executive agencies and defence support agencies can participate in the special bonus scheme in operation in the Ministry of Defence. As participation is a matter for chief executives, I have asked the chief executives to write to the hon. Member about their use of this scheme and any others that they may have introduced in their particular agency.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the quality of service performance indicators adopted by Service Children's Schools (NWE), Royal Air Force Maintenance, the Military Survey, the Meteorological Office, the Hydrographic Office, the Directorate General of Defence Accounts, the Defence Research Agency and the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment since their establishment as executive agencies; and separately indentify for each those quality of service performance indicators already operative prior to agency status.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Quality of service performance indicators are included among the key targets which were set out when the individual agencies were established. I refer the hon. Member to the following Hansard entries:

Executive/Defence Support Agency	Hansard
Service Children's Schools (NWE)	23 April 1991, Column 380
Royal Air Force Maintenance	28 March 1991, Column 570-571
Military Survey	27 March 1991, Column 479-480
Hydrographic Office	25 July 1991, Column 935
Directorate General of Defence Accounts	23 April 1991, Column 379-380
Defence Research Agency	26 March 1991, Column 401
Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment	26 March 1991, Column 397-399

The key targets for the Meteorological Office, which were set out in Hansard, column 443-44 of 2 April 1990, have been refined since the establishment of this organisation as an executive agency. Current targets for the period 1992-97 which concern quality of service are as follows:

(a) To increase efficiency by an average of 3 per cent. per annum during the period, to be achieved through required improvements in quality of service, increased service volumes and reduced unit costs.

(b) To reduce by 15 per cent. cumulatively the standard error of 48-hour forecasts of mid-tropospheric pressure fields over the north Atlantic and north-west Europe.

(c) To provide authoritative advice on climate change issues to Ministers and the general public.

In overall terms there were no such formal targets in existence before the individual agencies were established, although most of the elements of performance review were included in departmental plans.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the new forms of alternative working patterns introduced into the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, the Defence Research Agency, the Directorate General of Defence Accounts, the Hydrographic Office, the Meteorological Office, the Military Survey, Royal Air Force Maintenance and Service Children's Schools (NWE), since their establishment as executive agencies; and provide for each a breakdown by grade of the numbers of staff taking up each new working pattern.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: This a matter for the chief executives of the executive agencies and defence support agencies. I have asked them to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the first degree obtained by the chief executive, along with the university or polytechnic from which it was awarded, of each of the agencies in his Departments.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: This is a personal matter for the chief executives of the executive agencies and defence support agencies. I have asked them to consider this question and write to the hon. Member as appropriate.

Submarines

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the decision was taken to place all four Upholder class submarines in dry dock for repair; whether all four vessels will be dry-docked simultaneously; what is the expected timescale and cost of the repair work; and what is the total cost so far of the Upholder programme.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The arrangements for docking Upholder class submarines in order to correct a design fault in the submarines weapon handling and discharge system were decided in March 1990. The modification work necessarily involves placing the submarines in dry dock. Only three vessels will need to be modified; the fourth will be built to the modified design. They will not all be docked simultaneously. HMS Upholder will be docked early in 1992 and is due to be completed by the end of that year. HMS Unseen and Ursula are both due to be docked in early 1993 and should be completed by the end of that year. The cost of the modification work is between £7 million and £9 million. The total cost of the Upholder programme is expected to remain within the figure shown in table 3.2 of volume 2 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1991.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what additional facilities are planned at Rosyth to support the sea trials of the Vanguard class submarines.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No additional facilities are being provided at Rosyth solely to support the Vanguard class submarine sea trials. The docking facility (RD46) currently under construction is for use throughout the operational life of the Vanguard class submarine and could be used during sea trials if necessary.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on future plans for the British underwater test and evaluation centre.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A study is being carried out into the value for money aspects of the British underwater test and evaluation centre. This study is a precursor to a wider-ranging review of Ministry of Defence test and evaluation facilities generally. Until that review is completed, I cannot comment on the future plans for any individual establishment.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the in-service dates of (a) Tigerfish Mod. 0, (b) Tigerfish Mod. 1 and (c) Tigerfish Mod. 2; whether each variant is still in service; and what changes have been made to (i) the planned role of each variant, (ii) design requirements for each variant, as issued to contractors and (iii) numbers of each variant ordered.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The in-service dates for the three Tigerfish torpedo variants were: Mod 0—1974; Mod 1—1980; Mod 2—1986. All current in-service Tigerfish torpedoes have been upgraded to Mod 2 standard. The Mod 0 was an anti-submarine weapon. The Mod 1 version added an anti-surface capability and the Mod 2 was the result of a consolidation programme to overcome technical shortcomings with the weapon. Appropriate design specification changes were issued to the prime contractor. Three hundred and sixty Mod 0 torpedoes and 300 Mod 1 torpedoes, including Mod 0s converted to Mod 1s, were ordered. Mod 2 torpedoes are conversions from the earlier Mod 0s and Mod 1s.

Territorial Army (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will review the proposed changes in the Territorial Army in Northern Ireland so as to ensure that the Province does not bear an unfair share of the cuts.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 10 December, Official Report, column 733. In reaching this position a wide range of factors were taken into account. Territorial balance was one consideration but, in reconciling the differing interests, decisions were taken in the context of the TA as a whole.

Defence Establishments

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in his review of defence establishments; and when he expects to make an announcement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The review of defence establishments is an ongoing process which involves a number of studies producing results to varying timescales. Announcements of decisions are made as and when appropriate.

ENERGY

"Making a Corporate Commitment"

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what response he has received from his campaign "Making a Corporate Commitment"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: The objective of the "Making a Corporate Commitment" campaign is to promote investment in energy efficiency by increasing the number of companies with formal management arrangements, including targets for energy savings, and by providing these companies with targeted information on energy efficiency.

I am encouraged by the response to the campaign. To date over 350 companies have requested details and 67 companies have signed the declaration of commitment to responsible energy management, which is the central feature of the campaign. I intend to raise awareness of the campaign in the months ahead through mailshots, seminars, exhibitions, presentation and targeted advertising.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pesticides

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the pesticides advisory committee will report on pentachlorophenol.

Mr. Maclean: Under the EC Marketing and Use Directive restrictions have been placed on the use of pentachlorophenol (PCP) which will be implemented on 1 July 1992 in all member states. The Advisory Committee on Pesticides will be reviewing the remaining uses of PCP early in 1992.

Eggs

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what controls and checks there are on the standard of imported eggs; and in how many cases batches of imported eggs have been found unfit in the last six months.

Mr. Curry: Port health authorities monitor imports of eggs for wholesomeness, including infection by salmonella enteritidis. Information available for the first six months of 1991 shows that six cases of salmonella enteritidis were identified. These have been brought to the attention of the member states concerned.

Executive Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the quality of service performance indicators adopted by each of his Department's executive agencies since their establishment; and separately identify those quality of service performance indicators already operative prior to agency status.

Mr. Gummer: Prior to its becoming an executive agency the Central Veterinary Laboratory's main quality of service performance indicator was peer assessment by external specialists of its research and development; since it achieved agency status the laboratory has continued with the peer review of its R and D, achieved National Measurement Accreditation Service (NAMAS) accreditation and is good laboratory practice (GLP) compliant.

The laboratory also participates in the standardisation programmes and international collaborative assays organised by the World Health Organisation, the International Association of Biological Standardisation and the EC.

The Intervention Board is a separate Department under the European Communities Act 1972. Its quality of service indicators for 1990-91 and 1991-92 are:

Percentage of external trade claims processed within deadlines
Percentage of external trade claims processed correctly
Percentage of payments to storekeepers of intervention stock made within 28 days
Percentage of intervention stock disposed of other than under EC schemes because of deterioration in quality
Percentage of non intervention internal market schemes for which regulatory payment periods are fully met
Percentage of UK accounts submitted within deadline
Percentage of EC accounts submitted within deadline
Percentage of accounts revised after submission
Percentage of guarantee applications dealt with inside 10 days.

All these indicators were in existence in some form prior to agency status, but they have been refined and improved. The agency's targets and performance in 1990-91 have been published in its annual report.

The quality of service indicators have been revised for 1992-93 and will be:

Percentage of all claims processed within deadline.
Percentage of all claims processed correctly.
Percentage of intervention stock disposed of other than under EC schemes because of deterioration in quality.
Percentage of EC accounts submitted within deadline.
Percentage of United Kingdom accounts submitted within deadline.
Percentage of accounts revised after submission.

In answer to a question by my hon. Friend, the Member for Corby, on 16 April 1991 at column 143, I announced the 1991-92 targets for the veterinary medicines directorate. The quality of service performance indicator included in those targets is for 100 per cent. of new licence applications to be issued within 120 clock days. This was operative prior to agency status.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the maximum salary payable to the chief executive of each of his Department's executive agencies, including performance-related element, and the length of time of the chief executive's contract in each case.

Mr. Gummer: The chief executive of the Central Veterinary Laboratory receives the standard civil service pay for grade 3, and is subject to standard civil service terms and conditions including eligibility for performance pay. His contract is for four years.

The appointment of the chief executive of the Intervention Board, which is a separate Department under the European Communities Act 1972, is for three years ending in October 1992. He is paid standard civil service pay at grade 3 plus one discretionary increment under the standard civil service performance pay arrangements gained before his present appointment. He does not participate in civil service performance pay but is eligible for a performance bonus linked to the achievement of predetermined efficiency and quality of service targets, of up to 12·5 per cent. of his salary at the end of the financial year. The maximum payable for 1991-92 would therefore be £52,899.

The chief executive of the veterinary medicines directorate was appointed as director in April 1989 for a period of four years. He is employed as a grade 4 with standard civil service pay, terms and conditions of service and is eligible for performance related pay.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when the last annual report for each of his Department's executive agencies was published; and when the next one is due;

(2) if he will list the post, grade and maximum salary payable, including performance-related element, in each case where appointments from the private sector have been made to his Department's executive agencies at grade 7 or above, since their establishment;

(3) if he will list those new facilities for staff including nurseries and health care schemes which have been introduced in each of his Department's executive agencies since their establishment;

(4) if he will list the new forms of alternative working patterns introduced into each of his Department's executive agencies since their establishment and provide a break-down by grade of the numbers of staff taking up each new working pattern for each new agency;

(5) what was the first degree obtained by the chief executive of each of his Department's executive agencies; and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded;

(6) whether a group bonus scheme is in operation in each of his Department's executive agencies;

(7) how many staff were in post on the date that each of his Department's executive agencies was established; and how many staff are in post now in each case.

Mr. Gummer: This is a matter for the chief executives of the appropriate agencies and they will be writing to the hon. Member shortly.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of each of his Department's executive agencies; and whether the cost was borne by the parent department or the new agency.

Mr. Gummer: The cost of events and publicity surrounding the launch of the Central Veterinary Laboratory as an executive agency was £28,163 of which £25,000 was borne by my Department.

The amount spent by the Intervention Board on events and publicity surrounding its launch as an agency was £8,520. The cost was borne by the agency, which is a separate Department under the European Communities Act 1972.

The cost of events and publicity surrounding the launch of the veterinary medicines directorate as an executive agency was £13,088. This was borne by my Department.

Badgers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he intends to take to ensure that licences issued under section 4 of the Badgers Act 1991 do not lead to indiscriminate violation of badger setts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 12 December.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 28 November, Official Report, column 650, what serious risk was involved in the circumstances which led to the granting of a licence under section 4 of the Badgers Act 1991; if the licence was issued to one named individual only; what conditions he attached to that licence; what action was taken under the licence; what steps he has taken to ensure that the licence conditions were complied with; and if he has yet formulated the criteria under which future licences will be issued.

Mr. Maclean: The licence issued by this Ministry under section 4 of the Badgers Act 1991 permitted a named individual to use exclusion techniques for a period of three weeks to prevent a badger digging into and undermining flood defence banking. This action was necessary in order to prevent the risk of flooding. A full report of action taken will be submitted on completion of the work. The criteria under which future licences will be issued will be decided after the consultation exercise is completed.

Set-aside Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the results of his study of the evaluation of set-aside conducted by the university of Reading.

Mr. Gummer: Reading university will be publishing its findings early next year.

Potatoes

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans there are to change the regime for potatoes in both the EC and the United Kingdom; what stage the proposed changes have reached; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I understand that European Commission officials are working on a proposal for a regime for potatoes to come forward early in 1992. I will await these developments in Brussels before taking up a position on the future of our domestic arrangements.

Civil Servants (Outside Appointments)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the positions of civil servants in his Ministry at grade 3 and above who have taken up appointments in outside organisations in 1991, giving the name of those organisations and giving in each case (a) the level at which their application for approval was considered, and (b) the conditions of approval which were imposed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: It is not Government practice to disclose details of individual applications under the business appointment rules.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held on 11 and 12 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting of the Council accompanied by my hon. Friend, the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry), Parliamentary Secretary in my Department.

The Council completed its first reading of the Commission's proposals for reform of the CAP. I emphasised that proposals should come forward for those sectors not yet covered such as wine, fruit and vegetables and sugar. It was clear that the Council is still some way from agreement and several Ministers pointed out that final decisions could not be taken until the outcome of the GATT round was known. Discussion is now expected to resume under the Portuguese Presidency in January.

The Commissioner reported on developments in the GATT negotiations which seem now to be coming to a climax. I made clear the United Kingdom aim of a lasting, balanced and genuine reform of agricultural policies worldwide.

The Council agreed by a qualified majority an increase in the maximum level of the suckler cow premium, with three member states, including the United Kingdom, voting against. I argued that increased premiums could be justified only by equivalent or greater savings on intervention, which were not proposed.

The Council noted agreement in principle to two directives on plant health. This represents a most satisfactory outcome to a long, difficult negotiation and a significant step towards the single market.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Slovenia and Croatia

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Kingdom will recognise the independence of Slovenia and Croatia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We accept that those Yugoslav republics which desire independence will have it. We have to judge whether recognition would exacerbate the situation in Croatia or increase the real danger of civil war in other republics. We are working towards recognition as part of a negotiated general settlement involving all Yugoslav parties. This is the only way of guaranteeing the rights of minorities.

Sensitive Technologies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he has given to the report prepared by the EC Directorate General for Customs on the status of EC member-state customs departments in regard to their adequacy to implement controls over sensitive technologies and military exports from EC member states from 1 January 1993.

Mr. Garel-Jones: No such report has been formally issued by the EC directorate general for customs.

The Commission has, however, been undertaking an informal fact-finding mission to collect information on the export control regime maintained by each member state for dual-use goods: we are closely involved in discussions with the Commission services. We will give careful consideration to the Commission's findings once these are available.

Disarmament

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the report by Thomas Schmalber for the United Nations Institute for Disarmament Research (UNIDIR/91/16) "In Pursuit of a Nuclear Test Ban treaty: A Guide to the Debate in the Conference on Disarmament, 1991."

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Yes. A copy has been ordered and will be added to the FCO departmental library in due course.

East Timor

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information Her Majesty's ambassador to the United Nations has received following the visit by the special rapporteur on arbitrary executions, of the United Nations Human Rights Commission to East Timor.

Mr. Lennox Boyd: The special rapporteur on arbitrary executions for the United Nations Human Rights Committee has not visited East Timor recently. A visit is still being considered.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 200

SESSION 1991–92

2nd December—13th December 1991

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
